THE MUSICAL TIMES

Price 4d.

JANUARY 1, 1900.

SOME OF THE GREATEST ENGLISH MUSICIANS HAVE TESTIFIED TO THE MERITS OF
THE "CHALLEN" PIANOS

Mr. FREDERIC H. COWEN
(Conductor of the London Philharmonic Society) writes—

"I have inspected the Pianofortes of Messrs. CHALLEN & SON, and have much pleasure in giving my unqualified approval of them. I consider that for purity of tone, touch, and good workmanship they will favourably compete with Pianos made by any other English firm, and superior to most of those of foreign manufacture.

(Signed) "FREDERIC H. COWEN."

CHALLEN & SON, 46, Oxford Street, London, W.
ESTABLISHED IN THE REIGN OF GEORGE III.

THE GENUINE
SCHIEDMAYER PIANOS

(Trade Mark:—SCHIEDMAYER PIANOFORTE FABRIK.)
(Vormals:—J. and P. SCHIEDMAYER.)

Madame ALBANI writes:—
"They are altogether most beautiful instruments."
Miss CLARA BUTT writes:—
"The tone is magnificent; it is delightful to sing to. I recommend every singer to have a 'Schiedmayer,' it is such a help to the voice."

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, Ltd.

SHEFFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1899.—"KING OLAF."—"Ironbeard's solo, 'All-Father, I come,' proved Mr. Charles Knowles to be a singer fully equipped for a work of this high class."—Sheffield Independent, Oct. 12, 1899.
"Mr. Charles Knowles, the Yorkshire bass, who made a successful appearance at the Leeds Musical Festival last year, has gained in experience and also in vocal power. I should call him a genuine bass and not a baritone. He gave the 'Challenge of Thor' with fine effect, and his interpretation of the death scene of the brave old pagan warrior was marked by artistic force."—Birmingham Post, Oct. 12, 1899.
"SAMSON AND DELILAH."—"Mr. Charles Knowles was excellent as Abimelech."—Liverpool Post, Oct. 13, 1899.
"GOLDEN LEGEND."—"Mr. Charles Knowles made the part of the Forester really interesting by his reading."—Birmingham Post, Oct. 14, 1899.
"KING SAUL."—"Mr. Charles Knowles gave sonorous and generally speaking well-judged effect to the words of Samuel."—London Daily Telegraph, Oct. 14, 1899.
"Mr. Charles Knowles's Samuel, apart from mannerisms which will be shed with wider experience, sang the lines allotted to the Prophet with fulness and sonority of voice that will assuredly place him among the favoured candidates for principal work at our chief Festivals."—Scotsman, Oct. 14, 1899.
"Mr. Charles Knowles imparted to the character of Samuel much of the sternness and severity associated with Elijah. His fine powerful voice was hardly suggestive of the 'aged seer,' but he was most impressive throughout, and in the scene with the people he asserted the prerogative with all the dignity of one accustomed to command. In the dialogue with Saul he was excellent, and his interpretation all through was very fine. In the scene at Endor the utterances of Samuel were solemnly delivered, and altogether Mr. Knowles advanced his already high reputation."—Birmingham Post, Oct. 14, 1899.

MR. CHARLES TREE

"GOLDEN LEGEND."—GLASGOW CHORAL, Nov. 30.—"Was an admirable exponent as Lucifer, imparting that sardonic humour and Mephistophelian sarcasm necessary for the correct exposition of the character."—Glasgow Record. "Revelled in the strenuous music, catching finely the cynical mocking spirit."—Glasgow Times. "ISRAEL IN EGYPT."—ABERDEEN CHORAL.—"More than justified the high expectations of the audience, rendering the difficult passages of 'He layeth the beams' in a fine manner, and singing splendidly in the duet."—Aberdeen Journal. "The most successful of a successful group of soloists."—Northern Advertiser. "ST. PAUL."—"Sang the title music in a manner instinct with fine feeling and dignity."—Bolton Chronicle. "Greatly impressed the audience, singing with dignity, judgment, and genuine dramatic character."—Bolton News. "SAMSON."—SHIELDS CHORAL.—"The treat of the evening was Mr. Tree, whose splendid voice was used with very fine effect all through the heavy part which falls to his lot, the more dramatic passages being delivered with great force and power, evoking the heartiest enthusiasm."—Newcastle Journal. "Was undoubtedly the favourite of the evening. His enunciation was perfect, his voice under complete control. In 'Honour and arms' he excelled himself."—Gazette. SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS.—"For purity of tone, perfect intonation, enunciation, and dramatic interpretation (leaving out Santley and Lloyd), I have not heard his equal."—Colne Times. WOLVERHAMPTON QUAVER CLUB.—"His singing was a revelation, and not likely to be soon forgotten. He enraptured his audience by not only singing the words, but by giving a true interpretation—depth of pathos, plaintive tenderness, and rage of fire and passion whenever required."—Express.

EMILE SAURET.

"THE last pupil of De Beriot." This is a distinction that can be claimed by the subject of this biographical sketch. Thus, if De Beriot was his father, musically speaking, his great-great-great-great-grandfather was Corelli! The interesting article, by Herr Paul David, on "Violin-playing," in Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," gives a pedigree of the tribe of Corelli. Here it is in skeleton form, though the names are by no means suggestive of "dry bones."

CORELLI, born 1653.
SOMIS, b. 1676.
PUGNANI, b. 1727.
VIOTTI, b. 1753.
ROBBERECHTS, b. 1797.
DE BERIOT, b. 1802.
SAURET, b. 1852.

The collateral branches include such distinguished violinists as Geminiani, Léclair, Baillot, Rode, Mori, the Hellmesbergers, Ernst, Vieuxtemps, Joachim, Auer, and Sarasate. All these eminent fiddlers, with those whose names are in the pedigree, are the sons of Corelli, the father of modern violin-playing. No one who has heard Emile Sauret play upon the instrument of his choice will deny that he is a worthy scion of the noble house of Corelli. As such he fully merits a place amongst the worthies whose careers have already been narrated in these columns.

Victor Emile Sauret was born in the heart of France. He first saw the light on May 22, 1852 — Wagner's thirty-ninth birthday — at Dun-le-Roi, Département du Cher, a town of four or five thousand inhabitants, noted for several interesting old buildings, sixteen miles South of the city of Bourges. His father, having lost his fortune, began to teach music as a means of earning a livelihood; his gifted son was to him as the apple of his eye. Emile's love of music manifested itself almost from infancy. The lively and intelligent boy received his first instruction when he was only six years old, from one Charles Rondolet. The Sauret family removed to Strasburg, and the boy entered the Conservatorium of that fortress-city, where he studied under one Schwederle. The names of both Rondolet and Schwederle are not to be found in any biographical dictionary, but they deserve to be recorded as having been the earliest teachers of a very distinguished artist.

Emile made his first appearance in public at the tender age of eight, when he played a concerto with the orchestra. Thenceforth his was the life of a travelling prodigy and virtuoso. During the next thirty years of his career he led a veritable nomadic existence. "I was like a rolling snow-ball," he says. "Always moving, moving, moving from place to place. It was an awful life for me; but my father accompanied me in all my early wanderings. We travelled through France and Italy—sometimes meeting with success, at other times failure frowned upon us.

FIRST APPEARANCE IN ENGLAND.

"'Let us try England,' said my father to me one day. We then made our way to London. It was the year of the 1862 International Exhibition, and I was only ten years old. I played in the French section of the Exhibition at some concerts given to show off the Herz pianos. I also played at—ah! me—the Alhambra, taking my 'turn' with the 'variety artistes'! And I also played at a small concert at St. James's Hall. How well I remember walking from Piccadilly to the Exhibition at Kensington." A search amongst the London newspapers has so far been futile in finding any record of the ten-year-old Emile's performances in London during 1862. The advertisements of the Alhambra make no mention of his name. He was evidently considered too obscure a "turn" to be boomed; certainly of far less importance than "The smallest Drummer in the world (three years of age)," who was then performing at the great Music Hall in Leicester Square. Thus it will be seen that the first appearance of Emile Sauret in England took place four years earlier than is often stated in biographical dictionaries—1862, not 1866.

DE BERIOT AND VIEUXTEMPS.

During a residence in Paris, Emile was fortunate in making the acquaintance of De Beriot, who became "like a father" to the boy fiddler. This veteran master of the violin gave him valuable lessons—it is hardly necessary to say without remuneration. "Papa" De Beriot was a typical "perfect gentleman"—always kindly disposed, sympathetic, and very charming. At this time Sauret benefited by a dual pupilage, as he also took some lessons from Vieuxtemps, one of De Beriot's most eminent pupils. Vieuxtemps was the very antithesis of De Beriot in regard to his bearing, being at times decidedly bearish. "But although he now and then treated me very roughly," recalls M. Sauret, "yet he was a very kind friend to me. For instance, he presented me with his bow (which I now use) after a concert at which I played." In Paris, Sauret studied harmony with M. Victorin de Joncières. He was never a pupil at the Conservatoire of Paris or Brussels, as has sometimes been stated.

A CURIOUS CRITICISM.

After incessant travelling, Emile Sauret paid a second visit to England in the year 1866. The late Alfred Mellon—who, by the way, was a remarkably good orchestral conductor—was giving a season of Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre in the autumn of that year. Vieuxtemps had been asked to accept an engagement to play, but he declined and sent his pupil, Emile Sauret, instead. An advertisement in the Musical World of Saturday, August 25, 1866, reads as follows:—

> "On the same evening [Monday, August 27] Les Frères Auguste et Emile Sauret (Pianoforte and Violin soloists) will appear for the first time in England."

The information "for the first time in England" was true in regard to Auguste Sauret, but, as has already been shown, it was not applicable to his brother, Emile. The first appearance of the boy violinist at Covent Garden was on an "Italian Night." This concert called forth a criticism from Mr. J. W. Davison—or from one of his versatile coadjutors of the "Muttonian fraternity"—penned in a style abnormally Davisonesque. Here is an extract (Musical World, September 1, 1866):—

> "Donizetti is a cross between a paroquet and a humming-bird—not a master. Nevertheless, the cavatina, 'O luce di quest' anima,' is one of the most genuine melodies in his Linda, and when gushed forth in sky-lark tones like those of Carlotta Patti (melodious sister of a melodious sister), must inevitably recall a line in Algernon Swinburne:—
> 'On May's new lip the tender April breath,'
> The audience manifestly held as much. Uproarious was the applause, and the encore an edict in thunder as it were from Jupiter Ammon. But, as Ajax defied the lightning, so Carlotta defied the thunder. It was a moment to be remembered. Donizetti, if neither an owl nor a loup-garou, is not a master. Moreover, the fantasia on airs from La Figlia del Reggimento, for violin with pianoforte accompaniment, is not Donizetti's (like some other things by Donizetti that are Donizetti's). Nevertheless, the violin part was played with ideal neatness, ideal intonation, legitimate style, and wonderful spirit by Master Emile Sauret, a real phenomenon, a fledgling whom Alfred has bagged before the season, and exhibits as a bird in full feather. Fair game!"

This critical effusion—we do not get such sportive criticism now-a-days — is signed "Dishley Peters," and was supposed to be written from "Tadcaster, Service Tree and Sable, Aug. 31."

Although young Sauret followed Wieniawski as the solo violinist at the Promenade Concerts, he at once made a great success—so much so, in fact, that Alfred Mellon engaged him for the remaining twelve weeks of the season. In another notice, a critic said: "As the engagement of M. Wieniawski has expired, Mr. Mellon may be congratulated on having found so interesting and competent, though so very young, a substitute for the impetuous Polish virtuoso." A later advertisement in the Musical World contains the announcement that "Master Emile Sauret, aged twelve years (sic), will perform from memory, and for the first time, Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin." He has played that concerto more often than any other, "between 200 and 300 times," he says. "It is now played much too quickly, especially the last movement. At so rapid a pace it is impossible for the wind instruments to get the real staccato that Mendelssohn intended. There is no tradition for this scampering, and if Mendelssohn were alive he would ——!"

BOTTESINI AND LIVERPOOL.

M. Sauret looks back upon that London engagement of 1866 as one that was attended not only with pleasure and profit, but as being of distinct importance to him in his subsequent career. For instance, he met Bottesini at Covent Garden and played duets at the concerts with that distinguished contrabassist. "A Concertante Duo, for violin and contrabasso, played by Master Emile Sauret and Signor Bottesini, created a furore, and was encored in a hurricane of applause," said the Musical World. Sauret also made the acquaintance of other artists who took a kindly interest in him; his intercourse with them was the means of widening his artistic sympathies and giving him that experience which in all departments of life is often so dearly bought. Moreover, the boy fiddler appeared as a soloist at the Liverpool Philharmonic Society's concert of September 18, 1866. In a notice (Musical World, October 6, 1866) signed "A Liverpool Porcupine" and addressed to "D. Peters, Esq.," there appeared the following:—

> "To Emile Sauret, a young musician, whose violin playing has recently attracted considerable notice, I must accord unqualified praise. For a youth of fourteen the tone and execution are marvellous: the double-stopping and harmonics, with the rapid scale passages, well deserved the enthusiastic encores which both his solos earned."

The Musical Times, ever ready to hold out a helping hand to young artists, endorsed the opinion of the prickly penman of Liverpool, in these words: "The very clever violin playing of Master Emile Sauret called forth an enthusiastic encore for each of his solos." (MUSICAL TIMES, October, 1866.)

A GREAT TRAVELLER.

M. Sauret was a great favourite with the Emperor Napoleon III. in those brilliant Tuileries days previous to the downfall of the Empire. He thinks he must have played before the French Court at least fifty times. "The Emperor was always very kind to me," he says. In 1872, fired with patriotic enthusiasm, he made a long concert tour in France, under the patronage of M. Thiers, President of the Republic, in aid of those who had been left destitute by the loss of husbands or fathers during the Franco-Prussian war. In the same year he paid his first visit, under the auspices of Max Strakosch, to the United States, where he met with that success which has attended him upon his six subsequent concert tours. During one of his American visits he had as his colleague Madame Arabella Goddard—"a fine player of the classical school," he recalls. He made his début at the Leipzig Gewandhaus in May, 1876, with Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and was very warmly received. He has often played there and is a great favourite with that very critical audience. For a time he made Leipzig his head-quarters, when he took lessons in composition from Dr. Jadassohn.

In 1879, upon his marriage with Fräulein Emmy Hotter, of Düsseldorf, M. Sauret took up his abode in Berlin, where he held the professorship of the violin at Stern's Academy of Music. But he was by no means a fixture in the German capital. The old love—his second nature, in fact—ever burned within him. He travelled constantly. It is difficult to say where Sauret has not fiddled—France, Holland, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Russia, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, the United States, and England, now the home of his adoption.

PROFESSORSHIP AND DISTINCTIONS.

Upon the death of Prosper Sainton, October 17, 1890, M. Sauret, at the request of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, accepted the appointment of principal professor of the violin at the Royal Academy of Music. Amongst his most distinguished pupils there have been Miss Ethel Barns, Miss Edith Byford, Miss Margery Hayward, Miss Nettie Atkinson, Mr. Aldo Antoinetti, Mr. Cathie, and Mr. Gerald Walenn.

M. Sauret is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music and a Member of the Philharmonic Society and of the Royal Academy of Music in Sweden. He holds the following foreign distinctions:—

Orden der Wendischen Krone (Mecklenburg), Orden vom Zähringer Löwen (Baden). Chevalier I^ere^ Classe of each of the following Orders:—Danebrog (Danish), Wasa (Swedish), Charles III. (Spanish), Christus (Portuguese), La Croix rouge (Russian).

COMPOSER AND PERFORMER.

As a composer M. Sauret is favourably known. He very naturally writes for the instrument upon which he is so brilliant a performer. His compositions have already reached to Opus 60. Amongst his chief works may be mentioned the Violin Concerto in D minor (Op. 26); "Gradus ad Parnassum du Violiniste" and "Grandes études artistiques," covering almost every possible difficulty in violin technique; a Ballade, a Legende, and a Serenade—all for violin and orchestra; "Scènes Villageoises," a charming set of pieces, dedicated to his friend and pupil Frederik Frederiksen; and the eight attractive pieces forming his Op. 40 and 41—starting with a quaint "Chanson d'autrefois" and terminating with an irresistible "Valse de concert." His transcriptions for the violin from Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Wagner, &c., are characterised by their efficacy and adaptability to the instrument.

As a violinist M. Sauret is well known in innumerable concert-rooms. His playing is characterised by a refinement and phrasing charm which give genuine pleasure to the listener. His répertoire is enormous. It consists of no less than seventy concertos, in addition to countless pieces of smaller dimensions, and, of course, a large number of quartets, trios, &c.—for, be it noted, M. Sauret is an excellent interpreter of chamber music. An interesting criticism upon his playing from the Hamburgische Musik-Zeitung, by a competent critic, although written twelve years ago, may well be quoted:—

> "Sauret, one of the most interesting of our young violinists, extracts from his instrument a tone full of intense feeling; its living force, his own heart-beats, so to speak, shows itself in a peculiarly affecting vibrato, which lends a bewitching charm to his cantabile playing. He enters the fray with a certain excitation, and compels his hearers to share in the same. There is something demoniacal about his playing; his audience must follow him, must feel, laugh, weep, jest, or be sad with him. In the powerful spell which he casts over his audience, he is—perhaps—the only violinist who approaches Paganini.
> "Sauret's bravura in surmounting any and every conceivable difficulty is fabulous, His double-stopping in 3rds, 6ths, 8ths 10ths, and artificial harmonics is especially astounding."

CAMARADERIE.

It is hardly necessary to say that M. Sauret has known all the most distinguished musicians of his time. Moreover, he can claim to have been friendly with all of them—not in the mere conventional sense of the term, but in the bonds of mutual admiration, love, and sympathy. Here are the names of those forming the camaraderie of Emile Sauret: Liszt, Rubinstein, Hans von Bülow, Brahms, Tschaïkowsky, Wagner, Rossini, Grieg, Saint-Saëns, Ferdinand Hiller, Max Bruch, F. Gernsheim, Eugene d'Albert, Moszkowski, Niels W. Gade, Svendsen, Xaver Scharwenka, Jadassohn, Karl Klindworth, Leschetitzky, Emil Sjögren, Edouard Schütt, Norman, and David Popper.

Amongst violinists he recalls pleasant intercourse with Wieniawski, Sivori, Bazzini, Ernst, Alard, Léonard, Dancla, Laub, Helmesberger, Ferdinand David, and Sarasate, who has often played duets with him in his house in London. "I can call them all my friends," M. Sauret remarks as he recalls the names of great musicians he has known.

Speaking of Liszt, he says: "Ah! that was a great man. We gave two concerts together, and he was very good to me." Two interesting extracts from Liszt's letters (Miss Constance Bache's excellent translation), having reference to Sauret, may be quoted. The first is to Liszt's pupil, Vera Timanoff, the distinguished Russian pianist. Liszt writes, in the summer of 1879:—

> "A hearty welcome to you, Illustrissima and pray tell M. Sauret that I shall be delighted to make closer acquaintance with him. I greatly admired his superb talent in Vienna.—You know my rule, never to bother any one, and least of all artists, but if

M. Sauret should feel inclined to play something at the Hofgärtnerei this morning, it would give me great pleasure.

"In any case I invite him to come (at eleven) with you, and I shall request you to fulfil your promise of captivating us by your performance (not by dancing, but by your superior fingering) of Rubinstein's Ballet, 'Feramors.'

"Yours affectionately,
"F. Liszt."

The next extract is from an interesting letter, dated "Weimar, April 29, 1884, to M. Camille Saint-Saëns," which concludes thus :—

"Very much vexed to be unable to make a place for one of your grand works—such as your superb Mass, or some Poëme Symphonique—in the programme of our next Tonkünstler-Versammlung, at Weimar, from the 23rd to the 28th May. Sauret is going to play your third Concerto, and I will send you this overloaded programme. If you came to hear it, it would be a very great pleasure to

"Your admiringly and cordially attached
"F. Liszt."

HANS VON BÜLOW. BRAHMS.

Here is a characteristic story of the redoubtable Hans von Bülow, who could not bear to be contradicted. "One day," says M. Sauret, "he placed his hand upon a book lying on the table, saying, 'This is not a book.' 'No, it's a fish,' I replied. Whereupon Bülow laughed heartily at being caught in that way." It is not everyone who would be so diplomatically tactful on the spur of the moment when dealing with such a manifest violation of the truth; but Sauret brought Bülow to book, so to speak; he knew his man, who well merited being designated, as he often was so called, "a queer fish."

Sauret made music in public with Brahms in Holland and in Vienna. Once they met at Wiesbaden, where they received Dvorák's first violin concerto, then only in manuscript. "Shall we try this concerto?" said Brahms to Sauret. "That's not so bad," was the verdict of Brahms upon the concerto of Dvorák. Another intimate was Rubinstein: "A man of noble character, one who remained steadfast. He was always ready to play with and to help me whenever I needed his aid."

PERSONALIA.

It is interesting to hear M. Sauret's views upon various matters. First, he is loud in his praise of the freedom attendant upon residing in England. "Of course, the climate is not so beautiful as that of Italy," he says; "but there is no country where I should like to live in preference to England. I was urged to settle in Russia. But ah! no. The system of State espionage there, even amongst female domestic servants in private households, is too shocking." Asked as to the actual cause of Tschäikowsky's death (whom M. Sauret knew well, as is proved by the photograph which he has kindly allowed us to reproduce in fac-simile), he replies: "Ah! poor Tschäikowsky's death was a mystery—a mystery which I fear will never be cleared up. No, he certainly did not die of cholera."

M. Sauret speaks of the appreciation with which English audiences listen to music, not only in London, but in such places as Edinburgh, Birmingham, and other provincial centres, where he frequently plays solos or leads in chamber music. Many will agree with him in his opinion that concerts in England are far too long. It is impossible for people to digest so much music when their tympanic nerves are put to such a severe strain by these sound-wave abnormalities. He is decidedly of opinion that young people are in far too great a hurry to appear in public.

Music does not absorb all M. Sauret's interests. He is very fond of books, and, like Brahms, especially books of travel. A glance at his well-filled bookcases shows the wide range of his reading. He is not a little proud to be the possessor of a first complete edition of Voltaire, published, for obvious reasons, outside France. Another interesting treasure is a very early German translation of Sir Walter Scott's works, in tiny volumes. His two chief violins are valuable specimens of the work of Stradivari and Giuseppe Guarneri; he always takes both these precious fiddles with him on his various tours.

AN APPRECIATION BY TWO PUPILS.

As a coda to this sketch of M. Sauret's career, we are glad to be able to furnish an interesting side-light upon him as a teacher, jointly contributed by two of his pupils at the Royal Academy of Music, Miss Edith Byford and Miss Nettie Atkinson.

"We cannot in any way do justice to Mr. Sauret's qualities as a musician. Not only has he one of the largest répertoires of any violinist, but he is also able to play all the accompaniments to the most difficult concertos by heart! Having played all the modern concertos under the direction of their several composers, Mr. Sauret's teaching of them is of exceptional value.

"He will teach a beginner of talent with as much care and interest as he takes with his most advanced pupils, who have already made a name for themselves. Although such a prolific composer, he is, in our experience, the only teacher who never suggests that his pupils should learn his own compositions. He is, of course, able to assist his pupils to obtain work, and he never loses an opportunity of helping on the deserving ones.

"One of the great features of the Summer Term at the Royal Academy of Music is the birthday party on May 22, when his pupils are invited to spend the afternoon at Mr. Sauret's charming house in Loudoun Road, St. John's Wood, and which they can never be induced to leave until their host and teacher gives them the treat of the afternoon by playing only as he can. We think that no professor can have more thoroughly gained the respect and affection of his pupils."

CLASS SINGING

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS

By W. G. McNaught.

By far the greater part of the elementary musical education of the people in this country is carried on in the form of singing classes. In some forty thousand schools and in thousands of places connected with places of worship and in educational institutes lessons on musical matters are given week by week to millions of pupils of all ages. A consideration of the aims and management of classes thus taught is obviously an important one. In responding to the invitation to record in The Musical Times some reflections prompted by my own experience as a class singing teacher—I used to teach nearly 3,000 pupils in about forty classes every week—I do so in the hope that they may be of some service to such of the great army of teachers, mostly amateurs in musical matters, who may be groping for ways and means as I used to grope myself. To experts in class singing teaching, and fortunately there are a great number in the country, I say nothing and merely offer my reflections for comparison. I shall confine myself to a discussion of class singing in schools, because most of the class tuition is given in these quarters.

The management of a school singing class depends greatly upon its constitution and the aims of its promoters. The amount and character of the vocal training possible in different schools varies considerably. If a systematic course is to be given and made possible by the circumstances under which the class is to be taught, it is comparatively easy for a competent teacher to devise practicable plans; but often, and probably most frequently in middle-class schools for girls, it is the case that the apparent exigencies of other school work, and especially of examinations in which music does not count, render such a course impossible. As a rule, less than an hour a week can be devoted to the subject. The class to be taught often consists of pupils of all ages between eight and fifteen. There is a great difference in their musical capacities: some can hardly imitate a sound and are inconveniently eager to try and sing everything; others can do everything they are asked to do; and many are flabbily impassive. After devising every available means of keeping the game alive and interesting the class, and contriving to make some slight progress in teaching the elements of sight-singing and voice production, the teacher is blandly requested to get up a cantata or "some part-singing" for an entertainment to be given shortly. With as much affability as an internal gloom will permit he consents, and wonders whether the tribute paid to his ingenuity and the sudden importance ascribed to his subject are wholly deserved. The planned course is abandoned, and probably never again attempted, for the educational interest has evaporated.

BOYS' CLASSES.

Classes of boys only, and especially those in schools which prepare for the public schools, are often the most exhilarating and trouble-dispelling a man can be privileged to teach. To drink at the fresh springs of youth you must first get to their hearts, and then you may chaff them and tease them in a good-humoured way, and throw in a dash of seriousness at the right psychologic moment and thereby gain moral control. In fact, it may be said you can do everything with young boys except sit upon them, as the Duke of Wellington remarked of bayonets.

QUALIFICATIONS OF TEACHERS.

In view of the fact that most of the class singing teaching has to be undertaken by teachers who are not specialists or experts in music, it would be vain to insist upon high qualifications for the post. Given a fair voice well in tune, a trained ear, taste for good music and a feeling for expression, ability to sing moderately difficult music at sight, and a thorough knowledge of notation, much good, sound work can be accomplished. But to these acquirements it is absolutely necessary to add enthusiasm for the work, pleasure in teaching, a power of teaching methodically, and skill in class management. I have watched all sorts of teachers at their work. There is the Squeers type ("if a boy moves I'll take the skin off his back"); there is the cold and dignified teacher; there is the irritable teacher who is continually distracting himself and the class by petty fault-finding; there is the teacher who assures the pupils that they are the most absolute duffers he has ever had and who then proceeds to give a lesson which indirectly assumes that the class is a highly intellectual one. These are types of the wrong sort. Of the right sort I have watched a patient, firm, and cheerful young woman, with only very moderate musical acquirements, give a clear, methodic abiding lesson to a class of one hundred children, whom throughout she fascinated and moulded at her will. A teacher should be an atmosphere enveloping the whole class. I would say to any budding teacher, if you do not like class teaching, do not, if you can help it, inflict misery on yourself and more upon your unhappy pupils; do not disparage a good thing by continuing to try to teach it, but give it all up and try some other field of work.

AIMS OF A CLASS.

If a school class is designed to provide recreation and there is no desire or means to teach more than a smattering of musical knowledge, not much method can be looked for. Care may be taken of the voice, good sterling songs may be freely sung by ear and stored in the memory, the singing may be in tune, the words well enunciated, and intense enjoyment may be experienced all round. Such a class with such a result should not be despised. At least it may create a pleasant association with music and at best may be a stepping-stone to a more intelligent study of the subject. It has been driven into me that in many schools nothing better than this sort of class is possible, and I have accepted the situation frankly and tried to make the most of it. Of course, it is infinitely better if sight-singing can be systematically dealt with. No experienced teacher will allow that such teaching is necessarily dry and repellent. Children can be made to take the keenest interest in exercises that have no merit as music, but which drive home a musical fact. The most perfectly graded course ever written will be deadly dull, and, therefore, ineffective, unless it is illuminated by the way in which it is presented and managed by the teacher. What a course of sight-singing demands, and what it often cannot get, is regular, frequent, and uninterrupted lessons. Where the secondary schools are so organised as to admit of this, there is no real difficulty in getting satisfactory results if the teaching is competent. Where the consecutiveness of lessons is interrupted because pupils are temporarily withdrawn "to prepare for the Cambridge" or some other non-musical examination, or where continual demands are made for pieces for show purposes, the teaching is necessarily a failure, and the subject is denounced as impracticable for such schools. In the well organised elementary schools working on the standard system and with a definite code to guide them, much better results are, as a rule, secured.

CLASSIFICATION.

In a large secondary school in which all or nearly all the children are taught class singing the problem of classification is a vital one. If the singing class teacher is to have a set of graded classes based more upon capability than upon age, the whole of the other classes in the school may be thrown out of gear. Schools in which there is only a morning attendance feel this difficulty acutely, and fight shy of the singing class teacher, and perhaps regard him as rather a nuisance. The earnest teacher who can get his classification according to attainment, must be considered as specially fortunate. If, on the other hand, he is required in such a school to teach all the juniors in one class and all the seniors in another, or worse, juniors and seniors together, he most probably finds side by side pupils of all grades of skill. So progress seems impossible. But there is a loop-hole, and that is inner classification of the class.

The plan depends for its success upon class management, a matter dealt with later under its own head. Before going farther it may be as well to consider the question, "What is the aim of class teaching?" I have always worked for the individual rather than the class as a whole. That is to say, by continually hammering at the individual I have hoped to improve the class, instead of always teaching the class as a whole in the hope of reaching the individual. Ways of stimulating the individual are described later on. But as to inner classification, I hope I may be allowed to quote from an article I wrote on the point in the School Music Review for September, 1896:—

SORTING PUPILS IN SCHOOL SINGING CLASSES.

School singing class teachers can rarely teach under anything like ideal conditions. They are allowed probably one hour a week, and all the pupils must learn simultaneously. The girl of sixteen, who has been in the class for years, has to be taught side by side with the girl of ten just beginning. A regular systematic course at any period seems practically impossible, and the teacher, in despair, often resigns himself to the uneducational plan of getting up pieces. It is the line of least resistance. But is there no escape from this uninspiring and, to the conscientious teacher, humiliating result? I venture to suggest that there is a middle course more or less practicable even in the worst circumstanced classes. In mixed classes of the kind under consideration the old stagers naturally feel no interest in the elementary lessons, and the new-comers feel as little interest in more advanced lessons they cannot follow or understand. The general interest is, therefore, demoralised, and attention is deprived of motive. Yet it is safe to assume that at least a majority of the pupils have some glimmer of desire to learn, some curiosity on the subject; and, above all, some pride in measuring themselves with others, and some spirit of emulation. It is the teacher's business to make the most of the human nature in his class. In the endeavour to do this I have for a long time adopted a plan of classification of pupils, by which to a great extent the difficulty of teaching large mixed classes has been successfully met. I first settle a number of closely graduated steps, and identify them by a letter of the alphabet. These steps form a definite ladder for the pupils to climb. Each pupil knows what little step he or she is to take next. This definite aim for a possible advance is a powerful incentive when properly managed. In fact, so eager do young children generally become to get on a stage that restraints are often necessary to calm their excitement. Here is one scheme of lettering that I have adopted in a school class into which about sixty children from eight to thirteen or fourteen years of age are draughted.

SECTION.

A. All new-comers. All who cannot imitate or sing a little alone.
B. Must sing a very easy little scrap of the scale as called for by sol-fa names.
C. Ear exercise. Very easy—the order in which the notes composing the tonic triad are sung or played.
D. Easy rhythmic exercise on a monotone.
E. Follow pointing on a modulator (staff or tonic sol-fa, according to method used).
F. More difficult monotone time exercise.

And so on as called for.

The time absorbed in lettering may seem a serious obstacle; but it does not turn out to be so. The average time taken is about twelve seconds. I have often tested fifty in ten minutes. You must do something in your time. Examination of this kind is not a waste of time; it is unmistakably an excellent employment of time, and it is intensely interesting and educative to the class.

The teaching.—Give short, bright, incisive lessons to two or three sections grouped. The others must, of course, meantime either be silent or, if a higher section, be called upon to pattern (often a proud moment) and if a lower section be strongly urged to learn by listening.

Advantages.—Besides the advantages already enumerated, the plan permits a teacher to easily select his best pupils or eliminate his worst when he wishes to prepare good music. The best are then guides to the others, and, unhampered by the hangers-on, they work more willingly.

Here are the results in two classes at the end of a term:—

A	B	C	D	E	F	G	H	I	J	K	L	M
6	2	0	5	6	7	7	8	5	5	5	4	3	=63
4	3	0	0	0	6	8	5	9	8	7	6	6	=62

The doses can be strengthened according to circumstances. I daresay other teachers have adopted other and better plans of meeting this special difficulty.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS.

XIII.—Of Prime Donne and Another.

The "forties" had not quite run their course when I came to London, a first time, as a visitor to the lions of the metropolis. Though a raw lad, I had plenty of enthusiasm for music, and the king of all the lions, in my estimation, was the opera. What more natural? I had never seen a performance on the lyric stage. Imagine, therefore, the eagerness with which I hurried, on the very evening of my arrival, to the gallery door of Her Majesty's Theatre, not troubling to discover the opera to be performed or the artists who were to play in it. Lyric dramas and their exponents were all pretty much alike to me, but, on reading the bills at the theatre entrances, I felt some satisfaction in that I was to hear "La Sonnambula." Bellini's melodies were everywhere at that time. There was hardly a tenor who did not essay to languish with Elvino; scarcely a soprano whose repertory failed to contain an extract from the lyric woes of Amina. I thought myself in luck, therefore; but the opera did not represent all my good fortune. The bills promised a hearing of Madame Sontag, the great German artist, concerning whom the thousand tongues of Rumour had for some time been wagging loudly enough to arrest attention even in the heart of the country. In London, Henrietta Sontag was no stranger to veteran opera-goers, though since her previous appearances, in 1828, a generation had grown up which knew her not. On the Continent she had made a name before that date. Weber's "Euryanthe" was written for her, and, according to Henry Chorley, Beethoven chose her as his leading soloist in the great Mass. She was the Fairy Princess of Young Germany. One of her shoes, which Young Germany had stolen, was used as a drinking cup. Even comparatively sedate London went half mad about Sontag's beauty and marvellous singing. Again to quote Chorley: "The Sunday papers told of Dukes dying for her; of Marquises only waiting to lay their coronets at her feet; Royalty itself was said to have mingled in this dance. Colours and racehorses were called by her name, and (not the least significant tribute to her fascinations) a fashionable publisher tickled the Town's curiosity by announcing as forthcoming, 'Travelling Sketches, by Mdlle. Sontag.'" The object of all this adulation did not proclaim on the house-tops, for the benefit of amorous Dukes and Marquises, that her hand was pledged to a noble but far from wealthy Italian diplomat, Count Rossi. That secret she kept in her heart till, having made money enough, she suddenly retired from the stage, accepted a patent of nobility from the King of Prussia, and married the man of her choice as his equal.

Twenty years passed over the Countess Rossi's fair head—twenty years of high rank, as the wife of an ambassador, and of still more marked distinction, since the public did not forget Henrietta Sontag, or lose any opportunity of demonstrating that they carried the memory of the bright and beautiful singer in their hearts.

The revolutionary year, 1848, came with its disasters, and Count Rossi was not one of the least sufferers. So serious were his financial losses that the brave wife made up her mind to resume her profession. She had dowered herself by hard work; why should she not again build up the fortunes of her household? So it became known to all whom it might concern that the public favourite of 1828, and after, was again available. True, she had reached the age of forty-three, but Sontag had preserved her beauty in a marvellous degree, and, in no less measure, her vocal powers also. Chorley tells us: "She had never laid aside the care and culture of her delicious voice during her episode of ante-chamber work and monotonous Court splendour. She sang in public, as an amateur, once or twice, for charitable purposes. In private noble circles she was frequently to be heard." Hence, there was nothing in her appearance or her powers to make return to the stage a risky adventure, and at least one stage—that of Her Majesty's Theatre—was willing and eager to receive her. Jenny Lind, the stay of Lumley's fortunes, had abandoned opera, and later attractions had poorly supplied her place. The enterprise was marching to ruin, and the manager knew it. Imagine how gladly he received the news of Sontag's fortunate resolution, and how promptly he came to terms with her. His only risk in the matter was a possibility that the public, scarcely recovered from the Lind fever, would make unfavourable comparisons, not only between the Swedish Nightingale and her sister of Germany, but

We have bid them all good-bye! They have gone to do and die,
And sailed away to southward o'er the foam.
Obedient to the call, they are fighting for us all
While we are keeping Christmas here at home.
Chorus.—So cheer, boys, cheer, that all the world may hear,
For our soldiers and sailor-lads afar,
May victory attend them, and God Himself defend them
And bring them back in triumph from the war!

For them the Christmas bells will be drowned in bursting shells
And the sputter of the Maxim on the height,
And lying on the plain will be men in mortal pain,
While we are keeping Christmas here to-night.
Chorus.—So cheer, boys, &c.

O Brothers of our Race who have gone to take your place
To help our Queen and Country in the fight,
We can ne'er repay the debt, but Britons won't forget
To drink your health at Christmas here to-night.
Chorus.—So cheer, boys, &c.

When the long sad list is read of the wounded and the dead,
And you pity all the weary hearts that ache,
Go, help the child and wife of the hero in the strife
Who is fighting hard at Christmas for your sake.

also between the Sontags of 1828 and 1849. However, all went well. A contemporary journalist wrote: "No magic could restore to her voice an upper note or two which Time had taken . . . but she was greeted, as she deserved to be, as a beloved old friend come home again, in the late summer days."

This was the artist whom a lucky chance placed among my recollections — my first prima donna, heard in the freshness of youth and youthful enthusiasm; so heard that no phonographic "record" is clearer than my memory of her Amina after the lapse of fifty years. I see her now as, amid a storm of applause, she made her entry in the character of the innocent maiden whose simple fortunes so interested the public till simplicity and artlessness passed out of fashion. Her age was unknown to me, but I imagined Sontag as only a few years older than myself, so successful had been conservation of face and figure plus the art of the stage dresser. But that which struck my unsophisticated ears much more than did the artist's appearance my equally ingenuous eyes was the beauty and charm of her singing. The part of Amina suited her. She was in no special sense a dramatic artist. Her best work was done in comparatively passive characters. She would have excelled as Elsa and have been a matchless Eva. Sontag's great strength lay in personal charm, and the perfect management of a delightful voice. In these respects she held her own against the public memory of Lind, some connoisseurs, indeed, contending that in certain parts, that of Maria in "La Figlia," for example, she took honours above the Swedish songstress. Well, as I have said, it was her singing that opened to me a new world of delight. I was of course thrilled when the frail plank over which the sleep-walker passed cracked in the middle, but much more moved by the plaintive song to the flowers and the sparkling rain of glad notes which followed the rustic girl's happy awaking. Let me add that of all the other artists who took part in "La Sonnambula" I remember not one, nor have I troubled to discover them. For me Sontag was then, and in memory still is, all in all.

Like all the world and his wife, I came to London in the year of the Great Exhibition (1851), and, more eagerly than ever, rushed to the "old house in the Haymarket." They were playing "Fidelio" that night.

Of Sims Reeves, the Florestan of the occasion, I knew nothing, or next to nothing, although he had made his début at Her Majesty's three years before; that is to say, on May 20, 1848. The first appearance of the "young tenor," as the newspapers then called him, was in "Linda di Chamouni"; he playing Carlo to the Linda of Madame Tadolini. It is not surprising to us now that Reeves gained a popular success. The really astonishing circumstance was that he won a place on the Italian stage at all, for prejudice against native artists was strong in aristocratic circles, which alone, then as now, had weight with managers, while the foreign singers agreed in nothing so much as a desire to keep their preserve to themselves. For some time before, however, letters had appeared in the public prints asking why the English tenor, whose début at Drury Lane had made an impression, was not called to one of the fashionable houses. Because of this, and, no doubt, through other influences as well, Reeves and Lumley came together. The part of Donizetti's Carlo is not one of first-class importance, but the English débutant gained plenty of honours in it. The Times declared him "really a valuable acquisition to the theatre"; the Morning Chronicle hailed him as "signally successful"; the Daily News praised the beauty of his voice and the warmth of his expression. So with other journals, and everything promised brilliantly for "Signor Reeves." But fair mornings are often clouded over. On May 24 Lumley issued the following announcement: "Mr. Reeves having refused to sustain his part in 'Linda di Chamouni,' the indulgence of subscribers and the public is respectfully entreated in favour of Signor Gardoni, who, at the shortest notice, has, to prevent disappointment, most obligingly undertaken the part." The recalcitrant singer urged, in reply, that he had stipulated for the part of Edgardo in "Lucia," and that the manager had given it to someone else. Hence the breach of relations and the brevity of the tenor's stay on the Haymarket stage at that time. In 1851, as already mentioned, manager and artist came together again.

"Fidelio," which impresarii either cannot or will not play now-a-days, was the most successful feature of Lumley's Great Exhibition season. According to Chorley, its good fortune was certainly not due to Cruvelli. Her singing he describes as "crude," and goes on to explain that "Fidelio," however symphonically superb it be, is "one in which there is no judging of a vocalist's qualities; and, accordingly, Mdlle. Cruvelli's powerful and extensive voice suited the music." This is equivalent to throwing doubt upon Cruvelli's vocal qualities, but it must be remembered that Chorley had leanings towards the rival house. On the other hand, the mordant critic praised Sims Reeves highly, saying: "He drew out from the vocal music and finished all in it that is tuneable and lovely, without any sacrifice of declamation or dramatic force, without being overborne by the orchestra, without constraining the latter to any complaisance for the singers. But even then Mr. Sims Reeves was far beneath the point which he has since reached, by care and thought, and real artistic feeling." Chorley's remarks upon the English tenor's singing are in precise accord with my remembrance. The full, rich, and ringing tones of the artist in the dungeon air and the subsequent duet with Leonora rank among the musical sensations recollection of which will never pass away. Of acting I was then little entitled to judge, but it seems to have made small impression. I thought it stiff, constrained and heavy; but the testimony of a mere tyro is of slight value, though, curiously enough, I brought away from my last experience of Mr. Reeves as an actor precisely the same feeling. The glorious voice and artistic style, however, were enough for all purposes of enjoyment, and equally sufficient for an undying memory.

My second operatic prima donna—the Fidelio of the occasion—stands out as well defined as a hill-top tree with the moon behind it. She was Sophie Cruvelli, who subsequently added to the romance of a very romantic period of opera in England by leaving her manager in the lurch and running away to parts unknown. Sophie made her début here in February, 1848—the month, by the way, which saw Louis Philippe making tracks toward, instead of from, London. On her first night she played Elvira ("Ernani") in such a manner as to capture all the critics—all those, at least, whose record I have consulted. An excellent description of the lady appeared at the time in The Illustrated London News:—

"This prima donna, a pupil of the Conservatoire, is eighteen years of age. Her countenance is pleasing and expressive; her form, of the middle height, is well-moulded and handsome; her manner dramatic, and her style energetic. Her voice is remarkably powerful; her tones youthful and bell-like, and if it be found, when her powers are fully tried, that she possesses the complete management of her vocal resources, she will be one of the greatest acquisitions the theatre has ever made."

The prophecy in the last sentence had the exceptional good fortune of proving true. Though Jenny Lind was a member of the same company, Cruvelli held her own even against that supreme attraction. But she flitted, at the instigation of Cupid, or some other misleading power, and poor Lumley was doomed to lose both his great stars, one drawing back into the drab-coloured obscurity of the concert-room; the other shooting madly from its sphere, like the luminaries which Oberon saw.

But shooting stars often leave a trail of light behind them, and the Cruvelli light is still shining in my memory. I can recall the entire performance of the prima donna in the dungeon scene not less easily than I can bring to mind my own ecstatic sensations as that enthralling part of the drama proceeded. Her striking attitudes and gestures, her free and graceful movements, the spirit thrown into her ultimate defiance of Pizarro, and her impassioned delivery of the music, became a possession which will remain with me to the end. You may say that probably a very delightful operatic experience unhinged my judgment and made me assume perfection where may have been flaws. I reply that judgment I had none. I received impressions, and as they are in harmony with those of the critics of the time, I see reason to abide by them. For the critics, you know, must be right when they all agree.

ROSSINI IN ENGLAND.

The visits to our shores of great composers have furnished many an interesting page to musical literature. Let us recall the names of some such visitants—Mozart, Haydn, Spohr, Weber, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Wagner. One more name must, however, be added to the list—that of Gioachino Antonio Rossini. Comparatively little is known of the incidents attendant upon the sojourn of Rossini in London. The following is therefore offered as a contribution to this hiatus in the biography of the Swan of Pesaro. Moreover, it may not be without interest as affording a glimpse or two into the musical times of the Metropolis in the first quarter of the century.

Rossini was very nearly thirty-two when he visited London. He had already composed some thirty or more operas, including his famous "Il Barbiere." He was accompanied hither by his wife, Signora Colbran-Rossini, a lady seven years his senior, whom he had married in 1822. The Rossini couple were engaged by Benelli, manager of the King's Theatre; she to sing, he to compose an opera, for which he was to receive the sum of £240, an amount at that time unprecedented. Both, however, failed to make operatic successes. Rossini did not produce his promised opera ("Figlia dell' aria"), of which, by the way, the music of the first act unaccountably vanished and has never since been heard of. His caro sposa, then in her fortieth year, was passée and gave little satisfaction. But, in other respects, as we shall see, the visit of the Rossinis to England was an unqualified triumph.

According to the newspapers of the day, Signor and Signora Rossini arrived in London on December 13, 1823. Either then or subsequently they lodged at 90, Regent Street, then called "90, Quadrant," being the curved portion of the famous thoroughfare, at that time about three or four years old. The Quadrant was originally a covered thoroughfare in regard to its side-walks, to use an Americanism, but in 1848 the colonnades were removed. In the company of a magnificent macaw Rossini and his wife used to sit on the leads of the colonnade, from which elevation they could look down upon the animated thoroughfare. The appearance of the Maestro is thus described: "He is scarcely of the middle height, lusty, and, upon the whole, with rather a heavy air. He certainly looks more like a sturdy beef-eating Englishman than a sensitive fiery-spirited native of the soft climate of Italy. His countenance when at rest is intelligent yet serious, but bears no mark of the animation which pervades and, indeed, forms the principal feature of his compositions."

ROSSINI AND KING GEORGE IV.

Rossini had hardly settled down in his new quarters before he was "commanded," through the medium of Count Lieven, the Russian Ambassador, to appear before King George IV. At that time "the First Gentleman in Europe" was holding High Court (if not "high jinks") at the Pavilion, Brighton. Thither the composer of "Il Barbiere" repaired and was duly presented to his Majesty on December 29, 1823. The Morning Post of the following New Year's Day furnishes a graphic account of the king's Pavilionic-harmonic function. Here is an extract, headed,

THE KING'S GRAND MUSIC PARTY.

"On Monday night his Majesty had a grand concert at the Pavilion, to which the celebrated composer, Rossini, had an invitation. He was introduced into the Royal presence by Count Lieven, the Russian Ambassador, and was received by our August Monarch in a manner that must have been highly gratifying to his feelings. His Majesty, with that discrimination and fine taste which so eminently characterise all his actions, in introducing Rossini into the music-room, and to the principal professional gentlemen there, commanded his inimitable band to play the overture to the opera of La Gazza Ladra, and also the beautiful concerted piece Buona Sera, from his opera, Il Barbiere di Siviglia. Both these pieces were performed in such a stile of superior excellence as to obtain the most unqualified approbation of the composer, who expressed to his Majesty his astonishment that such powerful effects could have been produced by wind instruments alone. At the conclusion, he went to Mr. C. Kramer, the Conductor and Master of the Royal Band, and bestowed upon him the highest enconiums for the masterly manner in which he arranged his music, and declared that he never on any occasion felt more gratified. Rossini was seated at the pianoforte, and accompanied himself in two songs, one of which, an Aria Buffa, he gave with true comic spirit and humour; the other, Desdemona's beautiful Romance, from his own Othello, he sang most divinely, with exquisite pathos and expression of voice and countenance: his voice is a good clear tenor. His Majesty honoured him several times with marks of his Royal approbation."

The King's Band, it will be observed, then consisted entirely of wind-instrument players. It may be interesting to add that "old John" Cramer and "Bob" Lindley played concertos upon their respective instruments; that Thomas Attwood presided at the organ; that the Hallelujah Chorus and the Coronation Anthem were sung by the "Royal Choristers," under the direction of Mr. William Hawes; and, still more interesting, that one of the said "Royal Choristers" on that Royal-Rossini occasion was Master Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

A contemporary account furnishes some information in regard to Rossini's "manners" and habiliments at Court in the following terms, of which the most curious is the reference to the twirling of his round hat on his finger. Was this revolutionary proceeding in accordance with the Monarchical etiquette of that day?

"Rossini shared the general gaze alternately with a fair German of about sixteen, whose beauty is the subject of general admiration. Nothing can exceed the free and easy manner in which the notable Composer demeans himself in the presence of Royalty. On the first night of his appearance at Court he was dressed in a plain suit of black, and twirled his round hat on his finger before the King with all imaginable self-complacency. It was observed, that in addressing the Sovereign, the word 'Majesty' was very rarely in his mouth, and his tone towards all the other high personages was that of perfect equality."

ROSSINI AT THE OPERA.

Rossini made his first public appearance at the King's Theatre, on January 24, 1824, when he "conducted" his opera "Zelmira," in which his wife sustained the title-rôle. Madame Vestris sang the part of Emma, and Signor Garcia, father of the veteran Manuel Garcia, that of Ilo. Two contemporary accounts supply information in regard to the orchestra and the manner of Rossini's conducting, which was evidently batonless.

"The orchestra is much improved by placing the Maestro, who presides at the piano-forte, in the centre."

"As soon as the orchestra began to assemble, Rossini quietly made his appearance amongst the other musicians, and made his way to the pianoforte. He was instantly recognised and greeted with loud and continued applause. He bowed to the audience, and immediately sat down to the instrument and prepared his copy. In his manner there was a peculiar modesty and retiringness which formed an extreme contrast to the reports which have been circulated as to his vanity and confidence."

At the conclusion of the performance Madame Vestris sang "God save the King." Rossini, who was at the pianoforte, was greatly overcome by the waving of ladies' handkerchiefs and other manifestations of hero worship. "He seemed not only affected, but greatly embarrassed by this excess of favour, and, after bowing two or three times, retreated with much more haste than he had made his appearance."

"Zelmira" was not, however, a success. Lord Mount-Edgcumbe says that it "was not liked. It contains, as I was told, some of his noisiest pieces, of which I subsequently heard one at a concert; it was stunning. [!] Rossini himself was so much engaged in pleasures and convivial meetings, as well as singing with great profit in private, that he neglected his engagement with the theatre, and did not complete the opera he was to have composed. He paid forfeit for his failure; but nevertheless he and his wife realised a large sum before they left the country."

SOCIETY MUSIC-MAKINGS.

This naturally leads to an important feature in the visit of the Rossinis to London—those Society functions which he and his wife attended in their professional capacity.

"Signor Rossini presided at the pianoforte," and "Madame Rossini took the lead in song," are items of information that are to be frequently found in one of the leading newspapers of the day. There can be no question that Rossini was the darling of Society during the London season of 1824, but he made Society pay for its darling-worship. In regard to his terms, we are told that "Rossini, for his own services and those of Signora Colbran-Rossini, at a private party, charges fifty guineas per night, which, rating the lady at the highest customary payment, leaves the Signor twenty-five guineas for his evening, or five times the amount that our best English conductors are paid. . . . For not content with remunerating him according to his own estimate of his value, many of the Nobility and others have actually presented him with an increased gratuity, and one Nobleman (Lord A.) rewarded him for two nights with as many hundred pounds. A rich Jew in the City, we are assured, presented him with shares in one of the new-established companies, for one evening's assistance, which the Signor afterwards sold for three hundred pounds. Such are the anecdotes in circulation; and if something be allowed for exaggeration, there is still enough left to signalize the unsparing generosity of our affluent countrymen."

ROSSINI'S CONCERTS.

Rossini gave two concerts at Almack's, of the first of which the Morning Post of May 14, 1824, contained the following advertisement:—

> Signor Rossini's concerts. Almack's. Signor Rossini respectfully begs to inform the Nobility and Gentry that his first concert will take place at the above Rooms, this evening, under the patronage of [here follow the names of several ladies of rank].
> To begin at nine o'clock. Vouchers issued by the Lady Patronesses, to be exchanged for Tickets, &c.

The advertisement of the second and last concert (on June 11) contained this announcement:—

> Persons desirous of obtaining tickets are requested to send their names to Signor Rossini, 90, Quadrant.

The charge for admission to the two concerts, originally fixed at three guineas, was subsequently reduced to forty-two shillings, which amount was considered to be "a most magnificent sum." The chief interest in these two concerts seems to have centred in the second, for which Rossini composed what was designated an "Ottavino" on the death of Lord Byron, who had shortly before (on April 19) bade farewell to the world. This composition, which was published in London at the time, is described on the title-page as a "Canzone con coro." It was rather severely criticised, and so was Rossini's singing thereof. Here is a specimen from the Morning Post:—

> "A new composition by Rossini, called Il Pianto delle Muse in Morte di Lord Byron, was produced at his concert at Almack's, a few evenings ago; and being the only one he has produced since his arrival in England, excited more curiosity than it was calculated to gratify. It was termed an Ottavino, being sung by eight voices, the principal of which was the gran Maestro himself. There was something very foreign, not to say Frenchified, about the style; and the excess of grief which he endeavoured to express, now faltering in his accents, and then shouting out with the fullest strength of his lungs, was most extravagant, and would have been ludicrous, had not our feelings towards the deceased got the better of our propensity to laugh. These exhibitions of affected sorrow are at all times very disagreeable, but more particularly so where our respect for the lamented person inclines us to resent such artificial demonstrations of sorrow. The music was of the most commonplace description, but seemed to suit the taste of many of the fashionables present, who encored it vehemently, in spite of its tediousness and the extraordinary heat which Rossini suffered from his boisterous exertions."

The Harmonicon was equally severe:—

> "The Ottavino, on the death of Lord Byron, was sung by Signor Rossini, who certainly did not spare his lungs on the occasion, though he could not bring himself to afford a few lines of printing, to let his auditors know what words the muse intermixed with her tears. . . . As a whole, we never heard a duller concert than this; and although two or three claquers, stationed at the bottom of the room, did now and then raise some partial applause, and actually succeeded in getting the Ottavino encored, yet we will, without fear of contradiction, assert, that nineteen-twentieths of the audience were as little amused as ourselves, and much more dissatisfied."

ROSSINI AT CAMBRIDGE.

Cambridge was favoured with a visit from Rossini and his wife when they appeared at what was designated "The Cambridge Festival," held from July 2 to 5, 1824, under the conductorship of Professor Clarke-Whitfeld. The sacred performances were given in Great St. Mary's Church, the secular concerts in the Senate House. The Festival seems to have been a poor affair from a musical point of view. The band consisted of only twenty-eight performers, and there was "not a single chorusser in the orchestra!!" Thus when "Kitty" Stephens sang the recitative, "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying," the representatives of the "heavenly host," not being present, said nothing! The overture (to "The Messiah") was played in its original key; but, "to accommodate Madame Catalani's reduced powers" the opening tenor recitative ("Comfort ye") was transposed! With all our Festival shortcomings we have immensely improved upon such abominations as those of Cambridge three-quarters of a century ago. It is interesting to find that Rossini played the organ in Great St. Mary's Church, in accompanying the quartet "Mi manca la voce," from his "Moses in Egypt." He also sang with Catalani in Cimarosa's duet "Se fiato in corpo avete" ("Il matrimonio segreto"), and accompanied himself in "Largo al factotum." His appearance as a humorous vocalist at Cambridge is thus described:—

"Rossini had taken the pianoforte in Catalani's song, and in the duet in which his wife took part; but so great was the interest excited by the promise of his singing, that the audience renewed the expressions of favour which they had previously bestowed. When he began the song there was a quietness about his face which it was difficult to understand; but as he proceeded to the droller parts, the contrast was admirably effective. He possesses an uncommon play of countenance, and manages it most adroitly. His voice is a high tenor, rich, full, and flexible, but giving no indications of practice or cultivation. He sings with apparent indifference, and if his pretensions submitted him to critical remarks as a singer, he would decidedly be considered defective in style and manner. He evidently knows this, and with good taste selects those pieces where humour is the material requisite. The duet was received with bursts of laughter, and a loud and universal demand for repetition almost anticipated its close. In the second instance he gave a broader touch to some of his points, once or twice injuriously to their effect. He managed, however, to increase the mirth of his hearers to an almost boisterous extent (for such an atmosphere), and absolutely put Madame Catalani hors de combat; she was literally convulsed with laughter, and unable to proceed in two or three places."

An amusing reference to Rossini's lung power and his knowledge of English is furnished in the subjoined extract from the Cambridge Festival notice:—

"The Concert ended with 'God save the King,' the verses by Catalani, and the whole corps joining in chorus. Rossini's voice was remarkable above all the rest; and upon being laughingly complimented upon his English, he replied, that it was 'very well indeed.'"

The Rossini pair left London on July 26. A curious incident—which may be termed a "passing note"—of his adieu to London is furnished by the Morning Post of July 27, 1824, in these words:—

ROSSINI'S DEPARTURE.

"Signor Rossini quitted London last night on his way to the Continent. He, with a party of friends, sat down to a farewell dinner; but, behold! an unexpected guest made his appearance, instigated by one of those vulgar creatures called creditors, who it appeared had no soul for music, and chose that unlucky hour to press a disputed debt—il Maestro paused, on one side he felt inclined to resist, give bail, &c.; on the other, the dinner fumes titilated his olfactory nerves—unable to resist, the disputed claim was discharged, harmony restored, and mirth and hilarity reigned supreme till the hour of parting."

It is quite certain that impecuniosity was not a barrier to the discharge of this disputed debt, as Rossini and his wife are said to have made no less a sum than £7,000 between them during their seven months' sojourn in this country. Rossini was much sought after by ladies of the aristocracy, who were desirous of taking singing-lessons of him. He charged these grand dames exorbitant fees for this privilege. Upon being asked by a friend how he could have the moral courage to demand such terms, Rossini replied: "Why? A hundred pounds would not compensate me for the tortures I have to endure while listening to those great ladies' horribly screeching voices!"

CHARACTERISTIC ROSSINIAN ANECDOTES.

When Rossini was Director of the Liceo Musicale in Bologna, he was repeatedly asked by a friend to receive a young composer, in order that he might hear the music of a new opera that he had composed, and to give the young man the benefit of his (Rossini's) opinion and advice. Rossini at last consented, and at the appointed time the composer called upon the Maestro. He then opened a parcel he held in his hand, which contained the music of his opera, bound in three volumes. Rossini took the first volume into his hands and, without opening it, looked at the tome very carefully on every side, and then laid it down. He repeated the same operation with the other two books. He then returned the trio of volumes to the young man with only one observation: "They are beautifully bound. Good morning, sir!"

On another occasion a young composer succeeded in getting Rossini to hear some pianoforte pieces that he had just written. While the creative artist was playing his music, he noticed that Rossini frequently took off his cap. At last the young man ventured to ask Rossini why he so constantly saluted in that manner. The reply was characteristic. "I always remove my head-covering when I meet old acquaintances."

When Meyerbeer died a nephew of his composed a Funeral March in memory of his dear departed uncle. He requested Rossini to give him his opinion upon the mournful strains. The old man's verdict was expressed thus: "It would have been better if you had died, and your uncle had written the March!"

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Toynbee Hall is a household word in connection with brightening the lives of the poor of the district in which this philanthropic institution is located. A very interesting development of the work is a series of "Sunday Afternoon Concerts for the People," given weekly during Term. Their purpose is to bring classical music within easy reach of the humblest dweller in the East End; and, moreover, they are the only free concerts of the kind attempted in that neighbourhood. On the 29th inst. the programme will consist entirely of works by Beethoven, and on March 19 of Mozart's compositions, such special musical feasts being designated "Sunday afternoons with the great composers." The schemes are admirably drawn up, and the programme contains a biographical notice of, and other interesting matter relating to the various composers. Such music-makings amongst the hard-worked toilers of the great metropolis—"all for nuffing"—merit cordial recognition and best wishes for their complete success.

The original home of the Leipzig Conservatorium, associated with happy recollections of student days in the minds of many distinguished present-day musicians, is about to be demolished, together with several adjoining houses, to make room for modern buildings. It was within its modest quarters that Mendelssohn, on April 2, 1843, opened the first course of studies of the music-teaching Institution, rendered famous by his genius and personality, and the directorship of which he retained until his death in 1847. Since the inauguration of the present handsome quarters of the Conservatorium, the venerable, dun-coloured house in the vicinity of the Neumarkt, with its many interesting artistic associations, had been left in the possession of a caretaker, and will ere long, like the historical old Gewandhaus, have become merely a memory.

Yours very sincerely

Emile Sauret

FOOT-NOTES—excepting the pedal part in organ pieces—are generally absent from printed music. 'Tis true they appear in some editions of the pianoforte classics, but in this connection they are of a purely technical nature, and bear no traces of the "lighter touch," unless they refer to a staccato execution. Two curious specimens, separated by nearly a century apart, of foot-notes in printed music, may be referred to. The first appears in a publication somewhat lengthily entitled:—

"Three Fugues and Nine Voluntaries for the Organ, or Piano Forte, interspersed with several short Interludes by different Authors, and three additional pieces adapted for the Organ at the end of the book. The Fugues, and most of the Voluntaries originally composed by JOHN ERNEST EBERLIN, organist at Sallzbourg, in Germany, in the three different C clefs and the Bass clef are now arranged with some additions and alterations in the bass and treble clefs only, chiefly intended for the use of organists . . . . by JOSEPH DIETENHOFFER. Part the Second. London"[1801].

This book contains some novel directions—e.g., above a series of suspensions, "slide off with your fingers always in the right hand," which is a somewhat verbose manner of expressing the term legato; "sprinkle the chord" as an arpeggio indication; "drag the time," instead of rallentando, and so on. The foot-note in question appears at the end of the last piece in the book, an "Andante varioso," and is in these tender terms:—

"A Merry or chearful movement should follow here, in order to finish the book, but as there is no more Room for it, The Player will be so kind to add one of his own which will constitute the last part of Fugues and Voluntaries. Finis."

THE modern example is discoverable in the song "Wenn" (Op. 31, No. 2), by Richard Strauss. This composition is in the key of E flat, but its last seven bars are in the key of E! The composer's foot-note is evidently "wrote sarkastik":—

"Should any singers think of singing this song while the nineteenth century is still in existence, the Composer would advise them to transpose it from this point [*], a half-tone lower (i.e., into E flat), so that the composition may thus end in the key in which it began!!!"

In order to show the "point" of the suggested transposition, as well as the point of the foot-note, we give two bars of Richard Strauss's song:—

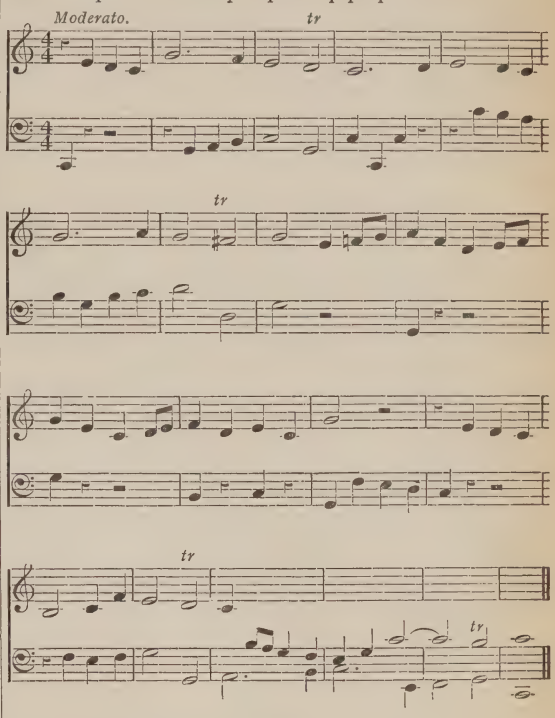
A HEAD-NOTE—not one of those exasperating vibrationalities often emitted by some men altos—is curiously furnished in an old book, entitled:—

"Thirty organ pieces composed by JOSEPH DALE, organist of St. Anthony and St. John Baptist, Watling Street, London."

Above "No. 1" of these score and a half of organ pieces appears the following information:—

"In case of no Blower, the Organist may put down the Bellows himself and Play this No. 1 for a Voluntary upon the Stop Diapason."

As some of our readers might like to put Mr. Joseph Dale to the test, we give the music of his "No. 1." It may be assumed, however, that this organ voluntary was composed in the pre-pedal-pipe period.



THE Queen attended a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," given on the 9th ult., in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, for the benefit of the families of the soldiers and sailors fighting in the Transvaal war. The performers, who occupied a specially erected platform under the great West window, consisted of the Windsor and Eton Amateur Madrigal Society and Her Majesty's Private Band, augmented for the occasion. Her Royal Highness Princess Christian and her daughter, Princess Victoria, attended the rehearsals, and took part as choralists in the performance. The principal soloists were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford; the secondary parts being filled by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Lucy Barton, Mr. Abel Starkey, and Mr. Bell Kempton. Dr. Harford Lloyd, Precentor of Eton, presided at the organ, and the oratorio was conducted by Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the Queen's Music.

THE Queen occupied a seat in the seclusion of the Choir from which, through the doorway in the screen under the organ, she could see the performers. Her Majesty's thoughts doubtless receded to the occasion of the third performance of Mendelssohn's magnum opus in Exeter Hall, on April 23, 1847, under the composer's direction, and only six months before his premature death. The Queen and the Prince Consort were present on that occasion, when the Prince wrote in the book of words he had used at the concert the following eloquent "appreciation" of Mendelssohn's oratorio and his genius:—

"To the Noble Artist, who, surrounded by the Baal-worship of debased art, has been able, by his genius and science, to preserve faithfully, like another Elijah, the worship of true art, and once more to accustom our ear, amid the whirl of empty, frivolous sounds, to the pure tones of sympathetic feeling and legitimate harmony: to the Great Master, who makes us conscious of the unity of his conception, through the whole maze of his creation, from the soft whispering to the mighty raging of the elements.

Inscribed in grateful remembrance by Albert.

Buckingham Palace, April 24, 1847."

An autograph letter from Mendelssohn, dated "Leipzig, February 2, 1847," was included in Messrs. Puttick and Simpson's sale catalogue of the 20th ult. The letter is addressed to Mr. Buxton, the former proprietor of Ewer and Co., the original English publishers of the oratorio of "Elijah." It refers to the arrangements for the first performance of the revised version of "Elijah" by the Sacred Harmonic Society in Exeter Hall. One extract, containing Mendelssohn's insistence on a "full Rehearsal, quite, quite full," may be quoted:—

"A great Conditio sine qua non will be a full Rehearsal (you write me it is fixed for the 14th), but quite, quite full, not so as I had some years ago for my 'St. Paul,' when we had the soloists and part of the orchestra one night, and chorus and another part of the orchestra another night. I must have all those that are to perform together for one Rehearsal, else I cannot undertake the thing."

Festival managers, please N.B.!

The remains of Domenico Dragonetti have been removed from St. Mary's Roman Catholic Chapel, Moorfields, previous to its demolition, and re-interred in a new cemetery at Wembley Park. "Old Drag," the greatest of double-bass players, died, aged ninety-one, at 4, Leicester Square, on April 16, 1846, and was buried in "Vault No. 3" at St. Mary's, on April 24. Thus passed away a very remarkable man. His tone was so powerful that, with one sforzando on his ponderous instrument, he could set right a whole orchestra if they had wavered in the least degree. This was in the ante-baton days, when such an aid to steadiness must have been invaluable. Having in his youth left the land of his birth, Dragonetti had not only partly forgotten his native language, but had never troubled himself to learn any other. His conversation, therefore, consisted of a marvellous conglomeration of Bergamese, bad French, and worse English. Though by no means an effeminate man, all "he's" were "she's" with Dragonetti, and if anyone offended him, his usual exclamation was "She dirty blackguard!" He once applied this expression to a former Archbishop of York (Vernon Harcourt), who, as director of the Ancient Concerts, had cast, as he supposed, some slight upon the double-bass player. "You, signor, voyez dat Archevêque York! Tell lui, She dirty blackguard!"

Dragonetti's eccentricities were most extraordinary. He always took his dog Carlo with him into the orchestra. He was an inveterate snuff-taker and had a perfect museum of snuff-boxes. An interesting side-light on this remarkable man is furnished by Henry Phillips in his "Recollections," who thus writes:—

"Dragonetti was a kind-hearted man, abounding with eccentricities; by nature a lover of the fine arts; and on his instrument, the double-bass, perfection. The power and tones he produced from his unwieldy instrument were wonderful, and to this he added great and rapid execution. The ends of his fingers had become, by practice, broad, covered with corns, and almost without form. Take him out of his profession, he was a mere child, given to the greatest frivolities. He led a single life, and occupied one lodging for years. This lodging consisted of a bedroom, sitting-room, and a vacant apartment which contained his collection of paintings, engravings, and dolls! Dolls—do not start, reader! a strange weakness for a man of genius to indulge in, but so it was. White dolls, brown dolls, dark dolls, black, large, small, middling, and diminutive dolls formed an important feature in his establishment. The large black doll he would call his wife, and 'she' used to travel with him sometimes to the Festivals. He and Lindley journeyed together inside the coach, and when changing horses in some little village, he would take this black dol and dance it at the window, to the infinite astonishment and amusement of the bystanders."

A touching incident is recorded of Dragonetti's last hours. In his earlier days he knew Beethoven, whom he claimed as a friend. Shortly before his end, when surrounded by Count Pepoli, A. J. Tolbecque, and his deeply attached friend, Vincent Novello, Dragonetti received a visit from Stumpff, the well-known harp maker, who, as the venerable king of double-bass players held out his great hand covered with callosities and unnaturally spread from constant playing, said with emotion: "This is the hand which Beethoven, our great friend, whose spirit now dwells in purer regions, bade me press."

The Yorkshire Post, in its issue of the 6th ult., makes the following gratifying comment upon our "Plan of Campaign" for 1900:—

The Musical Times has put forth a very attractive plan of campaign for next year. Among a series of articles on various branches of practical music by well-known experts, Mr. Cowen's hints on conducting will be interesting, while Dr. Coward's paper on choir-training should be of real value, if only his precepts prove at all equal to his practice. Mr. E. H. Lemare, too, should write with authority on "Organ accompaniments," for we have never heard anyone who went further to reconcile one to the absence of an orchestra in a modern choral work than he did by his consummately clever accompaniments on the fine organ he used to play in Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Square. Of the greatest importance, however, are, or should be, a series of three articles by Dr. Albrecht Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, grandson of the composer, on Mendelssohn's relations to the German composers of his time:—(1) Weber and Spohr, (2) Schumann and others, and (3) Wagner and others. These papers should solve several questions that have hitherto been puzzling many people.

"The Tone King: a romance of the Life of Mozart," a musical novel which has attained extraordinary popularity in Germany, has now been made available in an English version, translated from the German of Heribert Rau by Mr. J. E. Quintin Rae. The familiar, and perhaps somewhat too flattering portrait of Mozart forms a photogravure frontispiece to the volume, which is published by Messrs. Jarrold and Sons.

"CHORAL SONGS by various writers and composers in honour of Her Majesty Queen Victoria" is the title of a handsome folio volume, bound in white vellum, recently issued by Messrs. Macmillan. To some extent it partakes of the nature of a modern "Triumphs of Oriana," "in praise of Queen Elizabeth," to which work the preface of the present volume, cast in the form of an address to the Queen, thus refers:—

"The present collection is an attempt to express, in a more sedulous form, the same patriotic spirit which breathes so strongly through those ancient lays. It would ill become us to make critical discussion of the form in which this tribute is paid; but it will be observed that both words and music endeavour, without affected simplicity and with harmonies made possible by the ampler inheritance of the ages, to infuse some of the dignity of antiquity into the brightness of youth."

THE "Choral Songs," thirteen in number, have been contributed by the following authors and composers:—

Alfred Austin.	Sir A. C. Mackenzie.
Arthur C. Benson.	C. V. Stanford.
Robert Bridges.	H. Walford Davies.
Earl of Crewe.	Sir Frederick Bridge.
John Davidson.	Sir George Martin.
Austin Dobson.	Sir Hubert Parry.
Edmund Gosse.	A. M. Goodhart.
Arthur C. James.	Charles Wood.
Marquis of Lorne.	Arthur Somervell.
Frederic W. H. Myers.	Edward Elgar.
Henry Newbolt.	C. H. Lloyd.
J. F. R. Stainer.	Sir John Stainer.
T. H. Warren.	Sir Walter Parratt.

Two of the "songs," those by Mr. Elgar and Sir Walter Parratt, were sung at the Serenade given on Her Majesty's eightieth birthday at Windsor last year. Detailed criticism on the individual contributions to this interesting collection of unaccompanied vocal music may be withheld until the appearance of some, or all of them, in a popular form for the use of choral societies. In the meantime, it is sufficient to say that the names of the various composers are a complete guarantee of high class workmanship in a field of the art that is characteristically British. It may, however, be mentioned that five of the thirteen songs are in D, while three are in the keys of F and G respectively, the remaining two keys being A and A flat. Nine are in quadruple, two in duple, and two in triple rhythm. Seven are in four parts, two in five parts, and four in six parts. In "The Triumphs of Oriana" more than half the madrigals (14) were in five parts, and the remainder (11) were in six parts. The "Choral Songs" reflect great credit upon all those who have collaborated to bring into existence so admirable and interesting a souvenir of Queen Victoria's long and beneficent reign. No editor's name is given on the title-page; but it is an open secret that the idea of the work is due to Sir Walter Parratt, who is to be congratulated upon having brought it to such a successful issue.

THE theme of our EXTRA SUPPLEMENT has found an echo in many hearts during the past Christmastide. But "Valete" has a special little history of its own which is not without interest. This essentially "patriotic song" is a Harrow production, being specially written and composed for a school concert given on the 16th ult. The author of the words, Mr. E. W. Howson, a son of the great Dean of that name, is a master of the famous school on the hill. The lines are not only worthy of their subject, but they are commendably free from vulgarity or the boasting spirit; moreover, they contain no "Tommy" sentiment, and nothing of the "pay, pay, pay" element. Christmas is such an elastic Ecclesiastical feast that the natural reference thereto in the song will continue to be seasonable for some time to come. Thereafter, however, a certain modification will, we understand, be made in that connection whereby the song may have that prolonged life which its merits deserve. In regard to the music, the name of the composer, Mr. Eaton Faning, is a sufficient guarantee of its excellence. But it may be added that the Music Master of Harrow School has succeeded in producing a real tune—one that has plenty of "go" in it, is easy to "pick up," and, most excellent qualification, that is typically British.

THE following extracts from The Times notice of Mr. George Henschel's new opera, "Nubia," produced at Dresden, on the 9th ult., will be read with interest. The enthusiastic reception afforded to the work must have been very gratifying to the composer:—

DRESDEN, Dec. 10.

"Nubia," a new opera by Mr. George Henschel, was produced on Saturday evening at the Dresden Royal Opera. The King and Queen of Saxony, accompanied by the Hereditary Princess of Anhalt, witnessed the performance from the Royal box, and, to judge from the way in which the theatre was crowded, both by the Court society of Dresden and by a German and English musical public assembled from far and near, it was evident that the première of Mr. Henschel's work was regarded as an important musical event. It may be said at once that the expectations of the brilliant audience were fulfilled in a high degree, and that their enthusiasm, as well as their admiration, was excited by the great merits of the music, the dramatic impressiveness of the action, and also by the manner in which the opera was rendered and put on the stage—a performance worthy of the great traditions of this art-loving capital. Mr. Henschel was called before the curtain at the close of the evening at least fifteen times, and a large section of the audience remained applauding in the theatre for fully a quarter of an hour after the performance was ended.

Competent German critics summarise their impressions of the opera as follows: The music is not popular, partly because it seldom follows any modern fashion, least of all the Wagnerian. But it is work of a very high character, "Aristocratic Music," as a great singer who filled one of the leading rôles expressed it. In this respect it offers some parallels to the work of Brahms. Things in the opera which recall previous compositions rather in the manner of their introduction than in their essential character do not detract from the originality of the whole. As Brahms once said, when accused of a plagiarism, "Yes, I have taken that from Mendelssohn, but the amusing thing is that every ass can discover it." Mr. Henschel's opera, according to the opinion of very competent judges, will not achieve an immediate conquest of the wider public, or of the barrel-organs, but it will win more attention and admiration the more it is heard and studied, and its high merits will probably one day command warm recognition.

MUSICAL competitions are steadily making their way in the North of England. Two of these valuable educational factors in music have to be announced. The first, which is new, is at that stronghold of choral singing, Leeds, where, on March 31, a competition will be held for the Yorkshire Choral Challenge Shield. There are sections for both male and mixed voice choirs, open to all Yorkshire choirs. In addition to the Silver Challenge Shield there will be second and third prizes. Dr. W. G. McNaught is the adjudicator, and the honorary secretary is Mr. John Rinder, Farnley, Leeds. The Carlisle and District Musical Festival is to be held in Carlisle on April 25 and 26, with Mr. Arthur Somervell as adjudicator. This competition, with its thirteen classes, is on a more extensive scale than that at Leeds, one of the classes being "Village orchestras." Three concerts are to be given, and all particulars may be obtained from Mr. D. Hodgson, honorary secretary, The Hollins, Newby (West), Carlisle.

The war in South Africa has naturally had the effect of stagnating musical life in the colony. The following extract from a letter, written by a correspondent at Cape Town, and dated November 20, shows that not only had most of the tenors and basses of the chorus, but also the members of the band, valiantly resolved to "see the thing through." They are now probably awaiting the sight of Lord Roberts's Field Marshal's baton before resuming operations under that of their conductor. Here is the extract:—

The Exhibition concert, which should have been given on November 2, in Kimberley, has been postponed for a few months because of the political situation.

Four hundred and fifty voices had been selected from the chief schools, a body of seventy bass and tenor, and a full orchestra organised, and the rehearsals started, when our peaceful work had to be dropped by the declaration of war.

I had the good fortune to be spending a short holiday down here when hostilities commenced. The last letter I received from the secretary was to the effect that the greater part of the gentlemen of the orchestra and chorus had enrolled in the Town Guard. No doubt when the rehearsals are resumed, they will be able to give me a few points from practical experience as to how "Come if you dare," "Ye mariners of England," &c., ought to be rendered.

The dates of the next Three Choirs Festival, to be held at Hereford, under Dr. Sinclair's conductorship, have already been fixed—viz., September 9, 11, 12, 13, and 14.

"Neglected byways of Music" is the subject of three lectures which Sir Hubert Parry will deliver at the Royal Institution, on the 20th and 27th inst. and February 3. Sir Hubert's discourses will be musically illustrated.

Mr. F. Wood, bandmaster of the York and Lancaster Regiment, has been selected to succeed Mr. Dunkerton as bandmaster of the Scots Guards.

Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of Hereford Cathedral, was the recipient of a gratifying testimonial at a brilliant function of the Hereford Choral Society, held in the Shire Hall, on November 28, under the presidency of the Dean of Hereford. In the course of his remarks the Dean said:—

He felt great pleasure in taking part that evening in the ceremony, not only because of the position which he held as President of the Choral Society, but also owing to his close association with his excellent friend, George Robertson Sinclair, organist of the Cathedral, and master of the choristers. He felt a debt of gratitude to Dr. Sinclair for the manner in which he had assisted in sustaining the high reputation of the music in the Cathedral, and moreover for the lively interest that he had ever taken in the conduct and welfare of the choristers.

The Lord Bishop of the diocese, on behalf of the subscribers, presented Dr. Sinclair with the robes pertaining to a Doctor of Music, which had been subscribed for by many friends and admirers in Hereford and the district. An album, containing the actual autograph of each contributor, was also handed to Dr. Sinclair. The following is the title-page of the volume:—

This book contains the names of members of the Hereford Choral and Herefordshire Orchestral Societies, the Hereford Festival Class, the Crickhowell Choral and Ross Musical Societies, and other friends of Dr. George Robertson Sinclair, who, on the occasion of his receiving the degree of Doctor of Music from the Archbishop of Canterbury, subscribed to present him with a set of the robes pertaining to that degree. In making this presentation the subscribers desire to place on record their sincere and grateful appreciation of Dr. Sinclair's valuable services in promoting the practical advancement of musical taste and culture in various ways, but more especially as conductor and musical adviser of the above-named Associations.

The Bishop, addressing Dr. Sinclair, said:—

I have the greatest pleasure in presenting you with this book, which contains the names of those who have had the happiness and pleasure of congratulating you upon this unique occasion in your life, and in doing so I convey to you the sincere wishes of every one of them that you may long enjoy all the happiness of the distinguished career which we anticipate.

It speaks well for the urbanity and tact of the organist of Hereford Cathedral that he has been thus honoured in the city and the surrounding district—from the highest clerical dignitaries in the diocese down to the rank and file of the chorus in the various Societies of which he is the conductor.

Mr. Bryceson Trehearne, formerly an "Erard" scholar at the Royal College of Music, and subsequently a teacher of the pianoforte in University College, Aberystwyth, has been appointed Professor of the Pianoforte in the University of Adelaide. The appointment, which is worth £500 a year, was made by a committee, appointed by the University, which consisted of Mr. W. H. Cummings (Principal of the Guildhall School of Music), Mr. Frederic Cliffe, and the Hon. Dr. Cockburn.

Dr. Henry Coward, chorus master, and Mr. J. W. Phillips, orgainst of the Sheffield Musical Festival, have been presented by the Lord Mayor of Sheffield, on behalf of the Festival Chorus and Committee, with two handsome tokens of the esteem in which they are both held. The gift to Dr. Coward consisted of a sterling silver tea and coffee service, and that to Mr. J. W. Phillips of a gold watch—each being inscribed with the name of the recipient and the following words: "A souvenir of the Sheffield Musical Festival, 1899, from members of the Chorus and Committee: December, 1899.

Sir Charles Hubert Hastings Parry, M.A., D.Mus., Hon. D.C.L., Hon. Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, Director of the Royal College of Music, was, on the 5th ult., elected by Convocation Professor of Music in the University of Oxford. The right man in the right place.

The late Sir George Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist" and "The Lady of the Lake" were acquired by Messrs. Novello at the recent sale of Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.'s copyrights.

The report of the re-opening of the Leeds Parish Church organ is unavoidably held over, by reason of space, till February.

THE Index of THE MUSICAL TIMES—enlarged, re-arranged, and greatly improved—for the past year (1899) is now ready, and may be obtained gratis upon application to Messrs. Novello, the publishers.

DR. PHILIP ARMES, Professor of Music in the University of Durham, and organist of Durham Cathedral, will form the subject of our biographical sketch in the February issue.

BRAHMSIANA.*

SIDELIGHTS are of the greatest possible value in biography. Next to letters written by the person biographised, the trustworthy recollections of his friends take first rank as personalia. Whoever writes the "Life" of Brahms will find much in this delightful volume to rejoice his heart. These "Recollections"—which, as the fair translator truly says, "are the nearest approach to a biography as yet in existence"—are by two of the composer's intimate friends, Professor Dietrich and Dr. J. V. Widmann. Let us see what they have to tell us about Johannes Brahms.

Professor Dietrich was a member of the group of young musicians who gathered round Schumann at Düsseldorf. His "Recollections" of Brahms cover a period of twenty-one years, 1853 to 1874. At a rehearsal of the Düsseldorf Choral Society Schumann came up to Dietrich and said, with an air of mystery and a happy smile: "One has come of whom we shall all hear great things: his name is Johannes Brahms," thus forecasting the famous Neue Bahnen article. Thereupon ensued an introduction to the youthful, almost boyish-looking musician (ætat 20), with his high-pitched voice, long, fair hair, and deep blue eyes. At an evening party Brahms played with wonderful power and mastery Bach's F major Toccata and his own Scherzo in E flat minor, "bending his head down over the keys, and, as was his wont, in his excitement humming the melody aloud as he played." Shortly afterwards, during an excursion to Grafenburg, and while walking across the fields, the skittish young composer pulled up some turnips, and, after carefully cleaning them, offered them to the ladies of the party as refreshment!

Dietrich knew the "dear old mother" of Brahms, who told him that, as a boy, her Johannes was passionately fond of tin soldiers! Even when he had reached the age of twenty-eight he kept the different boxes of soldiers locked up in his desk, as "he could not bring himself to part with such dear mementoes of his childhood." Although Brahms led a very simple life money was "very necessary" to him, and therefore he would not play at concerts or at Court without remuneration. During one of his visits to Dietrich he was much attracted by "a very nice girl." One evening, after an exceedingly lively party, he remarked with quiet decision: "I like her, I should like to marry her; such a girl could also make me happy." But Brahms remained a life-long bachelor. "It is my misfortune still to be unmarried, thank God!" he facetiously observed later in life. Asked why he had "missed his chance," he replied that he could not have borne "to meet the anxious, questioning eyes of a wife with the words 'another failure.'" Anything in the nature of a fuss was distasteful to him. Once after he had given a masterly rendering of Beethoven's G major Pianoforte Concerto, when he roused both orchestra and audience to great enthusiasm, he removed a laurel wreath that hung over his chair and modestly laid it under the pianoforte! This is not unlike a similar incident in the career of Hans von Bülow; but his treatment of the wreath was less subtle. The redoubtable Hans remarked: "I am much obliged, but I am not a vegetarian!"

There are several interesting references to his compositions. In the autumn of 1866 Brahms brought to Dietrich, then living at Oldenburg, the manuscript of his Hungarian Dances for four hands. "He and Madame Schumann played them at sight with such fire and brilliancy that it was followed by a general burst of enthusiasm." The original sketch of his Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Op. 15) was in the form of a sonata for two pianofortes. Here is an interesting reference to the "Song of Destiny," one of Brahms's most beautiful works. One morning in the summer of 1868 an excursion was made, at his desire, to the great naval port of Wilhelmshafen. "On the way thither," says Dietrich, "our friend, usually so lively, was quiet and serious. He told us that early that morning (he always rose betimes) he had found Holderlin's Poems in the bookcase, and had been most deeply moved by the 'Song of Destiny.' When later in the day, after having wandered about and seen everything of interest, we sat down by the sea to rest, we discovered Brahms at a great distance, sitting alone on the beach and writing. These were the first sketches for the 'Song of Destiny,' which soon after appeared. A trip to the woods was given up, and Brahms hurried back to Hamburg to devote himself entirely to work." In regard to the "German Requiem," the beautiful soprano solo, "I will comfort you," did not form a part of the work at its first complete performance on Good Friday, April 10, 1868. "Instead of it, Madame Joachim sang the air, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' from 'The Messiah,' and was followed by Joachim, who played Schumann's 'Abendlied.'"

Brahms's disposition, we are told, was "as amiable and cheerful as it was full of depths of seriousness." He used frequently to tease the ladies by "making joking assertions in such a grave manner that Madame Schumann, in particular, took them quite seriously." Dietrich had to step in as mediator, but Brahms liked to increase the misunderstanding that he might end up with a hearty laugh at the expense of the ladies. He was a great lover of children. He referred to Dietrich's little girl and boy (aged two and three) as "my bride and my brother-in-law." He had a special regard for poor children; he would frequently stop in the streets to speak to these little folks and give them sweets. He was particularly charming in congenial company and was quite au fait in the making and guessing of riddles. There was a good deal of little suspected fun in his nature. In one of his letters to Dietrich he says, in referring to his friend's wife: "Mrs. Clara! I look like your Albert to a hair! you may take that fairly literally! How can that be?" The fact is that Brahms, clean shaven in his youth, had, in the meantime, grown a beard—a fair beard, to speak "fairly literally." When questioned as to the reason of this metamorphosis, he replied, complacently stroking his mighty beard: "A clean-shaven man is taken either for an actor or a priest." There are several very interesting references to the Schumanns in this section of the book, to which we must refer the reader.

We must now pass on to the "Recollections" of Dr. J. V. Widmann, an eminent Swiss littérateur, who, by the way, is the author of the libretto of Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew." Widmann's reminiscences extend from the year 1886, when Brahms was fifty-three, to the time of his death in 1897. One day when Widmann was showing him a sketch he had made twenty years before of the composer seated at the pianoforte, Brahms said: "Well, yes; I suppose I did look somewhat like a doubtful candidate for the ministry in those days. But the difference is: you were one and I was not. Ah! those were happy times." Here is a characteristic Brahms story:—

* "Recollections of Johannes Brahms." By Albert Dietrich and J. V. Widmann. Translated by Dora E. Hecht. London: Seeley and Co., Ltd. 1899.

> "A pedantic musician, from a very small Swiss town, obsequiously assured him that he knew all that he (Brahms) had ever written. Brahms motioned him to be silent and listen, as the band was just then playing something of his. I still seem to see that good man before me, as he stood there gaping and listening with upturned eyes to the rather common music (it was a military march by Gung'l), which he really took for a composition of Brahms; whilst Brahms himself, in great glee at the success of his ruse, whispered to us, 'Well fooled!'"

Widmann tells us that Brahms was an eager controversialist, and that he never knew anyone who took such an ever fresh and constant interest in the phenomena of life, whether of nature, art, or even technical industry, as did Brahms. "Every trifling invention, every improvement in any household utensil, in short, every trace of human thought, if only of practical use, gave him true pleasure. And nothing escaped his observation; no advertisement on a tram ticket, no well-made toy, nor any other insignificant object, if only there were something new, some progress to be discovered." Brahms was a great reader on a variety of subjects. Amongst new books he was greatly interested in those upon travel and voyages of discovery, such as Stanley's "Africa," &c. His dislike to the autograph-hunter soon became known, and many subterfuges were resorted to by these people to gain their signatory ends. One day he received a letter from Solingen in these terms: "Your order for ten dozen rapiers, Solingen make, will be despatched in a day or two. We take the liberty of obtaining payment through the Post Office." Brahms paid them out by not replying to the letter. Again, a German lady in Capetown, wrote year by year with great perseverance to him ordering "one of his far-famed Viennese pianofortes"! It was very difficult to get him to sit for the painting of his portrait. Widmann once laid a trap thuswise. While staying at Kandersteg, where Simrock and Brahms were his guests, Widmann invited an artist to visit him, "who," he says, "had expressed a desire to paint my (Widmann's) youngest daughter." Brahms was inveigled into sitting near the young lady during the painting process, "so that the artist, while busy with his pastels, could look beyond her at the musician. But after a few minutes, perceiving the ruse, Brahms rose, and remarking that he could no longer inflict the smoke of his cigarettes (he was already at his fifth or sixth) upon 'the ladies and tender children,' went out on to a wooden balcony with a view of the Gemmi Pass," whither Widmann followed him. All attempts to induce him to return were fruitless, and the wished-for portrait of Brahms was not painted.

Brahms detested the conventionalities of dress. He was most at ease in a striped flannel shirt, without either tie or stiff collar; even his soft felt hat was oftener carried in his hand than worn on his head. On one occasion in Northern Italy he was "mighty proud of his good idea of wearing three pairs of trousers, one on the top of the other, on a bitterly cold night journey over the mountain from Mori to Riva." He gave as the chief reason why he had declined pressing invitations to visit England that "one has almost to live in a dress coat and white tie." He was a very lazy correspondent, and, like Mr. Gladstone, had a penchant for post cards. He disliked going to the opera because of the late hours it involved, as, even when travelling, he usually rose before five o'clock in the morning. He was fully aware of his occasional bluntness, but was always ready to apologise if he had reason to fear that in an unguarded moment his rough and violent manner had given offence. He was invariably silent as to his own works, and only spoke of them with a touching modesty; but he showed "the deepest veneration for the great heroes of the past in every field of Art." He once told Dietrich that "when composing, he liked to think of the words of folk-songs, these seeming to suggest musical themes to his mind."

Brahms was not ashamed to refer to his early struggles for existence. And in this connection Dr. Widmann must be quoted at length:—

> "Going on to speak of his own youth, Brahms said emphatically that he could not wish it to have been less beset with difficulties and privations. It is true that he had had at first to earn his bread by arranging Marches and Dances for open-air bands, or some similar means; but even now it gave him pleasure, when he accidentally came across one of these youthful efforts still circulating anonymously in the world, to find that he had done even such quill-driving with all his might and according to the knowledge that he then possessed. He even did not consider it a useless discipline of life that he had sometimes had to accompany the singers at a café chantant, or to play dance-music, whilst all the time longing for the quiet morning hour when he could put his own thoughts on paper. 'The best songs came into my head whilst brushing my boots before dawn!' he said. And, delighting to recall the days of his youth, he went on to describe his bliss when he, a little boy of hardly six years, for the first time discovered the possibility of making a melody visible to the eye by placing black dots on lines at different intervals. He said: 'I invented a system of notation before I knew that one had already long been in existence!'"

Passing over references to Wagner, Verdi, Joachim, and others, we must quote an instance of Brahms's tribute to Rossini, during one of his tours in Italy. "As we passed through Pesaro," says Widmann, "he insisted that, even if we did not make a halt, we should at least do honour to the memory of Rossini by each of us singing some air from 'Il Barbiere'; and, as we chanced to be alone in the railway carriage, his proposal was duly carried out."

In conclusion, it is some time since we have read a musical book that has given us so much pleasure and satisfaction, which, in justice should it be said, is in no slight degree due to the excellent and easy-flowing translation furnished by Miss Dora E. Hecht. The extracts we have made will, we trust, induce our readers to get these unaffected "Recollections" for themselves. In the probable event of a second edition, an index, the omission of which is perhaps the only defect in the book, should be supplied. Two portraits of Brahms—one in his clean-shaven period, the other showing his "mighty beard"—add to the attractiveness of this interesting volume upon the life and character of one of the great masters of music.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

THE threshold of a new year furnishes an opportune occasion to say a few words concerning this more or less ecclesiastical section of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It is proposed to make it both practical and interesting to those in "choirs and places where they sing," be they the clergy, choirmen, or "chief musicians thereof." To this end we invite the co-operation of our readers in supplying any information such as is likely to prove acceptable, or in sending suggestions that may further the end we have in view.

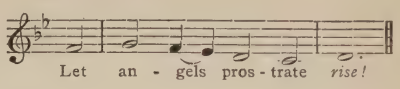
The scope and purport of this column must of necessity be governed by considerations of general interest and space. In a monthly journal which endeavours to be so comprehensive in its musical survey as does THE MUSICAL TIMES, the question of space is always a burning one. Therefore, such everyday occurrences as organ recitals cannot be mentioned in detail. But any organ recital programmes that may be sent to us will be carefully perused and commented upon from time to time, especially when they contain any feature or features of special interest. In future the "Organ and Choir Appointments" will appear in this column, and we shall be glad to insert any such notifications that may be sent to us. Finally, variety and interest will go hand in hand, and every endeavour will be put forth to make "Church and Organ Music" an appreciable quantity.

BRAHMS'S "GERMAN REQUIEM" AT ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.

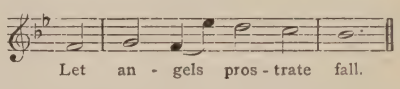
Very beautiful and impressively devotional was the rendering accorded to the great choral work by Brahms at this church on the evening of the 15th ult. There was an entire absence of fuss in its presentation, and tranquillity attended a very remarkable performance of that noble composition. The choir of the church (twenty boys and fourteen men), unsurpliced, but clad in cassocks, took their places, with one clergyman, at eight o'clock, to the strains of a few soft organ chords. With the exception of some opening and closing collects and the offertory for the expenses, the service was entirely devoted to the "Requiem." There was no conductor, and there was no noisy out-going voluntary. Without going into details, we must unhesitatingly state that the work received an interpretation not often vouchsafed to it. The vocal tone of the whole choir was ethereally beautiful, and the boy who sang the solo, "Ye now are sorrowful," rendered it with a sympathetic fervour which went to the heart. The "Requiem" was accompanied on Walker's fine organ in a masterly manner—there is no other word for it—by Mr. E. H. Lemare, the organist of the church, to whom the choir are indebted for their exceptional training. Choirmasters would do well to hear such a service at St. Margaret's. They would be edified not a little by its technical excellence; but they could not fail to be deeply impressed by a poetic, tender, and spiritual interpretation of the music.

A TINKERED HYMN-TUNE.

An aggravated case of hymn-tune tinkering is furnished in the old repeat tune "Miles's Lane," associated with "All hail the power of Jesus' name." In "Hymns Ancient and Modern" (No. 300) the second line of the tune is made to end on the third of the scale, instead of on the tonic. This alteration destroys the fall of William Shrubsole's original melody, in which he sought to give natural expression to Vincent Perronet's line, "Let angels prostrate fall." The effect, in verse 1, becomes, however, thus:—



An equally unpardonable maltreatment of the tune took place in Scotland many years ago in an abridged version of "Miles's Lane" designated "Scarborough." The second line is printed as follows:—



Judging from some words of advice addressed to Precentors on this tune, a departed Scotch divine evidently considered this atrocity "perfectly sickening." He said: "As they would deprecate being regarded barbarians, let those precentors not intermeddle with this gorgeous tune who cannot guide a congregation into the singing of it without taking the octave [seventh] at the end of the second measure. It produces the sensation as if one would vomit."

SPECIAL SERVICES.

Amongst the special services of the past month prominence must be accorded to the performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 5th ult., when Sir George Martin conducted, and Mr. Charles Macpherson, the sub-organist, presided at the organ. Those who wended their way to the great Mother Church of the Metropolis heard the work under those devout conditions which have characterised these special services for many years, since Sir John Stainer inaugurated them during his memorable organistship at St. Paul's.——The special orchestral service on Sunday afternoon, the 3rd ult., at Brixton Church, included Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony! Miss Ada Patterson sang two solos, Mr. Robert Gray "led" the "full professional orchestra," Mr. Welton Hickin was at the organ, and Mr. Douglas Redman conducted.——On the same day the usual monthly musical service was held in the Parish Church, Portsmouth, under the direction of Mr. R. H. Turner, organist and choirmaster of the church. Travers's "Ascribe unto the Lord" was the chief feature.——Mr. Hugh Blair's Advent cantata, "Blessed are they who watch," was sung in St. James's Church, Handsworth, on the 6th ult., with Mr. Chastey-Hector at the organ, under the conductorship of Mr. Richard Richards.——Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed at All Saints', Hatcham Park, on the 3rd ult., with Mr. C. T. Couch at the organ, and the same work was given at the Barry Road Wesleyan Church, Peckham Rye, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Furse, organist and choirmaster of the church.——The annual festival choral Evensong was held in All Saints' Church, Petersham, Melbourne, on November 1, when several choirs united their forces under the choirmastership of Mr. William T. Wood, and Mr. W. Angus presided at the organ. The service was Stainer in B flat, and the anthems were "Plead Thou my cause" (Mozart) and "I beheld, and lo! a great multitude" (Elvey).——The opening of Norwich Cathedral organ is fully described in another column.

ORGAN RECITLAS.

Programmes are to hand of recitals given by Mr. James Tomlinson, organist to the Corporation (New Public Hall, Preston), Mr. Roger Ascham (his sixty-eighth recital in connection with the municipal concerts, Port Elizabeth),

Mr. E. H. Lemare (who attracts crowded congregations at St. Margaret's, Westminster), Mr. W. Reed (Toronto Conservatory of Music), Mr. T. Keighley (Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne), Mr. J. Herbert Williams (Derby Road Baptist Church, Nottingham), Mr. W. J. Kipps (Blackheath Presbyterian Church), Mr. W. A. Roberts (St. Paul's, Prince's Park, Liverpool), Mr. Ernest Newton (St. Thomas's, Portman Square), Mr. A. H. Allen (St. Clement's, Ilford), Mr C. J. Brennan (Parish Church, Strabane), Mr. Ernest H. Smith (St. Bede's, Liverpool), Mr. J. Gray (Kirkcaldy Parish Church), and many others.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Francis H. Broome, St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Dunblane.

Mr. Alfred H. Dudley, Oxton Road Congregational Church, Birkenhead.

Mr. A. E. Thorne, Christ Church, Newgate Street.

Mr. Percy W. Taylor, Parish Church, Towcester.

Mr. G. W. Gandy, St. Mark's, Lewisham.

Mr. Herbert Dyer (Tenor), St. James's, West Hampstead.

CONFERENCE ON SIGHT-SINGING IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

On the 9th ult. a meeting was held at the Guildhall School of Music to discuss the desirability and ways and means of teaching class singing in the secondary schools in which the children of the middle class receive their education. Principals of schools and teachers of class singing were invited to attend, with the result that about 100 were present. The circular summoning the meeting stated that the scheme of the conference was to include the consideration of a series of suggestions as to the amount of skill in vocal music that may be expected from a properly educated boy or girl between the ages of ten and sixteen, and some recommendations as to the method and manner of imparting the necessary knowledge. It was also stated that the following questions would be submitted to the meeting: (a) Is it possible from the scholastic point of view to thus grade the subject? (b) Is it asking for too great an amount of school time? (c) Is the cost of such systematic work by a duly qualified teacher likely to be against its general adoption?

Mr. W. H. Cummings presided, and on commencing the proceedings read some letters of apology for absence, the most notable of which was one from Sir John Stainer approving of the objects of the meeting, and another from Mr. F. Cliffe, the music-master at Haileybury College, suggesting that public schools should each reserve one scholarship for boys showing good vocal capacity. Mr. Cummings said that matters pertaining to singing, such as voice production and sight-singing, were much neglected in schools of the type to which they were now appealing. As for sight-singing from the staff notation, it was so easy that a child of four or five years of age could learn in a few months. He stated that the meeting was not summoned to discuss Board school work or the use of the tonic sol-fa notation, but to promote the use of the staff notation.

Professor Prout followed, and gave a brief historical summary of what had been attempted hitherto in the way of school singing. He described the Hullah movement as a mistaken effort to teach absolute pitch without regard to the key relations of sounds. The tonic sol-fa notation was a protest against this, and while he had a sincere respect for the late Mr. Curwen, he thought the tonic sol-fa notation was not necessary.

Dr. Dunstan said that one reason for tonic sol-fa popularity was the cheapness of the copies that were issued in that notation. Although the staff was complicated it was inevitable, and must be learnt for all the higher purposes of music.

Dr. Sawyer then proceeded to demonstrate how classes of children of various ages could be taught the staff notation. He used staff notation diagrams or modulators, which were drawn on a blackboard. Pupils from various secondary schools were in attendance to illustrate the system advocated, and followed Dr. Sawyer's pointing with fair facility in a number of exercises. Sometimes the figures 1 to 7 were used, and sometimes the usual sol-fa syllables, but always on a tonic basis. The plan of teaching the scale degrees by drawing attention to their mental effects was described. Dr. Sawyer considered it was more important that singing should be taught properly in the secondary schools than in the primary schools.

Mr. Ernest Newton described the musical work accomplished at the Grocers' Company's School at Hackney Downs. Most of Sullivan's operas and a number of well known oratorios had been performed by the boys, assisted in the case of the oratorios by adult tenors and basses. He thought there was more time for sight-singing in girls' schools than in boys' schools.

Dr. McNaught stated that while he wished to support the movement in favour of increasing the use of the staff notation in secondary schools, he would be lacking in sincerity if, after what had been said regarding tonic sol-fa, he did not declare that he believed firmly in the utility of that system. As the musical profession after all had to a large extent charge of the music in secondary schools, he thought they were somewhat to blame for not showing more enthusiasm for sight-singing. But, on the other hand, they were frequently insuperably hampered by the circumstances under which they had to teach. He laid great stress upon the sight-singing being taught thoroughly in the junior classes.

Mrs. Woodhouse, of the Clapham High School, and Miss Fox, of Chislehurst, spoke favourably of the proposals. After a resolution affirming the desirability of school pupils being graded and taught by qualified teachers for at least forty minutes a week was proposed and carried without debate, the meeting came to an end.

Some disappointment was expressed by teachers of class-singing and others who had put themselves considerably out in order to be present, that the various questions enumerated on the invitation circular were not discussed. The demonstration of teaching was, under the circumstances, much too long. It might have been taken as granted that, given the time and proper classification, elementary sol-faing from the staff could be taught.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

"THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SIGHT-SINGING."

The second meeting of the twenty-fifth session was held as usual at the Royal College of Organists' rooms, on the 12th ult., when Dr. W. G. McNaught read a paper on "The Psychology of Sight-singing." Sir John Stainer presided. Sight-singing was defined as the ability to conceive with the mind and execute with the voice musical effects indicated by musical notation. Practically, sight-singing is an act of memory. The notation having been duly associated with musical effects, induces a conception of musical material previously observed and memorised. Any investigation of the psychology of sight-singing must at the outset involve reference to the whole behaviour of the mind to musical effects. Listening to music involves—(a) the observation of what is heard at any given moment; (b) the recollection of what has been just previously heard; (c) the comparison of what we hear now with what we have just heard.

These processes are automatic and unconscious. The comparisons so made between different sounds result in the realisation of what we call relations. This power of memorising and comparing sounds is absolutely essential to the appreciation of the most elementary music. Two distinct and, for the sight-singer, highly important kinds of relations are observed by the mind. One is the effect of the step or leap from one pitch to another—i.e., the interval. Every interval has its own specific effect. It may be modified and disguised in various ways, but it still retains enough of its own peculiar effect for identification by the educated ear. This interval effect, then, is wholly derived from the comparison of one pitch with the last heard pitch. The other kind of effect is the result of the comparison of a pitch with all that can be recollected of what has gone before. In a series of duly ordered relations this sense of manifold relations is the Key Sense—that most marvellous faculty of the mind by which we collate effects and colour sounds as tonics and dominants, &c. When we say that a key is established in the ear, we mean partly, if not wholly, that its absolute pitch is memorised. The memory is, as it were, indented with the pitches of the scale degrees and the will has but to select the rut. Sometimes this memory is exclusively drawn upon, and especially by weak singers, but more often its use is involved with the memory of mental effect. The two faculties generally work so amicably together it is difficult to say which is governing the execution more than the other.

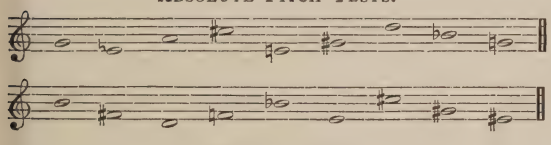
As to the value of interval observation to a sight singer, it was pointed out that the difference between an interval, the two pitches of which are heard simultaneously, and the same interval when the two pitches are heard in succession, is considerable. A melodic presentment of the same intervals is but a fleeting adumbration of the harmonic effect. Hence it is difficult for singers with ordinary capacity to sing entirely by interval measurement.

Has it been, on the whole, good for musical progress that centuries ago names were employed as mnemonics of the mental effects? Some would answer this question with an emphatic negative, but, whether for ultimate good or evil, the practice of so using syllables or names now permeates the greater part of the sight-singing teaching in this country. Some disadvantages of the dependence of many singers upon actual utterance of the sol-fa syllable were described and illustrated. The syllables impressed as slaves mock the singer as masters. The moral of this is that from the early stages, and throughout the course, pupils should be trained to frequently use the syllables as thought mnemonics that need not to be uttered in order to work their magic.

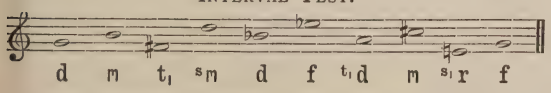
The fully equipped sight-singer must be a musician of considerable natural capacity and attainment. If he can easily command the permanent memory of absolute pitch he may not need any other resource. He may, however, find this sense inconvenient when called upon to perform a pitch to which he is not accustomed. If he does not possess this sense, he needs to have a retentive temporary memory of absolute pitch, a keen perception of the effects of the scale degrees, complete independence of the utterance of associated syllables, and the ability to sing intervals apart from knowledge of their true key context.

The following are some of the tests used:—

ABSOLUTE PITCH TESTS.



INTERVAL TEST.



A short discussion followed the reading of the paper, in which Sir John Stainer related some curious experiences with the sense of permanent absolute pitch. Mr. Cummings also spoke on this point, and affirmed his opinion that the pitch could be widely cultivated. Dr. Shinn, Mr. Venables, and Mr. W. H. Bonner also spoke. A short paper on "The Musical Directions given in early Metrical Psalters," announced to be read by Sir John Stainer, was postponed to another occasion.

The paper was illustrated by the performance of various severe tests in absolute pitch, which were admirably sung by Miss Elsie Horne and Miss Harding, two students of the Royal Academy of Music. Four children from Haselrigge Road Board School, Clapham, also cleverly sang other tests, showing how quickly the "mental effect" sense works. The application of this sense to the reading of intervals was shown by their accurate performance of the third test given above.

A SPECIALLY impressive Memorial Service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 19th ult., for those who have fallen in the war. The band of the Coldstream Guards assisted, and the anthems were Stanford's "I heard a voice from heaven" and Byrde's "The souls of the righteous."

FOLK-SONG SOCIETY.

THE second general meeting of the Folk-Song Society took place on November 23, at the Royal Academy of Music, by kind permission of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who also presided, in the absence, through indisposition, of Viscount Cobham, the president of the Society. The proceedings were of great interest. After some appropriate and humorous opening remarks by Sir Alexander, Mr. Fuller Maitland commented on the songs collected by members of the Society since the previous meeting. These were seventy in number, and several of the best of them were sung by Mrs. Kate Lee, the two most noteworthy being "Of two young sailors" and "Come, aid ye, loyal lovers," the melody of the latter possessing a genuine pathetic ring.

The most important paper was entitled "Folk-Song in Jewish Worship Music," contributed and read by the Rev. Francis L. Cohen, whose articles on "Music in the Synagogue," which appeared in the August and September numbers of THE MUSICAL TIMES last year, will be remembered with interest. This dealt largely and in exhaustive fashion with the adoption of folk-tunes by Spanish Jews, particularly those for home use. They wrote religious words to popular tunes of the day, the original text being often imitated, or its meaning altered, by the alteration of one or two words, with great ingenuity. Mr. Cohen showed that this method had been extensively adopted by Jews in all parts, and a number of illustrations, most of them of very expressive character, were charmingly sung by Mrs. Rosa Cohen.

After a brief interval for "tea and cakes," Mr. Frank Kidson read a paper on "Sailors' Songs," and showed that the ditties and ballads sung by Jack a hundred years ago had given place to songs of music-hall type, owing to the comparative shortness of his time on shipboard and his greater opportunities of going ashore. This paper was also admirably illustrated, the chief singer being Mr. Charles Phillips, who, with many others, had kindly volunteered their services.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL ORGAN OPENING.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE truth of the old proverb, "Everything comes to him who waits," has been strikingly exemplified in connection with the new organ just erected in Norwich Cathedral. For many years past complaints have been made by successive cathedral organists, frequently emphasised by the public, of the antiquated and inadequate instrument upon which they had to accompany the services; this reproach, however, no longer exists. The present Dean of Norwich (Dr. Lefroy) is, happily, a man who, having once set his hand to a work, is not satisfied till that work is accomplished. Through his instrumentality the interior of the Cathedral under his charge has been entirely and reverently renovated. The erection of the new organ comes as the crowning act of his previous efforts, and stands as a memorial of his ceaseless activity on behalf of the mother church of the diocese. After much anxious deliberation the construction of the new organ, from a specification prepared by Dr. Frank Bates (the Cathedral organist), was entrusted to Messrs. Norman and Beard, of Norwich. The result, acknowledged by those experts who have examined the instrument, has placed that firm in high rank as organ builders. In outline this specification may be roughly summarised as follows:—

Pedal	9 Stops.	Echo	12 Stops.
Choir	9 ,,
Great	14 ,,		64
Swell	15 ,,	Couplers, &c. ..	14
Solo	5 ,,
		Total

All that was worth preserving of the old work has been retained—notably, the choir open diapason by Renatus Harris, the great open diapason by Byfield, and the stopped diapason, the oldest stop in the organ, by a builder whose name is unknown. The organ remains on the screen, but the keyboard is now placed on the South side of the instrument, whereby the player has an uninterrupted view of the entire edifice. The wind is primarily supplied by a gas engine placed outside the Cathedral.

One of the most important features of the new instrument is the echo, or celestial organ, the cost of which has been defrayed by Mr. Hugh Barclay, banker, of Norwich, in memory of his recently deceased wife. All the pipes of the echo organ are enclosed in a swell-box, placed in the triforium at the extreme East of the building, 300 feet from the keyboard, with which they are connected by an electric cable. In designing the handsome case, the Cathedral surveyor (Mr. C. J. Brown) has utilised all that was of value in the old one, and his scheme has been carried out by Messrs. Cornish and Gaymer, of North Walsham. The contract price for the new instrument exceeded the sum of £6,000.

The dedication service, which took place in the Nave on the 12th ult., was of an imposing character, being attended by the Cathedral body, the members for the city, many of the city corporation, and the mayors of most of the boroughs in the diocese. The Cathedral choristers were reinforced by the choirs of Ely Cathedral, King's and St. Catherine's Colleges, Cambridge, the whole choral force being conducted by Dr. Frank Bates. Dr. A. H. Mann presided at the organ and played with scholarly care the outgoing voluntary, Mendelssohn's Sonata, No. 1. As a compliment to Dr. Mann, formerly a Norwich chorister, his Evening Service in A flat for double choir was sung. The anthem was S. S. Wesley's "Ascribe unto the Lord."

At the close of the service Dr. A. L. Peace played the subjoined pieces:—

Prelude and Fugue on the name of Bach .. .. J. S. Bach.
Andante with Variations (from the Symphony in D).. Haydn.
War March of the Priests ("Athalie") .. .. Mendelssohn.

It need hardly be said that with Dr. Peace's well-known executive ability the varied resources of the instrument were fully demonstrated. After a short service in the evening Dr. Peace gave another recital, when he played the following selection:—

Overture and Triumphal March ("Hercules").. .. Handel.
Andante with Variations in A (from a Symphony in D) Haydn.
Cantilène and Finale (from the "Sonata da Camera," No. 3) A. L. Peace.
Air, "Holsworthy Church Bells" .. .. S. S. Wesley.
Jubilee Prelude on the Chorale, "Now thank we all our God" J. G. Schneider.
Fugue, G major .. .. J. L. Krebs.
Jubilee Overture .. .. C. Haslinger.

Interspersed with the above, Beethoven's "Hallelujah" was sung by the Cathedral choir, who were joined by several parochial choirs of the city. Martin's devotional setting of "Holiest, breathe an evening blessing," was beautifully sung (unaccompanied) by the Cathedral choir. At the close of the service Dr. T. Allen, organist of Ely Cathedral, was most effectively heard in Rheinberger's Sonata in E minor.

The opening services were continued on the following day, when Mr. E. H. Lemare, organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, gave two recitals, comprising:—

Toccata in F .. .. Bach.
Romance in D flat .. .. Lemare.
Allegretto Grazioso Serenade for Strings, Op. 21) Robert Fuchs.
Waldweben ("Siegfried") .. .. Wagner.
Chant sans paroles / Romance .. .. Tschaïkowsky.
Vorspiel ("Parsifal") .. .. Wagner.
Adagio Cantabile / Finale (from Symphony in G minor, Op. 38) Lemare.
Concert-Overture in C minor .. .. Hollins.
Scherzo in F .. .. Hofmann.
Andantino in D flat / Barcarolle .. .. Lemare.
Fugue ("St. Ann's") .. .. Bach.
Angel Scene ("Hansel and Gretel") .. .. Humperdinck.
Vorspiel to third Act and Good Friday Music ("Parsifal") Wagner.
Legende (Op. 59, No. 2) / Finale to Symphony ("From the New World") .. Dvorák.

It is hardly necessary to dilate upon Mr. Lemare's capabilities as an organist. Under his clever combinations and remarkable digital dexterity, the different numbers were worthily interpreted, while the beauties of the organ received fresh development.

Recitals were announced to be given on the 19th and 20th ult., by Mr. W. S. Hoyte and Mr. C. W. Perkins respectively.

REVIEWS.

Sir Arthur Sullivan: Life-story, Letters, and Reminiscences. By Arthur Lawrence.
[James Bowden.]

JUDGED from the standpoint of the biographer and the musician, this "Life" of the popular composer is disappointing. The book seems to have been written for the clientèle of the circulating library by reason of its Worldly constructiveness. The author is evidently not overwell versed in musical matters, and it is difficult to believe that Sir Arthur Sullivan "has revised and passed the proofs of those chapters dealing with [the] incidents of his life" when we find such mis-spellings as Lizst (four times), Greig, Ousely (three times), Rev. J. M. Niel, and Dannreuter. Dean Liddell is designated "Chancellor," instead of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford; and Mr. John Francis Barnett, instead of Mr. Domenico Barnett, is stated to have formed one of the nigger troupe in the Leipzig student days (vide MUSICAL TIMES, December, 1899, p. 799).

With the exception of some extracts from Sir Arthur Sullivan's letters, the biography proper contains comparatively little more information than is to be found in the article "Sullivan" by Sir George Grove, in his "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," and Mr. Charles Willeby's monograph in his "Masters of English Music," from which quotations are made. Many omissions could be pointed out. For instance: "Seymour," Sir Arthur Sullivan's second name, is not given by his biographer, who is silent upon the opera of "Ivanhoe"; the orchestral concert given by Sullivan, in St. James's Hall, on July 11, 1866, when Jenny Lind sang and at which Moscheles was present; the pupils of Sir Arthur at the Royal Academy of Music; the lectures on music that he gave in 1870; and his professorship of "pianoforte and ballad singing" at the Crystal Palace School of Art thirty years ago. The reference to the organist period is not only exceedingly meagre, but in questionable taste, and the name of the church, St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, Kensington, at which he held his second organistship, is not even given.

Without raising the question whether a man's "Life" can be adequately and impartially written during his lifetime, it is quite certain that Mr. Lawrence's monograph cannot be accepted as a complete biography of the distinguished English musician who forms its subject. Nearly one-fourth (eighty pages) of the book is occupied with an address "About Music," delivered by Sir Arthur Sullivan, at Birmingham, in 1888; "Sullivan as a composer," an "appreciation" by Mr. B. W. Findon; and an Appendix, "comprising a complete list of Sir Arthur Sullivan's work" [should it not be "works?"] compiled by Mr. Wilfrid [? Wilfred] Bendall. The illustrations and fac-similes are interesting features of an attractively got-up and, in its way, readable book, but one which is anything but satisfactory in its biographical aspect.

Hymns for use in time of War. Nos. 1-5.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

THAT there should be a necessity for such hymns as the above is lamentable, but, the need existing, it could scarcely be more efficiently met than in the new series of hymns now being issued by Messrs. Novello. Our best hymn writers have been asked to contribute and their lines are being set by experienced church musicians.

The first is written by Arthur C. Ainger, and the verses entitled "Let God arise" blend devotion, reverence, and manliness with singular felicity. The music by John Stainer is simple, but it reflects the spirit of the lines with remarkable fidelity, and, sung as directed, the hymn would have a very impressive and stirring effect.

The second hymn, "O Lord of Hosts," by Arthur C. Benson and Charles H. Lloyd, is more devotional in character than the foregoing, and the desire for peace is more dwelt upon than victory in war. The music is flowing and expressive, and the melody is of a kind that will be quickly learnt by congregations.

The words of No. 3, "O God of Love," are those by Sir H. W. Baker in "Hymns Ancient and Modern,"

No. 376; but they have been allied to a hitherto unpublished composition by J. B. Dykes, from a complete collection of this composer's tunes now in the press. It is practically a prayer for the restoration of peace, and the character of the music accentuates the meaning of the words in a happy manner.

The fourth hymn, written by the Rev. W. H. Draper, has a patriotic ring, and the setting by John E. West echoes this sentiment. It is one of those hymns which mentally invigorate the singer.

"From homes of quiet peace," which forms the fifth of the series, is also written by the Rev. W. H. Draper, but is essentially devotional, the devotion that is sustained by faith and resignation, and these attributes are reflected in the music supplied by J. Varley Roberts. The hymn would close a service impressively.

Musiciens et Philosophes. By Maurice Kufferath. [Paris: Felix Alcan.]

WHAT is art? is the first question to which the author addresses himself, or, in other words, to Tolstoi's essay bearing that title. The Russian writer considers it a "social function," M. Kufferath as an "activité vitale." Tolstoi casts aside the metaphysical theory of art being some mysterious manifestation of beauty, also the physiological "inward creative impulse." Art for him is not even "the expression of emotions," is not the creation of pleasurable objects, but a "means of communication amongst men." M. Kufferath has little trouble in showing that any social rôle which art plays is an effect, not a cause.

In the opinion of Tolstoi, true art must have a moral basis; M. Kufferath argues that a moral basis may add to the value of a work, but does not determine it. By morality, Tolstoi understands that which religion teaches; by religion, that which is to be found in the Gospels, not expounded, however, by any particular Christian sect or church, but by Tolstoi in his essay, entitled "My Religion." The Russian enthusiast thus mixes up art and religion in apparently inextricable confusion. M. Kufferath remarks that although there is a striking analogy between the religious and the artistic sentiment, they are not identical. With such terms as "art" and "religion," incapable of any short, pithy definition, discussion naturally becomes more or less vague and unsatisfactory, and from such charge M. Kufferath himself does not entirely escape; he, however, shows clearly that Tolstoi is more enthusiast than philosopher. In these busy times one feels hardly inclined to study Tolstoi's diffuse and often contradictory statements concerning art; so M. Kufferath does well to point out that Tolstoi's views and reasonings lead him to regard Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony as bad art, because it transmits no religious sentiment; because it does not tend to unite men; and because it is artificial, long, and obscure. Tolstoi's exposition of the Gospels, for aught we know, may be profound, may be true, but, after this criticism of Beethoven's symphony, we think most of our readers will agree with M. Kufferath that he at any rate talks on one subject which he does not understand. Our critic, be it noted, points out the weakness of Tolstoi's musical arguments, his self-contradictions, but recognises fully the profundity and truth of many of his observations and the loftiness of his aims.

From Tolstoi he passes on to Nietzsche, a man of very different stamp. It is somewhat sad to find him describing and discussing the opinions of one who, though not dead, speaketh not; of one who at first strongly admired, and then strongly opposed Wagner, but who is neither for nor against; of one, in fact, whose mind is now a perfect blank. Yet in this section of the book there are many admirable pages. Nietzsche, when talking about music, was, at any rate, talking about an art which he had studied. Comments on remarks and criticisms made by him concerning various composers will probably prove more interesting to general readers than the discussion concerning Wagner, his art views, and art works. Though some of Nietzsche's criticisms are couched in bitter, nay, cruel language, there is generally at bottom, as M. Kufferath justly remarks, a grain of truth. This book, treating of serious matters in a clear, and at times eloquent style, deserves the attention of readers who take their art seriously

Novello's Parish Choir Book. Nos. 433-436. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

Two settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, by Edwin H. Lemare, merit the attention of choirmasters. The first in F, No. 433 of this series, is suitable for church festivals, being of a somewhat elaborate character; but the music does not present exceptional difficulties, and a well-trained choir would be interested in the contrapuntal passages. The words, "Holy is His Name," are set in eight parts, pianissimo, and the following verse is written for a tenor soloist. The last verse is set for soprano solo, partially supported by the choir, and the Gloria contains a fugal portion of spirited character. The Nunc dimittis is led off by the basses in unison, answered by the tenors and subsequently by the altos, the full choir entering fortissimo, after an organ prelude of twelve bars, at the words "To be a light." The Gloria is the same as that of the Magnificat.

The other setting of the Evening Canticles, No. 434, is in A, and is also suitable for festivals, being designed upon an extended scale. The executive demands of the music are more than those of the preceding setting, the organ part in particular being more independent. The chorus writing contains some effective imitatory passages and strong contrasts. Certain verses are intrusted to soprano, tenor, and bass soloists, and the music for the Gloria is imposing. The Nunc dimittis opens with a baritone solo of sixteen bars The subsequent choral writing is decidedly effective. The Gloria opens like that of the Magnificat, but it is shortened and more decisive.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare has also provided No. 435, consisting of a Pater Noster and final Amen. The former is intended to be sung unaccompanied, and, well rendered, it would be most impressive. It demands a choir sufficiently numerous to be divided into five parts and capable of singing pianissimo in a sustained manner, but otherwise the part-writing presents no difficulties. The final Amen is three-fold, and in four parts, and is an admirable example of the Amen set in four bars.

Mr. Arthur Somervell's setting in G of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, in true Church style, forms No. 436. The chorus writing is made interesting by entrances in imitation, and a specially happy effect is produced at the words "He hath scattered the proud," where the voices are treated fugally. The Nunc dimittis is extremely expressive and melodious, and written with remarkable smoothness.

Novello's Short Anthems. Nos. 90-97. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

RECENT additions to this admirable series of anthems are seven, composed by Frederick Iliffe. The first of these, "Awake up, my glory" (No. 90), is a good example of how much variety in choral writing can be secured by simple means in a short work by a practised writer. Passages in unison are effectively contrasted with others in four parts, and the organ accompaniment, while giving good support to the voices, possesses considerable independence.

"Fret not thyself because of the ungodly," No. 91, opens with a smoothly written Adagio, which is followed by an Allegro moderato, the music of the latter section reflecting in a happy manner the confident sentiment of the text, "Delight thou in the Lord, and He shall give thee thy heart's desire."

"I look for the Lord; my soul doth wait for Him," which forms No. 92, is similar in design to the foregoing. It begins with an Adagio of devotional character, which might be sung first as a quartet and subsequently repeated by the choir with excellent effect. This, after a brief organ interlude, is followed by the second section in quicker tempo, the music becoming appropriately more confident in tone. Choirs which can sing a real pianissimo might make certain portions of this anthem most impressive.

"Lord, I will call upon Thee, haste Thee unto me" (No. 93), as indicated by the title, is a supplication, and the music, of Mendelssohnian melodiousness, accentuates the devotional spirit of the text.

"My song shall be of mercy and judgment" (No. 94) is bright and winning in expression. The vocal part-writing will be found interesting, the principal subject being delivered in turn by each section of the chorus.

"O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," No. 95, opens with a cheerful and pleasing chorus in four parts. This is effectively contrasted by some passages in unison, after which the chorus again enters in four parts. The last page may require some practice to do it justice, but it is by no means difficult, and the result will well compensate any extra trouble.

A martial ring pervades the opening of No. 96, "The Lord is King." A fine contrast is obtained at the words "He is Holy," and the section in chorale style is very impressive. There are great possibilities for a choir in this anthem.

"Worship and praise the Lord," No. 97, possesses the merit of being simple and effective, variety and contrast being secured by means within the capacities of any choir worthy of the name.

Zamora's Spell. Cantata for Treble Voices. Words by Edward Oxenford. Music by P. Tottenham Lucas. [Charles Vincent.]

THE story of this cantata concerns a young knight, Florian by name, who is in love with and is loved by Sybil, the daughter of a Count. He is not a dark-dyed villain as generally associated with this title in romance, but he has been indiscreet in his conversation with a sorceress, Zamora, and she has "turned nasty" and woven a spell over Sybil that will cause her to die on her twenty-first birthday. Sybil's extremity is Florian's opportunity. Like a certain Prince of fairy-lore he determines to break the spell, and for this purpose separates himself from his friends while hunting. It is at this point that the cantata begins with a gay and spirited hunting chorus. Florian seems, however, to be uncertain what to do, so like a practical man he takes a nap by a lake. There is more in this lake than meets the hero's eye. Naiads rise and give Florian a ring, which shall render Sybil "safe against all spells for ever." This causes a heated conversation between Zamora and Florian, but he triumphantly guards the prize for his "masterly inactivity," and the cantata concludes with the chorus singing twenty-eight times, "Clang out the bells," after which there can be no doubt of the hero and heroine living happily together for ever after. The music makes little demands upon executive means, and is bright and melodious. It contains pleasing solos for a soprano and a contralto voice, and the choruses, written in two parts, include one in a canon in the octave.

Three Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte: Legend. Canzona. Idyll. By Jules Koopman. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

VERY suitable for young players. The "Legend" and "Canzona" are written in the first position. The "Idyll" is more difficult and makes an effective solo.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE'S "BALLAD OF THE CLAMPHERDOWN."

THIS setting of one of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's most stirring poems of British prowess under adverse circumstances has all the elements of popularity. It is breezy and thoroughly patriotic in spirit, the composer having wisely ignored the satire observable in several of the lines. The subject is regarded from the heroic point of view, and the result is so satisfactory that the listener is speedily convinced that the best method of treatment was by dispensing with soloists and employing chorus and orchestra alone. By allotting the dialogue portions—the utterances of the crew and of the captain of the ill-fated war-ship—to the tenors and basses respectively, sufficient dramatic variety is secured, whilst certain imitative effects in the orchestration contribute a picturesqueness quite consonant with the theme. The composition is instinct with infectious animation, and it certainly does credit to Sir Frederick Bridge's reputation as a conscientious musician. The reception at the Albert Hall, on the 7th ult., when, under the composer's direction, it obtained a bright interpretation by the choir, was enthusiastically favourable.

The novelty was followed by Sullivan's "The Golden Legend," with Miss Lillian Blauvelt, Miss Giulia Ravogli, Messrs. Ben Davies and Douglas Powell in the solo parts. An exceptionally good performance resulted, some fine points in the instrumentation being brought into special prominence.

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN'S SYMPHONY AND WAGNER CONCERTS.

UPON Alexander Glazounoff used to rest the fond hopes of those who rightly or wrongly expect Slavonic composers to shape the course and make the history of music in the near future. To us the gifted young Russian has proved a disappointment, for every fresh work from his pen seems to take him farther away from the path that leads towards greatness. He gains in facility of execution as he pours forth work after work with the ease of a Schubert, but he seems to exercise less and less self-criticism in the selection of his thematic material for these works, as well as in the sweet indulgence of publishing with his kind compatriot, M. Belaieff, of Leipzig, most obliging and sumptuous of publishers.

M. Glazounoff's latest novelty, produced with his usual loving solicitude for Russian art by Mr. Henry J. Wood, at Mr. Newman's Symphony Concert of November 25, was a Suite drawn from a ballet, "Raymonda" (Op. 57), ten movements of greatly varying character, some of them of such short duration that even much finer music could not possibly have made an effect in such small forms. They include more or less fantastic Dances, Fanfares, Preludes, Entr'actes, &c., and, with the exception of the final number ("Triumph of Love and Nuptial Fête"), not one leaves a satisfactory impression, though they are invariably scored with the rarest art of an acknowledged master amongst orchestral colourists. We doubt whether we shall ever hear the Suite again, for its reception was chilling. That it was played with the most wonderful finish goes without saying. The Symphony was Tschaïkowsky's gorgeous No. 5 (E minor), with that most voluptuous of symphonic slow movements, and the dashing, exciting Finale, which always suggests a battle with triumphant issue to us (a cavalry charge and much flashing of sabres bare, for choice). Mr. Wood and his orchestra were at their best in this Symphony, but why the conductor should completely ignore the composer's distinct direction, "molto più tranquillo," when attacking the yearning syncopated subject in the first Allegro, is a mystery. Those who heard Herr Nikisch's performance in the same hall some years ago will remember the great effect he produced with just this theme by taking it at a slower speed. Mr. Wood scampers over it in feverish haste. Beethoven's "Leonore" (No. 3) and Brahms's "Academical Festival" Overtures (the former beautifully, the latter very indifferently played) and songs for Mr. Van Hoose completed the programme.

At the fourth concert we heard Tschaïkowsky's Third Symphony in D (Op. 29), a weak work, quite unworthy of the master who conceived the great Nos. 5 and 6—in fact, sheer dulness long drawn out. M. Jean Gérardy played the solo in E. Lalo's Violoncello Concerto with his usual charm, Miss Blauvelt sang beautifully as usual, and Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, the "Walkürenritt," and the "Don Giovanni" Overture completed the programme.

The last two of Mr. Robert Newman's series of Wagner concerts took place respectively on November 27 and the 4th ult., when Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Seventh Symphonies were beautifully played by Mr. Wood, followed by familiar Wagner selections. The vocalists were Madame Lucile Hill, Miss Kirkby Lunn, Miss Lillian Blauvelt, and Mr. Louis Frohlich.

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN'S TESTIMONIAL CONCERT.

On the 13th ult. the conductor and members of the Queen's Hall orchestra gave a Testimonial concert to Mr. Robert Newman, "In recognition of his services to Musical Art." The programme was admirably chosen, and, considering that it consisted wholly of very popular pieces, in which the orchestra has over and over again proved its right to be considered second to perhaps no other orchestra in the world, we were surprised not to find a large audience. Let us hope that most fickle master, the Public, will pay the good and faithful servant—Mr. Robert Newman—the reward of a crowded house what time his orchestra and British musicians generally will offer him a "Testimonial concert in recognition of his great services to Native Art"! May the day soon come.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

M. EDMOND DEPRET'S "TE DEUM."

AMIDST the multiplicity of orchestral and instrumental concerts which now claim the attention of the public, there is some danger of choral singing being neglected, and consequently it is specially pleasing to be able to record a choral concert at the Queen's Hall, the principal work at which was Sir Arthur Sullivan's familiar cantata "The Golden Legend." The soloists engaged were Madame Ella Russell, Miss Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Randolph Coward, and Mr. Andrew Black, upon whose singing in such well-known music it is quite unnecessary to comment.

The cantata was preceded by the first performance in England of a setting of the "Te Deum," by M. Edmond Depret, a Belgian composer, much esteemed by his countrymen. The work is laid out for four soloists, chorus, and orchestra. Voices and instruments are written for with manifest skill and knowledge of effect, and, although the music is not great, it is sincere, devotional, and in several portions impressive. Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," with Madame Ella Russell as soloist, completed an attractive programme. Mr. James Coward showed much skill in the duties of conductor.

MR. W. H. THORLEY'S MUSIC.

IN the June number of THE MUSICAL TIMES of last year we said: "we shall probably hear more of Mr. Thorley," and we have. He is manifestly a musician who grasps the situation, which is that there is little chance of an English composer getting his works performed in London unless he is able and willing to provide the money as well as the music. Having written various works, Mr. Thorley engaged, on April 28 last, a competent orchestra, and demanded criticism at St. James's Hall. The "press" attended, patted him on the back, and—no more was heard of him and his music. It is a way we have in London. But, on the 5th ult., Mr. Thorley came again, bringing two more novelties. Moreover, he showed his great ability as a conductor by securing a most praiseworthy rendering of Beethoven's Choral Symphony.

Mr. Thorley's music thoroughly deserves recognition. It is earnest, solid, and sane, always scholarly, and frequently something more, stirring the imagination of the listener to a "thousand fantasies." The Prelude for orchestra with which he opened his concert showed clearly his skill in construction, design, and orchestration. The other novelty testified to his gift for vocal writing. This was an "Ave Verum" for mixed chorus unaccompanied, and is an excellent example of Capella music. The remaining works from his pen were the symphonic poem "Macbeth," in which the scoring admirably suggests the atmosphere of Shakespeare's tragedy, the spirited "Allegro Symphonique" in B flat, and the impressive "dramatic scene," "Der Tod," the solo part of which was sung by Mr. Francis Harford, as at the previous concert. It is only necessary to add that the soloists in the Choral Symphony were Madame Bertha Rossow, Miss Florence Power, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Francis Harford.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S "THE ROSE OF PERSIA."

THE brilliant series of comic operas composed by Sir Arthur Sullivan invested with exceptional interest the production, on November 29, at the Savoy Theatre, of "The Rose of Persia; or, The Story-teller and the Slave," and curiosity was awakened owing to the gifted composer having accepted a libretto by Captain Basil Hood, with whom he had not previously collaborated.

The book is a clever blending and transcription of two stories in the "Arabian Nights." Hassan, a wealthy philanthropist, is declared by his chief wife, Dancing Sunbeam, to be mad, because he "prefers the society of beggars to the beggars of society," and she calls to her aid the ungentle offices of a priest, Abdallah, who, to gain Hassan's wealth, describes his mode of life to the Sultan as scandalous. Hassan is further implicated by the Sultana taking refuge in his house, she having left the imperial palace on an expedition to discover what the outside world is like. Abundant material is thus provided for amusing dialogue and humorous situations, and also for the skilful handicraft of the composer.

Speaking broadly, Sir Arthur Sullivan's music is less distinctive in regard to tune than that of his early operas; but in matters of detail and general treatment it is more elaborate and on a higher artistic plane, the consummate knowledge of effect displayed being a very striking feature of the work. It is music that to hear once is to want to hear again and again. The numbers to which this high praise particularly applies are Dancing Sunbeam's song, "Oh, Life has put into my hand," as beautiful as anything to be found in any of the operas of the series; the music at the Beggars' entertainment, which includes a vigorous drinking song, a dainty trio, and a dance on "a ground bass" which is worked up to a most exciting climax; the thoroughly Sullivanesque octet, "The Sultan's Executioner," the extraordinary Dervish quartet, and the charming chorus, "Oh, fit the arrows of respect to bows of metaphor."

In the second Act notable numbers are the duet, "Suppose—I say, suppose"; the tenor song, "Our tale is told"; the exquisite quartet, "Till to-morrow"; the delightfully humorous septet, "It has reached me a lady named Hubbard"; and Hassan's song, "There was once a small street Arab," in the music of which the heart of humanity seems to beat.

A few words are due to the exponents to whom in great measure the hearty reception of the opera on the first night was attributable. Mr. Walter Passmore showed great discretion and skill as Hassan, Mr. H. A. Lytton preserved the best traditions of the Savoy in his embodiment of the Sultan, and Mr. Robert Evett, as Yussuf the story-teller, sang with great taste and dramatic perception. Miss Rosina Brandram also sang charmingly as Dancing Sunbeam, and mention is deserved by Miss Beach Yaw as the Sultana, and Misses Jessie Rose, Louie Pounds, Emmie Owen, and Isabel Jay. The choruses were excellently sung, the mounting was most artistic, and at the close the librettist and composer, who conducted, were heartily cheered on their appearance in front of the curtain.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND CONCERTS.

Two interesting programmes have been carried through at Queen's Hall by the capable orchestra conducted by Cavalière L. Zavertal. On the first occasion (November 24) the symphony was Beethoven's No. 4, the interpretation of which did not lack either dignity or impulse. The differing spirit of Liszt's second Rhapsody and of Mackenzie's bright Overture to "The Little Minister" was satisfactorily caught, and some admirable pianissimo effects were produced in slight pieces by Bizet and Chaminade respectively.

Bizet and Liszt were also in evidence at the concert on the 15th ult., the former being represented by his dainty "Petite Suite" and the Hungarian master by his third Rhapsody. The contrast was great, but the band, like the conductor, again proved equal to their task. The most substantial item was Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, which in every respect obtained justice. The slow movement was carefully played, and the March could not have been given more crisply, whilst the final section—the ghostly ride—was invested with all the requisite vigour. A successful afternoon ended with G. Wolseley Cox's Overture "In May."

MESSRS. ARBOS, Haydn Inwards, Emil Kreuz and Rubio, and Signor Sobrino (pianist) start, in a few days, for Spain, where they have been engaged to play at concerts in several towns.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The concert given by the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, on the 14th ult., at the Queen's Hall, in aid of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund for Soldiers and Sailors, testified to the excellence of work being done at the Institution. A spirited performance of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's stirring "Britannia" Overture opened the afternoon, a "Harvest Dance" by Hamerik was brightly sung by the choir, and a commendable endeavour was made to sing the final scene from the first Act of "Tannhäuser." Violet Williams Freeman, in the second and third movements of Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto in E minor; Wilton Cole, in Dr. Villiers Stanford's clever Variations for pianoforte and orchestra on "Down among the dead men"; and Elsie E. Horne, in the first movement of Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, evinced decided musical aptitude combined with considerable executive ability, and much promise was shown by Irene Penso, a juvenile violinist. Ida Mann sang Mr. Edward Elgar's fine song "The Swimmer," from Op. 37, and Kate Holbrook recited with commendable distinctness Matthew Arnold's poem "Parting," to a cleverly written pianoforte accompaniment by Mr. Walter P. Weekes. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The Sainton-Dolby Prize has been awarded to Christine Warner (a native of Melton Mowbray). The examiners were Miss Margaret Hoare, Mrs. Helen Trust, and Mr. W. Braxton Smith (chairman). The Heathcote Long Prize has been awarded to Felix G. Swinstead (a native of London). The examiners were Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Messrs. Algernon Ashton and A. Heathcote Long (chairman). The Rutson Memorial Prizes have been awarded as follows: contralto, Edith Nutter (a native of London); bass, Henry Rojas (of London). The examiners were Mrs. Cecilia M. Hutchinson and Messrs. Robert Hilton and Henry Blower. The Competition for the Lady Jenkinson Thalberg Scholarship took place on the 15th ult., and was awarded to Felix S. Swinstead (a native of London). The examiners were Messrs. Carlo Albanesi, Walter Fitton, Tobias Matthay, A. Schloesser, and Henry R. Eyers (chairman). The Competition for the Bonamy Dobree Prize also took place on the same day, and the Prize was awarded to Arthur C. Maney (a native of London). The examiners were Messrs. J. Edwd. Hambleton, William C. Hann, and C. H. Allen Gill (chairman). The Competition for the Westmorland Scholarship took place on the 16th ult., when the Scholarship was awarded to Lilian M. D. Kent (a native of London). The examiners were Madame Agnes Larkcom and Messrs. W. Nicholl and Richard Cummings (chairman). The Competition for the Potter Exhibition took place on the same day, when the Exhibition was awarded to Arthur Newstead (a native of London). The examiners were Messrs. Henry R. Eyers, Ernest Kiver, Thomas B. Knott, Tobias Matthay, A. Schloesser, Septimus Webbe, and Oscar Beringer (chairman). The Hine Prize has been awarded to Edwin York Bowen (of London). The examiners were Messrs. Ernest Ford, Arthur E. Godfrey, and Henry Gadsby.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

MOZART'S "MAGIC FLUTE."

Special interest was attached to the operatic performance by the pupils of the Royal College of Music, on the 12th ult., at the Lyceum Theatre, owing to the selection of Mozart's last opera, "The Magic Flute," this work not having been presented in London for many years, on account, of course, of the utter absurdity of its libretto. The florid solos of The Queen of Night were courageously attacked by E. Delia Mason and sung with greater success than might have been expected. Cicely Gleeson-White, as Pamina, gave promise of becoming a dramatic soprano of exceptional ability, and Ralph Courtier-Dutton, as Papageno, the bird man, combined good use of a musical baritone voice with a dramatic perception that raised his embodiment considerably above the achievements of the average student. There should be a bright future for Mr. Dutton. Gwilym Evans sang with taste as Tamino, but he has much to learn with regard to acting. Walter Hyde, who personated Monostatos, has a voice which as yet seems to be imperfectly controlled, and his singing was singularly unequal in merit. Edward Gore, as Sarastro, made effective use of a fine bass voice; The Speaker of the Temple, personated by Samuel Epstein, indicated his having received excellent elocutionary lessons, and the trio singing of Esmé Atherden, Mabel Bond, and Lalla Parry, who appeared as the dark-robed attendants of the Queen, and of Phœbe Parsons, Maud Turner, and Grace Winter as the Genii of the Temple, testified to careful and intelligent rehearsal; Esmé Atherden also showed skill in the part of Papagena. The freshness of the voices and precision of the chorus-singing were very pleasing features of the performance, and great praise is due to the orchestra, which played with notable appreciation of the spirit of the music, under the direction of Dr. Villiers Stanford. The scenery provided, and the attempts to change it, reflected little credit upon the resources of the Lyceum Theatre.

AWARDS AND SCHOLARSHIPS.

The following awards were made at the conclusion of the Christmas term, on the 16th ult.: Council Exhibitions—Ethel M. Brigstock (pianoforte) and Ethel Wilson (pianoforte), £12 10s. each; Lalla Parry (singing), £10; Rutland Boughton (composition), £7 10s.; Percy L. Scaife (organ), £7 10s. The Hopkinson gold medal for pianoforte playing, Hester E. Hardman. The Forsyth prize of nine volumes of Hallé's Pianoforte School, William A. Scott (scholar). The Dove prize (value £13), Florence Smith (scholar).

Preliminary examinations for sixteen free open Scholarships will be held on the 31st inst. in various local centres throughout the United Kingdom. The scholarships will be allotted as follows: Singing (5), Pianoforte (3), Organ (2), Violin (2), Violoncello (2), Flute (1), Trumpet (1). The scholarships are open to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects within the age stated in the particulars issued to applicants. They entitle the holders to free musical education at the College, and are, as a rule, tenable for three years. In some cases grants towards maintenance are added. Further information and official forms of application can be obtained on application to Mr. Frank Pownall, Registrar, Royal College of Music, Prince Consort Road, South Kensington.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

GOUNOD'S "MIRELLA."

There was much that merits warm praise in the performance of Gounod's "Mirella," on the 6th ult., by the members of the operatic class at the Guildhall School of Music. In Gertrude Gardner, who sustained the title-part, the School possesses a vocalist of decided promise; her voice is rich in quality and powerful in tone. Miss Stewart Dyer, as the Witch, also gave testimony of having received excellent tuition, singing with appropriate emphasis and acting with dramatic perception. Other female characters were ably sustained by Nellie Schroder, Eva Hardy, and Ethel Dawson. Henry H. Sowerbutts has very much to learn as an actor, but he made effective use of his light tenor voice in the music of Vincenzo; Franklin Head was inclined to be melo-dramatic as the disappointed lover, but earnestness is a good thing in a student. Mention is also due of Edwin C. Ashford and Henry J. Corner, who respectively appeared as Raimondo and Ambrogio. The choruses were admirably rendered, the freshness of the voices being delightful, and great credit is due to Mr. Hugh Moss for the excellence of the stage management. The dance, arranged by Mr. B. Soutten, was also a very pleasing feature, and still more so was the excellence of the orchestral playing, under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Ford. The new scenery, painted by Mr. W. T. Hemsley, was most effective.

The School boasts three orchestral classes, the third of which demonstrated its efficiency on the 13th ult., in the large hall of the City of London School, when Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony received a neat and expressive interpretation. The Overture to "Der Freischütz" was among the other orchestral works ably performed under the watchful conductorship of Mr. W. H. Cummings, who is to be congratulated on presiding over so efficient a staff and so many capable pupils.

DOHNÁNYI'S NEW QUARTET.

THE spontaneity and charm of Herr Ernst von Dohnányi's Pianoforte Quintet in C minor raised much expectation concerning the String Quartet in A (Op. 11). This work was played for the first time on the 18th ult., at the opening concert, at the Queen's Hall, of a new Association styled the London Chamber Music Union, founded and directed by Signor Carlo Ducci. In considerable degree the quartet was disappointing. The gifted composer-pianist is nearly two years older since the quintet was produced, but the quartet does not show advance, rather, indeed, retrogression in respect of design. This is specially noticeable in the opening movement, an Allegro built up with excellent themes and containing beautiful sections and happy fancies, but presenting to the mind much the same effect as a shop window full of beautiful articles, but so ineffectively arranged as to leave no permanent impression. We draw special attention to this fault of construction, because it is one to which composers of Herr Dohnányi's nationality are by temperament peculiarly prone, and this tendency to vagueness of form is noticeable in another recent work, the Sonata in B flat minor for violoncello and pianoforte, also played on this occasion. No fault can be found, however, with the second number of the quartet, an Allegretto grazioso wholly excellent, well knit, and full of vitality. But in the slow movement comes backsliding to the error of the opening number. Its themes seem to reflect the romantic dreams of youth, but they tire the listener before they are told. Excellence returns in the Finale vivace, essentially Hungarian in expression, abounding in exuberance and graceful fancy, virile, exhilarating, and brilliant music. The work was most sympathetically and ably interpreted by Messrs. Pécskai, Hundt, Ferir, and Lebell. Its composer was called to the platform and much applauded.

RICHMOND PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

AT the concert given by this flourishing Society on the 19th ult. a first hearing was accorded to "The Nativity," a Christmas cantata, the words of which are taken from Milton's "Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity," and composed for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, by the Society's conductor, Mr. James Brown. An effective orchestral prelude is followed by a five-part chorus for mixed voices, "This is the month, and this the happy morn." The sopranos and altos alone are next heard in a four-part chorus, "Say, Heavenly Muse," the accompaniment to which is very daintily written. The divided tenors and basses then take up the strain, and the voices are afterwards united in six-part harmony. A solo, "But peaceful was the night," with semi-choral episodes, leads up to a well-developed five-part fugal chorus, "Ring out, ye crystal spheres," with which the work appropriately concludes. Miss Winifred Wynne did full justice to the solo part, and the chorus and orchestra rendered excellent service. The work was warmly received, and Mr. Brown is to be congratulated upon a very successful performance. The programme also included Bach's cantata "God so loved the World," with Miss Wynne and Mr. Henry Bouchier as soloists; Liza Lehmann's vocal scena from "Endymion," in which Miss Wynne earned a well-deserved recall, and some orchestral pieces.

MR. FREDERICK A. COX delivered a lecture on "The Madrigal in Shakespeare's Time," at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus, on the 7th ult. The musical illustrations were supplied by the Amphion Glee-Men.

LONDON CONCERTS, &c.

CONCERTS.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS. Mr. Arthur Chappell concluded his autumn series at St. James's Hall, on the 16th ult., but the only novelty produced since our last issue was the first performance in England of Madame Liza Lehmann's new song cycle, "In Memoriam," which was sung by Mr. Kennerley Rumford, accompanied by the composer, on November 25. The text of this consists of a selection from Tennyson's fine poem, and in style the music is similar to Madame Lehmann's cycle "In a Persian Garden."

Mr. FRANSELLA'S SELECT ORCHESTRA, consequent on remonstrance from the press, played music by British composers only at the last of the series given by the "Burnand Orchestral Concert Company." The selection included Mr. Frewin's clever "Titania" Overture, three pleasing pieces by Mr. Edward Elgar, Mr. Percy Pitt's pretty "Air de Ballet" for strings, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's attractive "Four Characteristic Waltzes" (Op. 22), and a new Suite entitled "Petit Pantomime," by Mr. G. Clutsam. The last-named consists of three numbers, severally named "Clown and Pantalon," "Harlequin," and "Colombine." The first of these is the best, the music possessing vivacity with a touch of humour. The second number is decidedly pleasing, and the third is graceful and dainty as a Colombine should be. Pianoforte, violin, and violoncello solos were effectively played by Miss Grace Ellis, Mr. John Dunn, and M. Jacques Renard respectively, and the vocalists were Miss Grey-Burnand and Mr. Sydney Barraclough.

At the BRITISH CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT a new Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello, by Mr. W. Y. Hurlstone, an ex-scholar of the Royal College of Music, was produced on the 5th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. This work opens with a vigorous and masculine Allegro, which is followed by an expressive Adagio and a singularly attractive Scherzo. The Finale, in rondo form, is less interesting and might be revised with advantage. The sonata was effectively rendered by Miss Ethel Bauer and Mr. Herbert Walenn. Another new work produced on this occasion was "Four Mosaics" for violin with pianoforte accompaniment, by Mr. Alfred Wall. These comprise a graceful Moderato espressivo in B, a bright Allegro vivo in E, an Andante sostenuto—too much sustained—in the same key, and a lively Moderato quasi vivace in B. They were neatly played by Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe and Mr. Ernest Fowles. A new composition by Dr. Walker, a Sonata in C for viola and violoncello, was produced for the first time on the 19th ult., at the concluding performance of the sixth season. This consists of three movements of moderate length, the best of which is the first, an Andante quasi adagio of poetic character. The Sonata was excellently played by Mr. Alfred Hobday and Mr. Ernest Fowles.

The NORTH-WEST LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY presented an attractive programme at the Hampstead Conservatoire, on the 13th ult., with Dr. C. H. Lloyd's "Hero and Leander" and Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty," each of which deserves more frequent hearing in the Metropolis. Between these came instrumental excerpts (not previously performed) from Mr. W. H. Speer's fairy opera "Cinderella." These pieces, particularly the four dances at the Prince's ball, proved tasteful and piquant. Of the poetic charm of the two cantatas and their finished musical workmanship both chorus and orchestra were duly observant. The soloists were Miss Mabel Berrey, Madame Lena Law, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Harold Charles. Dr. Lloyd conducted his own work, after which Mr. W. H. Speer took the bâton.

The LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC students performed "Così fan Tutte," at St. George's Hall, on the 19th ult. Though the voice of the prompter was occasionally detrimental to the stage situation, it was pleasant to again hear Mozart's graceful music rendered with indications of appreciation of its melodic charm. As the intriguing waiting-maid, Despina, Lily Boutroy sang and acted brightly, and decided vocal ability was manifested by Constance Leslie and Daisy Irving as the coquettish ladies, Isidora and Dorabella. The three men's parts had spirited representatives in Murray Graham, Stanley Verde, and Charles Earldon. The accompaniments were carefully played, under the direction of Mr. A. Pollitzer. Before the opera diplomas and medals were presented to successful students.

Signor A. Bocchi, conductor of the orchestra at the Prince's Hall Restaurant, Piccadilly, is to be commended for going out of the beaten track in selecting music to be performed during gastronomic operations. From a list of selected pieces recently performed under his able direction, we find the names of Sullivan, Cowen, German, Ford, Coleridge-Taylor, Henschel, Waring, H. M. Higgs, and John E. West, which shows that English composers are not neglected at the expense of hashed-up frivolities by foreign nonentities. Signor Bocchi gave a very successful Matinée at Kensington Town Hall, on the 1st ult., which was attended with marked success, one of the principal features being the violin playing of his pupil, Miss May Harrison. Signor Bocchi's sextet was also performed.

The Victoria Madrigal Society began its season at St. Martin's Town Hall, on November 28, with an interesting selection of unaccompanied part-music, both ancient and modern. Among the former were Morley's "I follow, lo, the footing," and "My bonny lass," Marenzio's "So saith my fair," and Gibbons's "Round about her chariot." These, as well as Leslie's "My love is fair," Pinsuti's "The silent tide," Blanchard's "Scottish War Song" (for men's voices only), and other pieces, were sung with much refinement and evenly balanced tone under the direction of Dr. G. Stanley Murray. Vocal solos were given by Miss Stanley Lucas, Mr. Herbert Emlyn, and Mr. W. A. Peterkin, and Miss Marion Jay contributed violin pieces.

The Bermondsey Settlement Choral Society gave an excellent concert, in Bermondsey Town Hall, on November 23, chiefly under the able direction of Mr. John E. Borland. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Athalie," Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, and Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The vocal soloists in "Athalie" were Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Agatha Percy, and Miss Marian Foster, Mr. W. H. Jones reciting the verses. Beethoven's Symphony was admirably played and both chorus and orchestra were heard to great advantage in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata, which was conducted by the composer and heartily applauded. The tenor song, "Onaway! awake, beloved!" was sung by Mr. Henry Franckiss.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Frederiksen opened their annual concert, on the 2nd ult., at the Steinway Hall, with the first performance in England of a Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Op. 15), by M. Gustaf Hägg, a Swedish composer little known in this country, born in November, 1867, and now living in Stockholm. The majority of the themes are expressive, but in the first two movements they are over-developed. The next number is vigorous and gay, but the Finale is the weakest portion of the work, which consequently results in leaving an unsatisfactory impression. The executants were the concert-givers and Mr. Herbert Walenn. Miss Stanley Lucas sang.

Messrs. Walenn began their fourth season of chamber concerts, on November 28, at St. James's Hall, with the first performance in London of a Pianoforte Trio (Op. 165) by Nicolai von Wilm, a composer chiefly known by his harp and pianoforte music. The Trio comprises three movements, of which the best is the second, an Andante, possessing expressive themes treated with musicianly skill. The work was well rendered by Madame Fisher Sobell and Mr. Gerald and Mr. Herbert Walenn, all of whom subsequently played solos in an artistic manner. The vocalists were Miss Elizabeth Patterson, Miss Rosa Green, and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

Miss Ethel Barns is already known as a clever violinist and composer of small pieces, and the Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte from her pen, which she played with Miss Mary Olson, on the 6th ult., at the Steinway Hall, will certainly add to her repute as a musician. A commendable feature of the Sonata is the terse and deft manner in which the themes are treated. The three movements severally suggest Grieg, Rubinstein, and Brahms; but although this may indicate lack of originality, it also shows wide reading and familiar acquaintance with masters of musical art. Mr. Charles Phillips was the vocalist.

The Trinity College (London) students did well to reproduce Gade's graceful cantata "Psyche," at their concert in St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 12th ult. Without sensationalism or in any way deviating from the principles of pure art, this work displays thoroughly poetic treatment of a beautiful theme. The cantata is nearly twenty years old, but the Danish composer's workmanship is as fresh and grateful to the ear as it was when first performed at the Birmingham Festival of 1882. It received a highly creditable interpretation under the conductorship of Dr. Henry J. Pringuer.

St. Martin's Hall was the scene, on the 8th ult., of a ballad concert for the benefit of St. Martin's Guild. Amongst the vocalists may be mentioned Miss Tennison Collins, who sang with nice expression Miss M. V. White's "The Spring has come" and Chaminade's "The little silver ring." Miss Benson displayed a remarkably fine quality of voice, and Miss Kempton made a direct appeal to the audience, which met with due response and a redemand. Miss Ivy Woods (a born actress) delivered with much piquancy several examples of the English chansonnette. Mr. J. E. Robinson was the accompanist.

Mrs. Ernest Newton and Miss Minnie Chamberlain gave a successful concert at Steinway Hall on November 28, when they were assisted by Mr. Jack Robertson and Mr. Griffith Percy (vocalists), the Ariel Quartet, Miss Fanny Woolf (violin), Miss Muriel Handley (violoncello), and Mr. F. J. Nettlefold (recitations). Two songs, composed by Mr. Ernest Newton—entitled, "To-day, love, is to-day," and "Ailsa mine"—were sung with much acceptance by Mrs. Ernest Newton and Mr. Jack Robertson respectively. Mr. Ernest Newton was a skilful accompanist.

Miss Cecilia Gates gave her last chamber concert at the Crystal Palace, on the 11th ult. It was distinguished by the first performance of a Pianoforte Quartet in D, by Dr. Ernest Walker. This consists of the customary four movements, which are laid out on classic lines. The work is very unequal in merit and suffers from diffuseness, but several of the themes are suggestive, and the writing is always musicianly. It was fairly well interpreted by the composer, Miss Gates, Mr. H. Krame, and M. Jacques Renard.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society brought no new works forward at its concert, on the 6th ult., at the Queen's Hall; but under the able direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne excellent performances were secured of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Sir Alexander Mackenzie's vivacious Overture to "The Little Minister," and the Overture to Weber's "Euryanthe." The part-singing, as usual, was most enjoyable, and Miss Kate Cove sang some solos with great charm.

The South London Choral Association, under the able direction of Mr. L. C. Venables, gave an excellent performance of "Elijah," on November 29, at the South London Institute. The chorus and orchestra (leader, Mr. T. E. Gatehouse) carried out their duties with efficiency, and the solo vocalists were Miss Stanley Lucas, Miss Adelaide Lambe, Mr. Ager Grover, and Mr. Robert Grier.

The Westminster Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Stewart Macpherson, gave its forty-fourth concert at the Westminster Town Hall, on the 13th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony was meritoriously rendered. The solo part of Grieg's A minor Pianoforte Concerto was cleverly played by Mr. Claud Pollard, and songs were contributed by Miss Gertrude Hughes.

The Choir School of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, under the direction of Dr. G. F. Huntley, gave a concert on November 29, at St. Peter's Mission House, Wilton Road.

Mr. TRAVERS ADAMS'S CHOIR commenced its season by a performance of Gaul's "Holy City," on the 8th ult., at the Town Hall, Hammersmith. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Gammon, Miss Ethel Stuart Barker, Miss Goddard, Mr. Hornby, and Mr. Hugh Cochrane. Mr. C. Kenneth Dryden led the orchestra and Mr. Travers Adams conducted.

RECITALS.

The two historical recitals given by Mr. CARLO DUCCI and his gifted pupil, Master BASIL GAUNTLETT, assisted by M. Louis Pécskai, on November 27 and the 4th ult. respectively, were peculiarly interesting. A biographical and historical programme had been prepared containing an immense amount of information, portraits, and reproductions of rare engravings, and the pieces chosen were admirably illustrative of the styles of their several composers. A feature of the second recital was the exceptionally promising pianoforte playing of Master Gauntlett in works of modern date.

Herr ERNST VON DOHNÁNYI'S recital, on the 4th ult., consisted entirely of his own compositions, a bold proceeding for so young a man, but which, it must be confessed, was justified by the interesting nature of the greater part of the music submitted. The programme included his Passacaglia in D minor, the remarkably clever Variations and Fugue on a Theme by E. G., three attractive Intermezzi, and a Sonata of somewhat rhapsodical character in B flat minor for pianoforte and violoncello, the latter instrument being played by Herr Ludwig Lebell.

Messrs. GREENE and BORWICK'S pianoforte and song recital, on the 5th ult., at St. James's Hall, was distinguished by those artistic excellences which have secured for them such popularity. Mr. Greene's songs included some of the best composed and arranged by Dr. Villiers Stanford and Mr. Arthur Somervell, and Mr. Borwick's performances comprised a beautiful rendering of Schumann's Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 11).

M. BUSONI may be said to have increased the reputation he has acquired in this country by his recital, on the 1st ult., at St. James's Hall. His programme included Beethoven's Sonata in B flat (Op. 106), Chopin's four Ballads, and pieces by Liszt, the last-named being played with exceptional brilliancy and apprehension of the requirements of the music.

M. PADEREWSKI generously gave a pianoforte recital on November 28, at St. James's Hall, for the Mansion House War Fund. His programme included Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques and the expected Chopin selection, which were magnificently interpreted. The proceeds realised £1,150.

The violin and pianoforte recitals, on November 30 and the 14th ult., by Señor SARASATE and Dr. OTTO NEITZEL, at St. James's Hall, do not call for detailed criticism. The Spanish violinist rendered familiar works with his well known finish, and was ably assisted by Dr. Neitzel.

Concerning the child violinist who, under the name of ZEALA, made her first appearance in London on the 1st ult., at Steinway Hall, it is sufficient to say that she is undoubtedly gifted, and, with judicious training, promises to achieve much in the future.

The following concerts and recitals have also been given during the month :—

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Miss Nora Clench's orchestral concert, November 27; Miss Fanny Davies's pianoforte recital, 6th ult.; Miss Emma Barnett's pianoforte recital, 11th ult.

QUEEN'S (SMALL) HALL.—Miss Margaret Gyde and Mr. Lionel Tertis's pianoforte and viola recital, November 29; Herbert Sharpe's trio recital, 6th ult.; Miss Grace Mabel Hudson's pianoforte recital, 8th ult.; Mrs. Hubert Spalding's recital, 11th ult.; Sir Ernest Clarke's lecture on East Anglian rustic songs (illustrated), 12th ult.

STEINWAY HALL.—Mrs. Hutchinson and Madame Haas's song and pianoforte recital, 1st ult.; Elderhorst chamber concerts, 4th and 11th ult.; Mr. Paul Stoeving's violin recital, 9th ult.; Miss Wigley's Matinée, 12th ult.; Miss Emmeline Brook and M. Louis Aren's pianoforte and vocal recital, 12th ult.; Mrs. Halket Halkett's pianoforte recital, 13th ult.; Miss Agnes Lewis's pianoforte recital, 14th ult.; Miss Rhoda Whiley and Mr. Stanley Verde's vocal recital, 7th ult.; Miss Margaret Cooper and Mdlle. Vilena de Webenau's vocal and pianoforte recital, 16th ult.

PRINCE'S GALLERIES.—The Curtius concerts, November 29, and 6th and 13th ult.

SALLE ERARD.—Miss Bessie Griffith's violoncello recital, 11th ult.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—Orchestral concert, 20th ult.

LONDON ORGAN SCHOOL.—Mr. Arthur Fayne's Musical and Dramatic Recital, 9th ult.; Concert by Students of the Institution, 14th ult.

SUBURBAN CONCERTS.

BARNET.—The Choral Society gave its ninth concert in the Town Hall, on November 28, when the chief interest was centred in the performance of Elgar's "Black Knight." The orchestra played the accompaniments with delicacy, and was also heard with effect in two of Coleridge-Taylor's Characteristic Waltzes. The chorus was also very efficient in the cantata, and their rendering of Eaton Faning's part-song, "The Miller's Wooing," was one of the successes of the evening. The solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Drinkwater and Mr. Leonard Bevan; and Mr. Frank Wood, who conducted with care, may be congratulated on the success of the performance.

BLACKHEATH.—The Conservatoire Choral Society, under the skilful direction of Mr. Alfred Burnett, gave an excellent performance of "The Golden Legend," on the 14th ult., at the Concert Hall. The chorus was efficient, the orchestra was exceptionally good, and the solo vocalists were Miss Lilian Comber, Miss Kate Jones, Mr. William Green, Mr. Herbert Simmons (who replaced Mr. Charles Copland), and Mr. William Webster.

CATFORD.—The Catford Choral Society gave a concert in the Hall of St. Dunstan's College, on the 5th ult., when the programme included MacCunn's ballad "Lord Ullin's Daughter" and "The Golden Legend." The chorus sang with spirit and excellent attack throughout, and were ably supported by Mr. C. H. Weatherley's orchestra (leader, Mr. H. J. Miles). The solo vocalists were Madame Medora Henson, Miss Florence Oliver, Messrs. Henry Beaumont, Arthur Grover, and Douglas Powell, the latter singing the part of Lucifer very finely. Miss Ethel Brissenden presided at the organ, and the performance was most ably conducted by Mr. Arthur Fagge.

EALING.—The Choral Society gave its first concert of the twelfth season on November 28, at the Victoria Hall. The works performed were Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and Elgar's "Banner of St. George," the orchestra also giving an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture between the two works. The chorus and orchestra, led by Mr. S. Dean Grimson, numbered nearly 200, and rendered an excellent account of themselves in each work. The solos were well sung by Miss Winifred Parker, Mr. Albon Nash, and Mr. T. Daniel. The conductor was Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester. At the third concert Gounod's "Redemption" will be performed.

EAST FINCHLEY.—Mr. Edwin Webster gave one of the best concerts ever given in this locality, in the new Lecture Hall, on the 7th ult. It suffices to say that he was supported by Mesdames Clara Samuell and Marian McKenzie, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, Mr. F. A. W. Docker, Mr. George Cathie (violin), with Miss Olive Kennett and Mr. Charles Fry in duologues.

FOREST GATE.—The West Ham Choral Society gave a spirited performance of Mendelssohn's "Athalie" on November 30, under the careful direction of Mr. W. Harding Bonner. There was a small string orchestra, led by Mr. Frank Bonner; the solo vocalists were Madame Annie Marriott, Miss Minnie Cowley, and Miss Edith Hands, and the verses were recited by Mr. Charles Fry. A special feature in the miscellaneous second part was Facer's stirring chorus "The Voyagers."

West Norwood.—On the 7th ult. the Choral and Orchestral Society gave the first concert of its third season at West Norwood Public Hall, the works performed being Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Cowen's "St. John's Eve." The soloists were Miss C. Gleeson-White, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. R. Courtier Dutton. A word of praise is due to the members of the chorus and orchestra (leader, Mr. E. Burgess) for the spirited rendering of their part of the performance. Mr. P. S. Bright conducted.

Wimbledon.—Mr. Louis Hinze is giving a series of Chamber Concerts in the Lecture Hall. At the second concert, on the 14th ult., Herr Georg Liebling appeared, on which occasion the "Kreutzer" Sonata and Mozart's Trio, No. 2, were included in the programme.

Woodside Park.—The Musical Society gave a performance of the "Creation" at Woodside Hall, on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. H. Davan Wetton. There was an orchestra and chorus of 100 voices, and the solo vocalists were Miss Elsie Mackenzie, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Arthur Barlow.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

As I write, though the musical season has been a month under way, New York is on the tip-toe of curious expectation. Paderewski has been a week on our shores and will immediately begin his fourth American season at Carnegie Hall. During the last six months gossip and speculation have been busy with this genial artist, his detractors contending that if he had not already worn out his welcome, his marriage would prevent a repetition of his old successes. They are already doomed to disappointment. Paderewski has been booked for fully one hundred concerts in the principal cities of the States and Canada, and will extend his trip even unto the City of Mexico.

But it is not Paderewski alone who has created the gladsome excitement in which we are living to-day. On the 18th ult. the opera season will begin at the Metropolitan Opera House. My English readers know what we are expecting, but there may be information for some in a statement as to the measure of our advance appreciation. Mr. Grau has been touring through the States and just ended a three weeks' season marked by financial disaster in Chicago. He will come to New York to find practically all the boxes and the five-dollar stalls paid for for the season. The United States have had a year of great prosperity, the outlook is bright, and cannot be dimmed by the croakers who are predicting the ruin of our political institutions by reason of the Government's policy in the Philippine Islands, and the people are going in for pleasure.

All the foreign artists touring in the States are sharing in the general feeling of contentment and prosperity. Critical opinion has been divided as to the artistic status of Miss Clara Butt and Mr. Mark Hambourg, but Pitschnikoff, the Russian violinist, has sailed through unruffled waters. For some of our critics Miss Butt has seemed to be lacking in finish of technical style and in self-restraint, but the public have been intoxicated by her voice. Up to the present time Mr. Hambourg has had to bear comparison only with M. Vladimir de Pachmann, whom a witty colleague of mine years ago denominated "the Pianissimist."

M. Rafael Joseffy, a worthy artist, has come out of a self-enforced retirement and begun a series of concerts, as if to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of his adoption of New York as his home. The local ranks of distinguished pianists has also received a notable addition in the person of Professor Ludovic Breitner, who seems to have wearied of his position in Paris, pre-eminent as it was both as virtuoso and teacher.

Professor H. W. Parker's dramatic oratorio "St. Christopher," which was given in New York for the first time by the Oratorio Society the season before last, has now been performed in Boston by the Cecilia, under the direction of the composer. It met with much approbation. Professor Parker, by the way, has succeeded in founding a course of lectures on musical topics, outside the regular curriculum, at Yale University. The lecturers this year will be Professor E. A. MacDowell, of Columbia University; Professor Paine, of Harvard (if he can be secured); Mr. Philip Hale, Mr. W. F. Apthorp, and Mr. H. E. Krehbiel. The last-named will open the course on the 16th inst., his subject being "Folk-song in America." A free choice has been given to the lecturers in respect of their subjects.

The antiquarian spirit is taking hold of New York, doubtless as a result of the interest created by the concerts of the New York Musical Art Society. This organisation maintains a choir of fifty singers, chosen by Mr. Frank Damrosch from the professional forces of the metropolis, and gives two concerts each season, one in the Christmas season and one in the Lenten. The first part of each programme is devoted to a capella music appropriate to the time, and the second to secular compositions, a marked preference being shown for the part-songs of Brahms and Cornelius. There is an annual competition for a prize of 250 dollars. Last year it was won by Professor Parker with a setting of a portion of Thomas à Kempis's hymn beginning "O qualis quantaque lætitia." Prof. Parker's motet began with the verse "Adstant angelorum chori." This year the subject was to be secular, but though the candidates were not required to be of native birth as before, I understand that the judges have decided not to award the prize, their standard of excellence not having been reached by any of the works sent in. Two years ago the Musical Art Society performed Bach's "Actus Tragicus," with the original accompaniments for flutes, clarinets, bassoons, viole da gamba, basses, and organ. This season Mr. Damrosch, who is also conductor of the Oratorio Society, will give Bach's Mass in B minor with the original instruments. Two specimens of the old oboe d'amore are being made for him in Berlin. Mr. Theodor Björksten, stimulated by these evidences of a growing Bach cult, has organised a choir which he calls the Bach Singers, also professionals, and he wants to revive the old trumpet parts. Old English music has an exponent in New York in a choir that calls itself the Old English Glee Singers, who gave a successful concert in Brooklyn recently. It is made up of the choristers of St. James's Church.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

On November 23 Mr. Max Mossel's second drawing-room concert took place at the Grand Hotel. Miss Fanny Davies was the pianist, and Mr. Marix Loevensohn, violoncellist, made a successful first appearance here. Mr. Anton van Rooy sang Beethoven's "An die fernte Geliebte."

The third of the Harrison concerts was held in the Town Hall, on November 27. The artists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Madame Alice Gomez, Miss Lucy Barton, Mr. Herbert Grovèr, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Miss Pauline St. Angelo (pianoforte), Mr. William Henley (violin), and Mr. F. T. Watkiss, accompanist.

Mr. Halford's third orchestral concert took place in the Town Hall, on November 28. The programme comprised Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" Overture, the Prelude to "Le Déluge" (Saint-Saëns), Arensky's Orchestral Suite, Op. 33 (first time in England), and Beethoven's Symphony (No. 7). Mdlle. Giulia Ravogli was the vocalist. The fourth concert was given on the 12th ult., with this programme: Sullivan's Overture "In Memoriam," Schubert's great Symphony in C, and the "Carnival" Overture, by Glazounow. Mrs. Helen Trust was the vocalist. On November 30 the Birmingham Amateur Orchestral Society gave a fine concert at the Midland Institute. Hermann Goetz's Symphony in F was performed for the first time in Birmingham, and an interesting selection of pieces was included in the programme. Mr. C. W. Perkins was an able soloist in Prout's Organ Concerto in E minor. Madame Margaret Milward made a successful début here as a vocalist, and Mr. Halford conducted.

On the 1st ult. the Willy Hess String Quartet gave a concert in the Masonic Hall. The programme was good, but contained no novelties. There was a large and appreciative audience.

The new City Choral Society gave its first concert in the Town Hall, on the 6th ult. The chorus numbers about 250 voices and is of fine quality. The principal work given was Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," which was well performed and cordially received. A selection from Wagner followed, together with some orchestral pieces. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted. The solo vocalists were Madame Marie Duma and Mr. Hedmondt. The concert was well attended and was a great success.

The next evening the Festival Choral Society gave a truly magnificent concert-recital of Wagner's opera, "The Flying Dutchman," with Miss Alice Esty, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Charles Saunders, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and Mr. Daniel Price as principals. The work was given in its integrity, without the omission of a single note, and the audience was most enthusiastic in its praise.

The Glasgow Select Choir gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, on the 2nd ult., and met with its usual success.

The Saturday evening cheap concerts have included two oratorio performances—namely, the "Creation," by the Midland Musical Society, on November 25, and "The Messiah," by the Choral Union, on the 9th ult.; and on the 16th ult. the Choral and Orchestral Association, under the direction of Mr. Joseph H. Adam, performed Wareing's cantata "The Wreck of the Hesperus" and Bennett's "May Queen."

The Rev. H. R. Haweis gave a lecture in the Town Hall, on Sunday, November 26. His subject was "Music, the Art of the Age."

The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company was here for a week from Monday, the 4th ult. The repertory was confined to the old familiar works, but attracted large audiences.

The Goethe anniversary was celebrated, at Mason University College, by the German Society.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

On November 24 the Philharmonic Society gave (as its second concert of the season) an excellent performance of Berlioz's "Faust." The soloists were Madame Medora Henson, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. George Ferguson. This work is now an established favourite here, and a crowded audience welcomed it. Both chorus and orchestra were carefully prepared, and the general verdict was that they never did better, or perhaps as well.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Richter, gave, on November 27, a concert, which will be remembered as the greatest musical treat ever listened to in Belfast. The pity is that there were far too many empty seats in the Ulster Hall. Still there was a large audience, and nowhere could the exquisite finish of the performance have been more fully appreciated. The admirably chosen programme consisted of the "Meistersinger" Overture, Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3), Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Weber's Overture to "Euryanthe." Finely as this grand body of musicians played under other conductors, there can be no doubt that Dr. Richter has brought them to a state of perfection that they did not before possess. But there was very nearly an awkward contretemps. The band's music had gone astray at a station in Dublin, where it was discovered only after very vigorous searching and "wiring," and just in time to be sent on to Belfast by a special train! "All's well that ends well."

On the 14th ult. Dr. Lawrence Walker gave the second of his Chamber concerts of the season, when the programme consisted entirely of Slavonic compositions of the nineteenth century.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

The Society of Bristol Gleemen gave a successful Ladies' Night at the Victoria Rooms, on November 29. The novelty in the programme was a serenade, "Ye fairies gay," by the Rev. Edward Handley, president of the Bath Orpheus Society, which produced a favourable impression. Variety was introduced into the performance by songs which Miss Agnes Nicholls rendered. Her fresh soprano voice was heard to advantage in pieces by Schubert, Bemberg, and Sir Hubert Parry. Mr. W. J. Kidner was the conductor.

An interesting gathering took place at the Grand Hotel, on the 2nd ult., the Bristol Choral Union having assembled to make a presentation to Mr. John Barrett, who had acted as conductor for upwards of twenty years. Mr. J. W. Lawson (organist of St. Mary Redcliff Church) presided, the vice-chairs being taken by Mr. Edward Cook (organist of St. Paul's, Clifton) and Mr. F. W. Hek (organist of Bedminster Parish Church). After supper, speeches, appreciative of the services of Mr. Barrett, were made by Dr. Harrison, Mr. J. L. Roeckel, Mr. George Riseley, and Mr. D. W. Rootham, and a beautifully illuminated address with a purse of gold were presented to him.

The Æolian Male Choir gave a concert in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, on the 6th ult., under the direction of Mr. George A. Sleigh. Miss Marion Harris and Miss Clara Aldersley, who had before appeared on the open nights of the Choir, sang songs and duets, and Mr. A. Atherstone Cox played Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata.

Miss Amy Riseley, niece of the well known conductor, gave her first concert on the 6th ult., at Redland Park Hall. She promises to be an accomplished pianist, and afforded gratification by her excellent interpretation of compositions, some of which make considerable demands upon the player. She was assisted at her concert by Miss Jennie Ffoulkes and Mr. A. B. Hall (vocalists), Miss Mabel Bigg (violin), and Miss Winifred Bigg (violoncello and pianoforte), with Mr. G. Herbert Riseley, brother of the débutante, accompanist.

St. Mary's Choral Society, on the 12th ult., at the church, Tyndall's Park, gave Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. R. O. Beachcroft was at the organ and Mr. F. W. Rootham conducted the performance. The soloists were Miss Alice Boaden, Miss Gertrude Hember, Mr. Cyril Flamsteed (son of the vicar of St. George's, Bristol), and Mr. W. H. Wickes.

At St. John's Church, Redland, on the 13th ult., the Church Choir and St. John's Choral Society rendered the new cantata, entitled "Blessed are those who watch," by Mr. Hugh Blair, late organist of Worcester Cathedral. The work is well adapted for church use as hymns for the congregation are interspersed. Two numbers are tenor solos, and these were sung by Mr. G. W. Brierley, the choruses being interpreted by a choir of ninety voices. Mr. A. E. Hill, organist of the church, conducted, and Mr. C. W. Stear was at the organ.

An impressive performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given, on the 15th ult., at the Church of All Saints, Clifton, by the joint choirs of the church and the church of the Holy Nativity. Mr. Cedric Bucknall was at the organ and Mr. Stear conducted.

Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society, on the 14th ult., gave a performance of Spohr's "Fall of Babylon" in the Victoria Hall. This work had not been heard in the district since it was given by the Bristol Festival Society in 1876. The principal vocalists were Madame Adelaide Mullen, Miss Edith Leslie, Mrs. Bere (a local amateur), Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. Arthur Wills, Mr. Brierley (Bristol Cathedral), and Dr. Roxburgh (president of the Society). The choir numbered nearly 150 and there was a band of twenty-five players, chiefly from Bristol. Mr. W. Darby was at the organ and Mr. Edward Cook directed the performance. The work was carefully presented and appeared to considerably interest the audience.

At Cheltenham College, on the 16th ult., the concert associated with the close of the Michaelmas term was given. The first part consisted of a performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The cantata was creditably presented, Mr. W. S. Drew giving with effect the tenor song. The College orchestra, with some professional assistance, rendered the accompaniments. The audience seemed highly gratified with the work.

The Bristol Choral Society, on the 19th ult., gave a fine performance of "The Golden Legend," in Prince's Theatre, under the direction of Mr. Riseley. The principal vocalists were Madame Medora Henson, Miss Edith Leslie, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Douglas Powell. Band and chorus numbered 500.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

It would be impossible to overstate the excellence of the performances of the Hallé Orchestra under Dr. Richter's baton, given here at the end of November. At the first concert a number of excerpts from Wagner were heard, which included the "Tannhäuser" Overture, the Prelude to Act iii. of the "Meistersinger," the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan," the Vorspiel to "Parsifal," and the "Walkürenritt." Anything finer than the playing of the C minor Symphony of Beethoven it would be impossible to imagine.

At the Matinée given the following day we heard the "Meistersinger" Overture, the performance of which was noticeable for the same qualities which made the C minor Symphony memorable; the somewhat ennuyeuse "Pathetic" Symphony of Tschaïkowsky, the "Leonora," No. 3, of Beethoven, some interesting Variations by Brahms, and Weber's ever delightful "Euryanthe" Overture.

The Orpheus Society gave its first concert this season on the 2nd ult. Two old English madrigals, "Weepe, O mine eyes," by Bennet, and "To shorten winter's sadnesse," by Weelkes, were the best sung of many part-songs and glees. Mr. Arthur Darley charmed a not too critical audience in Dvorák-Ondricek's "Klagendes Gedenken," and afterwards essayed "Airs Hongrois." Miss Shellard sang several solos cleverly.

The University Choral Society gave its first concert early last month, when Purcell's "Dido and Æneas" was performed, with Smart's popular and melodious "Bride of Dunkerron," the solos being sung by amateurs, members of the Society. The choruses in the Purcell opera were not up to the highest standard, and failed in some obvious and easy effects, such as the "echo" chorus, which is capable of an almost perfectly realistic effect.

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its second Matinée on the 13th ult. Miss Bessie Ruthorn played the last two movements of the Beethoven Concerto in C minor, and made a very good impression by reason of her clear and intelligent interpretation of the pianoforte passages. Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony was admirably played by the band, and Berlioz's effective Hungarian March from "Faust" elicited an imperative demand for a repetition. Signor Esposito is to be congratulated upon the artistic results he has already achieved.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

A more than usually successful concert was given in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on the 7th ult., in aid of the fund for restoring St. Michael at Plea Church, at which Miss Alice Phillips, Miss Evelyn Ray, Mr. C. Hunnybun (Chichester Cathedral), the Rev. H. W. Köblich (rector of the parish), and Messrs. Brookes, Thouless, and Brockbank (Norwich Cathedral) were the vocalists. The instrumental selections were contributed by Miss Freda Russell (violin), and Miss Margaret Latham, Miss Gladys Meyrick, and Dr. Allen (organist of Ely Cathedral), pianoforte.

The concert given by the choir of the Wesleyan Chapel, Dene Side, Great Yarmouth, on November 30, derived more than usual interest from the production of an entirely new cantata from the pen of its conductor, Mr. W. M. Chapman, having Longfellow's poem "The Wreck of the Hesperus" for its libretto. Mr. Chapman has laid out his work for three solo voices (soprano, tenor, and bass) with chorus and orchestra, and without aiming at any great contrapuntal effect, he has certainly produced a work that should prove welcome to small choral societies. The principal parts were ably filled by Miss Adela Tunbridge, Mr. J. Hardy, and Mr. J. J. Manning, the band being led by Mr. C. B. Diver, and the whole performance was creditable to the town. At the conclusion of the cantata the composer received quite an ovation from the large audience assembled in the Town Hall. Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and a short miscellaneous selection completed the programme.

The Parish Church of Catfield, Norfolk, has just been enriched with a new organ, built by Mr. Mack, of Great Yarmouth. At the opening service Mr. Haydon Hare gave a recital which fully tested the merits of the instrument.

The first concert of the forty-first season of the Great Yarmouth Musical Society was given on the 14th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Haydon Hare. Cowen's interesting cantata, "St. John's Eve," was the work selected. Evidence of careful preparation was shown by both chorus and band. Miss Teresa Blamy, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. G. Richards, and Mr. Arthur Barlow did good work as principal vocalists. Among the selections for the second half special notice deserves to be made of three of Mr. Elgar's "Sea Pictures," recently produced at the Norwich Festival, which were tastefully sung by Miss Nutter with orchestral accompaniment, creditably played by the band; and also a harp solo by the Rev. Warrenne J. Blake.

The first concert this season given by the Hunstanton Choral Society took place on the 13th ult., with Mr. A. H. Cross as conductor. Mendelssohn's "Athalie" filled the first half of the programme, with the Misses Alvis and Miss Phillips as principal vocalists. The Rev. Dr. Phillips, Precentor of Ely, undertook the duty of reader, and a capable band and chorus insured a good performance of the work.

The Diss Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation," on the 12th ult., under the direction of Mr. T. M. Pullen. The principal parts were ably filled by Miss Alice Simons, Mr. W. R. Maxwell, and Mr. Henry Bailey. Mr. Hemstock was, as usual, at the organ, and Mr. T. E. Gatehouse led the band. The performance, on the whole, was creditable to all concerned.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH AND PERTH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The thirteenth annual series of orchestral concerts, organised by Messrs. Paterson and Sons, was opened on the 4th ult., in the McEwen Hall, in the presence of a large and sympathetic audience. The Scottish Orchestra have again been engaged, under the baton of Herr Wilhelm Bruch, and led by M. Maurice Sons. M. Busoni was the pianist, and was much applauded for his rendering of Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, a Chopin Ballade, and a Liszt Rhapsody. At the second concert (11th ult.) Miss Lillian Blauvelt made her first appearance in Edinburgh, and won golden opinions by her neat technique and sympathetic style. The orchestra seemed a trifle dull and listless in the symphonies—Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Brahms's No. 2 in D—but doubtless they will soon warm to their work.

At Mr. Denhof's second chamber concert, in the Music Hall, on the 6th ult., the concert-giver was assisted by MM. Emile Sauret and Jean Gérardy.

On the 9th ult. Señor Sarasate, assisted by Dr. Otto Neitzel, attracted a very large audience to the Music Hall. The great violinist was in his best form, and delighted his enthusiastic hearers with a Bach and a Schumann Sonata, and most of all with the encore he gave—Bach's E major Prelude—with electrifying effect.

The scheme of University concerts, organised by Professor Niecks, embraces five concerts, of which the first (November 22) was devoted to quartets by Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, played in excellent style by the Kosman Quartet party, and the second (14th ult.) to harp music, worthily interpreted by Mr. John Thomas.

On the 13th ult. the combined choirs of the diocese gave a rendering of Spohr's "Last Judgment," in St. Mary's Cathedral, under the careful direction of Mr. Collinson.

The Perth Musical Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" on November 30. The choruses were well within the powers of the Society, and, under the conductorship of Mr. F. S. Graves, the result was a very smooth and effective rendering. The solo parts were undertaken by Miss Marie Bellas and Messrs. Reginald Brophy and Daniells.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

The Choral and Orchestral Union opened its season with great éclat, on November 30, with a performance of Brahms's "Song of Destiny" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend." Mr. Bradley conducted both works, and secured a much better rendering of the second than of the first, in which the choir was somewhat defective in intonation and the band showed occasionally that it had not yet reached a high state of discipline. "The Golden Legend," which is more familiar to the Choral Union, was sung with spirit and correctness, and permitted the new members to show that they had improved the tone of the chorus. The soloists were Madame Ella Russell, Madame Emslie-Cran, Mr. Tom Child (who took the place of Mr. William Green, indisposed), and Mr. Charles Tree, whose Lucifer was a meritorious impersonation. The second concert, on the 5th ult., was an orchestral one. Mr. Wilhelm Bruch conducted for the first time this season, M. Busoni played Beethoven's Fifth Concerto, and the Symphony was Mendelssohn's "Italian." At the third concert, on the 12th ult., Miss Lillian Blauvelt, who sang for the first time in Glasgow, was most heartily and appreciatively received, and Mr. Bruch conducted a remarkably fine rendering of Brahms's Second Symphony.

The second choral concert of the series occurred on the 19th ult., when Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" were sung by the Choral Union, under Mr. Bradley, assisted by the Scottish Orchestra. A most laudable performance by the choir was spoiled to a large extent by the rough work of the band. The soloists were Miss Mabel Berrey, Miss Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Charles Copland.

Springburn Choral Society gave "Judas Maccabæus" on the 6th ult., under the baton of Mr. J. Michael Diack, with a local band, the soloists being Miss Margaret Simpson, Mr. J. A. Y. Stronach, and Mr. James Fleming.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

The complaint once urged against the Liverpool Philharmonic Society of neglecting the chorus has, under Mr. F. H. Cowen's conductorship, ceased to have any justification, and an excellent feature of the Philharmonic concerts has been restored to a position of due importance. A performance, in every sense admirable, of Schumann's "Festival" Overture marked the concert on the 5th ult.

Choral performances, as usual at this season, have been the chief characteristic of musical activity during the past month. All, or almost all, of the many musical societies in and about Liverpool have now given one or more public concerts. To begin with, Mr. Goossens' Choir made a successful initial appearance for this winter, at the Philharmonic Hall, on November 23. The choral novelty was C. Haussen's "Soliloquy," a work which enabled Mr. Goossens especially to display the qualities of alertness and sympathy that distinguish his fine body of choristers. The concert otherwise was interesting on account of the début of Miss Gertrude Hudson, a charming soprano, and of the appearance of Mr. Alfred Ross, son of the late Mr. John Ross, and a pupil of Dr. Joachim. Mr. Ross achieved distinction.

On the 13th ult. the Post Office Choral Society, at the Philharmonic Hall, gave a rendering of Gade's cantata "The Crusaders." The principals were Miss Marie Duma, Mr. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. F. H. Crossley conducted with marked efficiency. At Warrington Mr. Crossley also conducted "The Messiah," and at the Concert Hall, Liscard, the Wallasey Choral and Orchestral Society gave the same oratorio.

The excellent series of Sunday concerts at St. George's Hall, given under the direction of Mr. W. I. Argent by the Sunday Society, continue to enjoy undiminished favour. Mr. Ernest Schiever, who gave the first of his series of chamber concerts for the present season, at the College of Music, on the 9th ult., has undertaken the direction of the Wirral Amateur Orchestral Society. The concert given by the Society at the Music Hall, Claughton, on the 15th ult., was a great success. Elgar's Serenade (Op. 20) and the Septet for strings and trumpets by Saint-Saëns were the most interesting selections.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

The three concerts of the Hallé undertaking, immediately preceding the annual Christmas performance of "The Messiah," appeared not to attract the general public like those which went before. Sir Hubert Parry's "Job" met with a somewhat cold reception, and Dr. Richter's necessary visit to Vienna left us without the charm which caused the season to open so hopefully. In the programmes of the eighth and ninth meetings were too many works by comparatively unknown composers, rendered by young artists whose names have not yet grown familiar to us. Some interest among musicians was, however, created by the first appearance (on the 14th ult.) of Miss Irene Schaefsburg, a very promising student, who came over to the Royal College here with Mr. Dayas, and has since remained under his guidance. The selection by so young a débutante as Miss Schaefsburg of Brahms's First Pianoforte Concerto was, perhaps, scarcely prudent. If Brahms at all, why not his Second Concerto, so much more brilliant and so far more melodious? Miss Schaefsburg's style is extremely firm, bold, and dashing—if there be any lack, probably it is felt in the more delicate and expressive passages. But we remember no first appearance of a young student-player (unavoidably slightly nervous) so entirely successful. The soft delicate upper notes of the voice of Miss Rosa Ettinger and the perfect accuracy of her trills and roulades excited great enthusiasm.

The Hallé Choir has so greatly improved of late that it was only fair that the two accustomed performances of "The Messiah" should be directed by Mr. Wilson, who is responsible for the amendment. The principals were Misses Palliser and Clara Butt, with Messrs. Edward Lloyd (for the last time) and Santley. The quartets at Mr. Brodsky's second chamber concert were Beethoven's No. 6, from his Op. 18, and Schubert in D minor, with Busoni's Sonata in E minor for violin and pianoforte, interpreted by Mr. Brodsky and Mr. Dayas.

Mr. Brodsky's pupil, Miss Edith Robinson, very bravely summoned her friends to the large Free Trade Hall, on the evening of November 27, and was fittingly rewarded by an enthusiastic gathering, in which were many new admirers. Mrs. Hutchinson sang in a pleasant manner, and M. Busoni delighted the large audience by his powerful and finished executancy. At the third Harrison concert, November 29, there were many well known vocalists who warbled their well known ditties, and Miss St. Angelo played with skill Chopin's Ballade in G minor and the regulation Liszt Rhapsody. Mr. Lane engaged for his annual "Messiah" performance Misses Blauvelt, Crossley, Messrs. Ben Davies and Andrew Black, relying upon the unstinted support of his subscribers and the general public.

MUSIC IN THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND.

On November 29 the premier Musical Society in the North, the Aberdeen Choral Union, which has been in existence for over forty years, gave a performance of Handel's "Israel in Egypt. The well-balanced chorus now numbers about 250 voices. The performance of the oratorio, under the baton of Mr. John Kirby, was, on the whole, praiseworthy. The soloists were Misses Winifred Wynne, Gertrude Lonsdale, Messrs. Gwylym Richards, Charles Tree, and David Hughes. The orchestra, under the leadership of Herr L. Pokorny, did good work. Mr. Burwood Nicholls presided at the organ and much praise is due to him for his excellent accompaniments.

The second Harrison concert took place on the 4th ult., Mr. Herbert Grover, Mr. William Henley, and Miss Pauline St. Angelo being the most successful. We also had the second chamber concert on the 6th ult., when the feature of the evening was Mr. J. M. Nisbet's capital interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata Pathétique.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

The most important concert heard in Newcastle-on-Tyne within the recollection of amateurs of the present generation was that given by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, on November 24, when Beethoven's Choral Symphony was performed, with the assistance of the Hallé Orchestra, and under the baton of Dr. Richter. There is no record of the last and greatest of Beethoven's symphonies ever having been performed in Newcastle before, and it is fortunate that its first hearing in the city should have taken place under such favourable circumstances. Both choir and orchestra were so excellent as to draw from the distinguished conductor a confession that he had never conducted a finer performance. Great credit is due to Mr. James M. Preston for the admirable way in which he had trained the choir in the difficult task it undertook. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Daniel Price. The other works performed at the concert were Brahms's "Song of Destiny," Tschaïkowsky's "Hamlet" Overture, Brahms's "Academic Festival" Overture, and some Wagner pieces. The concert drew together an immense audience, and the exceptional enthusiasm it created was amply justified.

The Gateshead Vocal Society gave its first Subscription concert of the season, in the Town Hall, Gateshead, on the 7th ult., the work presented being Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. Newton Laycock conducted, and the soloists were Miss Ethel Russell, Miss Minnie Beers, Mr. H. Stansfield, and Mr. W. Peacock.

The Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society gave a performance of Mackenzie's "The Bride," in the Albion Assembly Rooms, North Shields, on the 8th ult. The work was favourably received, and the efforts of the soloists—Miss Ethel Russell and Mr. T. H. Brearley—were much appreciated. Mr. W. Bird conducted.

On the 8th ult., also, a very excellent performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in Durham Cathedral, under the conductorship of Dr. Philip Armes, the Cathedral organist. The choir consisted of members of the Durham Choral Society, the old choristers and the permanent musical staff of the Cathedral, and the orchestra was largely drawn from the Durham Amateur Orchestral Society. The solos were entrusted to members of the Cathedral choir, and the Rev. Canon Bennett presided at the organ. The success of the performance was such as should encourage the promoters to produce other sacred works under equally favourable conditions.

The Newcastle Postal Telegraph Choral Society gave the first Invitation concert of its fifth season in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 11th ult., when a very creditable performance of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was given. The charming tenor solo, "Onaway! awake, beloved!" was sung by Mr. Reginald Brophy. The performance was under the personal direction of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, whose presence served the purpose of calling forth from performers and audience quite an unusual degree of enthusiasm. This Society, although perhaps limited in its resources, is making substantial progress, the present effort being the most ambitious and the most successful it has yet attempted.

A performance of Mr. J. F. Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner" was given in the Town Hall, Newcastle, on the 12th ult., by the Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society, under the baton of Mr. J. E. Jeffries. The soloists were Miss Florrie Roscoe, Miss Blanche Gordon, Mr. Herbert Stansfield, and Mr. William Thornton. The work was very creditably rendered and much appreciated by a large audience.

On the 13th ult. the Bishop Auckland Musical Society performed the first part of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," with Madame Marie Duma, Mrs. Walton, Mr. Gwillym Richards, and Mr. Charles Knowles in the solo parts. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted with that care which invariably ensures good results. There are few towns of the same size which can show a better musical record than Bishop Auckland.

The South Shields Choral Society commenced its sixteenth season, on the 12th ult., with a very satisfactory performance of Handel's "Samson." The singing of the choruses was especially worthy of praise. The soloists were Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. M. Fairs conducted, and is to be commended for the excellent results he is able to obtain from the forces under his control.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society has seldom given a more interesting concert than that which opened its season on the 13th ult. The two principal works performed were Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's new cantata "Minnehaha" and Dr. Villiers Stanford's effective choral ballad "The Revenge." The solos in "Minnehaha" were admirably sung by Madame Marie Duma and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. The cantata fully maintains the high standard of excellence reached by its composer in "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," and should prove to be equally as popular with choral societies and the public at large. Both works were exceedingly well rendered, both as to chorus and orchestra, and reflected much credit upon the conductor of the Society, Mr. N. Kilburn.

A very creditable performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in the Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle, on the 19th ult. An orchestra of about fifty performers was engaged and the choir numbered about 150. Mr. J. E. Hutchinson ably presided at the organ and Mr. J. E. Jeffries conducted.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At Miss Cantelo's Subscription concerts a rich treat was provided for lovers of chamber music. Schubert's Quartet in A minor (Op. 29) was finely rendered by the Willy Hess String Quartet. Why Miss Cantelo selected Beethoven's Variations in F (Op. 36), which she played with the utmost refinement, when there are so many of his later works so seldom produced, passes our comprehension. Mr. Willy Hess rendered two solos in magnificent style. Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 34), carefully rendered, concluded the programme.

M. Busoni delighted an appreciative audience at his recital on November 28.

On November 29 Mr. Harold Henry's Orchestral Society gave its first concert of this season. Amongst other pieces, Edward German's Masque, "As you like it," was creditably performed, and the Overtures to "Fidelio" and "Magic Flute" were carefully rendered. The soloists were Miss May Heath (of Birmingham), who, though only a child of thirteen, exhibited wonderful vocal talent, which was thoroughly appreciated, and Mr. Harold Henry, who received quite an ovation for the rendering of his violin solos; his second piece was a clever composition from his own pen, which won him a hearty recall. Mr. Sadler ably accompanied the solos and Mr. E. M. Barber conducted.

The first of the Nottingham Orchestral Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, was given on the 14th ult. The first part opened with the "Magic Flute" Overture and concluded with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony; works by Tschaïkowsky, Massenet, and Brahms completed the orchestral scheme. Madame Olga Wood was the soloist and contributed songs by Saint-Saëns, Handel, and Godard; her efforts were received with hearty applause. The orchestra has improved immensely since last season—this was particularly noticeable in Brahms's Hungarian Dances, which were repeated by request.

A successful performance of Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" was given at Grantham, on the 14th ult., under the guidance of Mr. H. P. Dickenson.

At Leicester the new Musical Society performed Gounod's "Redemption" on November 30. The choir sang throughout excellently, and the band (led by Mr. J. Kilby) was almost entirely local and was fully efficient. The solos were ably rendered by Madame Kate Cove, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Henry Stubbs, and Mr. F. Harford, the soprano and bass deserving special commendation. Mr. Charles Hancock was an able conductor.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

There has been so much going on this term in matters musical that it is only possible to find space to chronicle the most important events. The first concert in point of time and importance was given under the auspices of the Musical Club, on November 8, when the Royal College Orchestra, under the conductorship of Professor Stanford, gave a capital concert. The first piece on the programme was Mackenzie's Nautical Overture "Britannia," the choice of this thoroughly English work being peculiarly appropriate. It received a very spirited rendering and was much appreciated. The next orchestral piece was Tschaïkowsky's miniature Suite, "Casse-Noisette," given for the first time in Oxford, the performance of which was immensely enjoyed. In Schumann's Concerto in A minor for pianoforte and orchestra, Miss Florence Smith specially distinguished herself, surmounting the difficulties of the work with ease and certainty. The concert concluded with an excellent interpretation of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

The Oxford Choral and Philharmonic Society (for the two Societies are now amalgamated) gave, on November 28, Spohr's "Last Judgment," Gounod's "Gallia," and Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion"; strings and the organ being used for the orchestral accompaniment. The chorus sang well from first to last, the only deficiency being a slight weakness of the contraltos. Mr. Betjemann conducted, Mr. Burnett leading the strings, while Dr. Dodds ably presided at the organ.

The next day the Musical Club gave its second public concert, when the Cologne Quartet, led by Mr. Willy Hess, were the chief performers. Miss Fillunger contributed some delightful German songs with genuine artistic feeling. The next day a capital concert was given by the Oxford House Orchestra, Bethnal Green, the chief features being Tschaïkowsky's Symphony (No. 5) and two Hungarian Dances by Brahms.

On the 1st ult. Herr Ernst von Dohnânyi gave a pianoforte recital, selecting for his chief pieces Bach's Chromatische Fantasie and Fugue and Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (Op. 110), when the playing of the Hungarian pianist gave immense pleasure—indeed, his accurate and musicianly rendering of the Chromatische Fantasie was a thing to be remembered.

The concerts at Balliol on Sunday evenings, under the direction of Mr. John Farmer, have been continued with their accustomed success, although the programme of the last concert—which would have consisted of madrigals chiefly—had to be altered in consequence of the illness of the conductor. In its place, however, a programme was made up with three pieces for clarinet and pianoforte, by Mr. Egerton and Dr. Walker, interspersed with songs by Miss Mabel Price.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Sheffield Choral Union gave a concert on the 4th ult., performing Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night" and Schubert's "Song of Miriam." Under the direction of Mr. S. Suckley these works were capably rendered, the well-trained chorus and an excellent band contributing largely to the general success. The principals were: Miss E. K. Robinson, Miss Bertha Skerritt, Mr. R. Thompson, and Mr. T. C. Fagg. The committee announces Elgar's "Caractacus" for performance at the next concert.

On the 5th ult. an admirable performance of "Elijah" was given by the Sheffield Musical Union, under the conductorship of Dr. Coward. An accession of new members, thorough familiarity with the work, and a large and sympathetic audience all tended towards the success of the concert, and the oratorio was given con amore by all concerned. The principals were Miss Olive Harcourt (who was very successful in the soprano music, giving the solo "Hear ye, Israel," with admirable effect), Miss Adelaide Lambe, Mr. Clifford Hunnybun, and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Mr. J. H. Parkes led the band and Mr. W. S. Jessop was the organist.

The Hoyland Common and District Choral Society performed Bennett's "May Queen" on the 7th ult. This excellent Society is flourishing exceedingly, being numerically and financially strong, and the last concert should tend to further improve its position. The choral portions of the work were well sung, and, under Mr. G. M. Coates's watchful care, the performance was smooth and adequate. The soloists were Madame Norledge, Miss Nellie Chisholm, Mr. W. H. Burrows, and Mr. Ditchburn. Mr. J. H. Parkes led the band.

At Heeley, on the 10th ult., the Ann's Road Choral Society performed the "Creation" to a crowded audience. Mr. W. E. Jeffs, the conductor, directed a well trained and enthusiastic choir, and the entire performance was both creditable and enjoyable. Miss Eva Rich, Mr. W. H. Burrows, and Mr. F. Shimeld were efficient soloists. Mr. S. Freeman was the organist.

On the 11th ult. the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society gave its winter concert in the Music Hall, under Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The refined singing and the surprising unanimity of the choir delighted the large audience and served to further enhance the reputation of this young Society. Among the nine works sung were C. H. Lloyd's "The Longbeard's Saga"; S. S. Wesley's elaborate glee, "When fierce conflicting passions"; J. E. West's charming "Beware" (encored); Beale's madrigal, "This pleasant month of May"; and Bantock's "Marching along."

Benedict's "St. Peter" was performed by the St. Peter's Abbeydale Choral Society, on the 14th ult., directed by Mr. W. Gadsby. The chorus sang the choruses with commendable finish and vigour, the sopranos being especially bright and alert, while the conductor's enthusiasm apparently animated all the singers. The principals were Miss Eva Rich, Mrs. Foulston, Mr. W. F. Moulson, and Mr. W. A. Hamer.

"Judas Maccabæus" was given by the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society on the 19th ult., in the Albert Hall. The large accession of new members to this, the senior local society, has tended to properly balance the parts, and the reinforced tenors are now one of the best departments. Handel's effective choruses are always to the liking of Sheffield choristers and in this case they were sung with a degree of robustness and spirit that amply proved the fact. The solos were undertaken by Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Whitehead, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Mr. J. W. Phillips was at the organ, and Mr. F. Schollhammer conducted.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Stafford Choral Union gave its second concert on the 4th ult. The first part of the programme was devoted to Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and the second to a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss R. Woodhouse, and Mr. S. Masters, to each of whom a word of praise is due. Mr. Drury conducted. The chorus on the whole acquitted itself with credit, but the basses were out-balanced by the sopranos.

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society gave its annual performance of "The Messiah," on December 14, and, despite the ice-bound roads, the Victoria Hall was filled to repletion. The chorus again proved its right to be classed amongst the best of its kind—perfection of attack, clearness of enunciation, and fine full tone were distinguishing characteristics. The principals were Miss Alice Esty, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Tom Thomas, and Mr. David Hughes. Mr. T. Johnson presided at the organ with judgment. Mr Garner, the conductor, is once more to be congratulated on a worthy representation of Handel's masterpiece.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

THE musical event of the month, so far as Leeds and, indeed, Yorkshire is concerned, has been undoubtedly the production by the Leeds Philharmonic Society of Beethoven's great Mass in D, on November 22. Now that the amalgamation of the Society's concerts with those of the Subscription series has resulted in an enduring success, the financial as well as artistic, it has become possible to secure the Hallé Orchestra at the choral concerts, greatly to their advantage, for here, no less than in the other provincial towns, it is generally the orchestra that proves the weakest feature in performances of modern choral works. Under no other circumstances would it have been possible to attempt so exacting a work as the Mass, which, save for a solitary performance at Bradford some years ago, has been left severely alone, except at Festival times. So far as chorus and band were concerned, the performance was an excellent one. The singers had been well drilled and showed care and intelligence; indeed, it is not too much to say that the choral portions of the Mass had quite as much justice done them as at either of the Leeds Festival productions of the work. The soloists, Miss Alice Esty, Miss Brema, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black, were efficient, though in the case of the soprano a rather more intimate acquaintance with the music might have been desirable. Dr. Stanford conducted the Mass, and the rest of the concert was given up to a somewhat perfunctory performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," which, strange to say, still awaits a thoroughly sympathetic reading in the West Riding. The re-opening of the Leeds Parish Church organ has been another event of interest, and will be dealt with next month.

On the 1st ult. there was tried, with considerable success, what is to Leeds in the nature of an experiment—a smoking concert of chamber music being given at the Metropole Hotel. Mr. E. Elliott's string quartet, a party of able and artistic local players, gave quartets by Mozart, Beethoven, and Dvorák, and the mixture of music and nicotine seemed to be so well appreciated by the devotees of both who formed the audience, that the experiment is likely to be repeated. Another excellent chamber concert, but without the tobacco obbligato, was given by Mr. Rawdon Briggs' Manchester Quartet, assisted by Mr. Noel Bell (pianist) and Mr. E. Elliott (viola), on the 4th ult., when Brahms's String Quintet in F (Op. 88), a Mendelssohn quartet, and one of Beethoven's pianoforte and violin sonatas formed the programme. On the following day Mr. Edgar Haddock's Leeds New Orchestra gave a concert, at which Mr. J. F. Barnett conducted his suite, "The Harvest Festival," and Mr. Willibald Richter, a pianist whose accomplishment is of a very high order indeed, played Henselt's Concerto in F minor in brilliant and artistic style. Mr. Edgar Haddock conducted and Miss Clara Brooke was the vocalist. On the 6th ult. another local orchestra, that of the Leeds Symphony Society, which is practically an amateur organisation, gave a more than creditable performance of Gade's Seventh Symphony, under Mr. Grimshaw's direction. Mr. G. C. Acomb played one of Goltermann's violoncello concertos with good taste, and Mrs. Fred. Brown was the vocalist. Mr. Sarasate, with Dr. Neitzel as pianist, appeared at one of Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings, on the 12th ult., but this, together with a Scottish concert on the 8th, and charity concerts on the 6th and 15th, call for no more than the briefest mention.

BRADFORD.

Two more Subscription concerts at Bradford have to be recorded. On November 24 there was the annual chamber concert, at which Mr. Brodsky's admirable quartet party, with Mr. Busoni as pianist and Madame Blanche Marchesi as vocalist, furnished a programme whose only fault was its extreme length—which necessitated the vandalism of omitting a portion of Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor. On the 15th ult. there was a concert of choral music, Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" being given by the chorus of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, the Hallé Orchestra, and Madame Ella Russell, Madame Marian McKenzie, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Andrew Black, and W. Thornton. Mr. Cowen conducted. The performances were as good as such an array warranted, that of Sullivan's work being, indeed, quite a brilliant one, while the spirit of the "Wedding-Feast" was more nearly realised than when it was given at these concerts last season, Mr. Ben Davies creating a great effect in the tenor solo. There have also been a couple of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra's concerts. This Society is making very satisfactory progress under its new conductor, Mr. Cowen, and this was manifested on November 25, when Haydn's "Military" Symphony was given and Max Bruch's G minor Concerto was played in finished style by a young Spanish violinist, Mr. Figuerido, who reminded the hearer of his compatriot, Sarasate, both in his playing and in his compositions, two of which were included in the programme. The vocalist, Miss Elsie Mackenzie, made an exceptionally good impression by the purity and simplicity of her style. The advance made by the orchestra was more strikingly demonstrated at the concert on the 9th ult., when a really excellent performance was given of Tschaïkowsky's Fourth Symphony—a very exacting task for a band containing a good proportion of amateurs. On this occasion, Mr. A. E. Bartle gave a sympathetic interpretation of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, and Mr. Plunket Greene sang. One of the Harrison concerts, on the 7th ult., presented the usual familiar features of these entertainments.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

Two more of the Huddersfield Subscription concerts call for only the briefest notice. Madame Albani's concert party appeared on November 28 and on the 12th ult. Mr. Dohnányi and Miss Maud Powell played, among other things, the "Kreutzer" Sonata, and the artistic singing of Madame Bertha Moore and Mr. Kennerley Rumford helped to make up an unusually good programme.

At Halifax the newly formed Madrigal Society gave Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" on November 23. Mr. Brearley sang the solo very ably, but the absence of an orchestra made it impossible to do justice to a work in which colour plays so important a part. Mr. Shepley conducted. A local orchestra, the Northgate End Orchestral Society, gave a concert at Halifax on November 30, when three movements of Beethoven's Second Symphony were creditably played, under Mr. Priestley's conductorship. The whole of this same symphony was played by the Keighley Orchestral Society, which is only just entering on its second season, on the 13th ult. The Society musters a band of eighty, and in tone and general efficiency it promises well, under Mr. Summerscales's able conductorship. The Keighley Musical Union, of which Mr. Alfred Benton is the conductor, gave, at its concert on November 28, Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" and Mendelssohn's "Loreley." The soloists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. W. Thornton. Music at Dewsbury is largely in the hands of a couple of able amateurs, but it cannot be said that the programmes of either of the chief societies are in any degree the worse on that account, but rather the reverse. Mr. T. L. Chadwick, who conducts the Dewsbury Choral Society, gave an excellent all-round performance of "Elijah," on November 21, when the principals were Miss Eleanor Jones, Miss Muriel Foster (who sang with marked power), Mr. C. Saunders, and Mr. Dan Price. The band was of particularly good quality, which was the more satisfactory seeing that many of the players were members of the Dewsbury Orchestral Society, which is conducted by Mr. G. H. Hirst. This Society gave quite a model programme on the 11th ult., the "useful" being mingled with the "sweet" with remarkable skill. Sullivan's sparkling "Merchant of Venice" Masque, pieces from German's "Much Ado about Nothing" and "Tempter" music, with the "Prometheus," "Raymond," and "Lustspiel" Overtures, and the first movement of the "Unfinished" Symphony, these will suffice to indicate the nature of the programme, while the performances were of great merit. Miss Alice Simpkin was the violinist and Madame Bertha Moore the vocalist.

The Batley Choral Society reached an unusual standard of efficiency in its "Elijah" performance, on the 5th ult., when Mr. J. Tomlinson conducted, and the soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Marian McKenzie, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. David Hughes. "The Golden Legend" was given by the Morley Choral Society on the following day, Miss Grime, Miss Asquith, Mr. Hanson, and Mr. H. Taylor being the soloists, while Mr. A. F. Briggs conducted in the absence of Mr. Alfred Benton. On the same evening the Farsley Choral Society, under Mr. Albert Jowett's direction, gave "The Messiah," and the Frizinghall Society, conducted by Mr. J. W. Fitton, gave Stanford's "Revenge" and the Choral Fantasia of Mr. Vincent. Cowen's "St. John's Eve" and the "Walpurgisnacht" of Mendelssohn formed the programme of the Brighouse Choral Society's concert on November 22, and were very efficiently performed under Mr. J. H. Pearson's direction. Haydn's "Seasons," was given by the Pudsey Choral Union, under Mr. A. Jowett, on November 27, with a fair measure of success. At Cleckheaton, on the 13th ult., the enterprising Philharmonic Society gave Cowen's Ode "The Passions" and Lloyd's "Hero and Leander." The former work presented some difficulty to a local orchestra, but in other respects the performances were adequate. Mr. W. H. Wright conducted. Professor Stanford's music supplied the greater part of the Armley Choral Society's programme on the 12th ult., when "The Revenge" and "Phaudrig Crohoore" were given with good result, under Mr. H. H. Pickard's conductorship. The Ilkley Vocal Society, on the same date, gave a concert performance of Gounod's "Faust," under Mr. A. Akeroyd.

A somewhat curious mixture was afforded by the juxtaposition of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and portions of "The Messiah" at the concert of the Selby Choral Society, on the 12th ult. Mr. T. Foster conducted. On that day the Doncaster Musical Society, under Mr. H. Mackenzie, gave a performance of "Elijah," and the next evening Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was heard at Pontefract, under Mr. R. B. Walker, and "The Messiah" was given at Ripon, under the Rev. F. H. Taylor's direction. The Harrogate Musical Society, conducted by Mr. C. L. Naylor, gave a very creditable performance of Haydn's "Creation" on the 8th ult., showing a distinct advance on its former efforts.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Eryri Male-Voice Choir (Carnarvon and Llanberis) gave a concert at Windsor Castle, on November 24, by command of the Queen. The programme consisted of Welsh airs, a Welsh glee, a part-song by Grieg, "God bless the Prince of Wales" and "God save the Queen," sung in English and Welsh. Her Majesty was unable to be present, but the Emperor and Empress of Germany and T.R.H. the Prince of Wales and Duke of Connaught were attentive listeners, who highly complimented the conductor, Mr. John Williams (organist of Christ Church, Carnarvon) upon the excellence of the singing. Mr. Williams was the recipient of an ebony baton from Her Majesty the Queen, and one of ivory from the German Emperor, the former bearing the letters V.R. and a coronet, set in diamonds.

On November 29 the Cardiff Musical Society gave a performance of Haydn's "Creation" to a large audience, at the Park Hall, the choruses being sung with great spirit and attack. The soloists were Miss Maggie Davies, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Arthur Barlow. In the second part of the programme Mendelssohn's Psalm "When Israel out of Egypt came" received excellent treatment, and the band gave a fair performance of the "Hebrides" Overture. The performance of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's "Empire Flag" raised both performers and listeners to a high pitch of patriotic enthusiasm. Mr. T. E. Aylward conducted with his usual proficiency.

The first performance in Wales of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was given on the 18th ult., by the Bangor University College and Orchestral Society, at the Penrhyn Hall, under the conductorship of Dr. Roland Rogers, the soloists being Miss Clara Williams, Miss Minnie Macfarlane, and Mr. W. S. Roberts, an old Bangor Cathedral choralist, to whose lot fell the beautiful solo, "Onaway! awake, beloved!" violin, Mr. Henri Verbrugghen; pianoforte, Miss Violet Williams. It is satisfactory to find our national colleges "up to date" in introducing new musical works of this class into the Principality.

FOREIGN NOTES.

COLOGNE.—At the third Gürzenich concert, under Dr. Wüllner's direction, a series of Symphonic Variations (dedicated to Johannes Brahms), by Hans Koessler, was produced for the first time and proved a highly effective and musician-like work. Another novelty was a hymn, "Ave maris stella," for chorus, orchestra, and organ, in which an ancient liturgic melody is effectively utilised, by Anton Urspruch, and which was received with great favour.

COPENHAGEN.—Edvard Grieg gave a grand choral and orchestral concert last month, in which he introduced his new Symphonic Dances and several new choral pieces, before a highly appreciative audience. The Norwegian composer also gave a series of four concerts, with his own compositions, recently at the Royal Theatre, Stockholm, his reception in the Swedish capital being likewise a most enthusiastic one.

DÜSSELDORF.—A new oratorio by C. A. Lorenz, entitled "The Maid of Orleans," was performed here last month, with considerable success. It was also given at Münster and Görlitz.

ERFURT.—A highly successful performance took place, last month, of Heinrich Hofmann's important choral work "Prometheus," very efficiently rendered by the Musik-Verein.

GHENT.—The first performance, at the Municipal Theatre, of Mr. Isidore de Lara's opera "Moïna," last month, resulted in the complete success of the interesting work.

HAMBURG.—On the occasion of the performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea," by the Cecilien Verein, last month, Herr Senger, who interpreted the part of Polyphemus, created quite a sensation by his phenomenal and very artistically trained bass voice.

LÜBECK.—An excellent first performance took place, on November 24, under Professor Stiehl's conductorship, of Max Bruch's new oratorio "Gustavus Adolphus," in the presence of a numerous and enthusiastic audience.

MILAN.—The first performance took place, on November 23, at the Teatro Lirico, of Berlioz's "La Prise de Troie," under the conductorship of M. Colonne, of Paris.——Don Lorenzo Perosi, having completed his oratorio "The Massacre of the Innocents," is now engaged upon another score, forming part of his projected series of oratorios—viz., "The Entry of Christ into Jerusalem." Both new works are to be first performed in the Perosi Hall, now in progress of erection in Milan.

MUNICH.—A "Hugo Wolf Society" has been founded in this capital, with Herren Stavenhagen, Max Schillings, Dr. Conrad, and other leading musicians at its head, and has already a considerable number of members. It will devote itself to the cultivation of the works of contemporary composers, and to Wolf's lyrics in particular.——The fifth concert of the season of the Kaim Orchestra, under Herr Weingartner's direction, included the first performance of a "symphonic prologue" entitled "Riccio," by Adolph Sandberger, which produced a most marked impression. The composition has been inspired by Björnson's poem "Mary of Scotland."

PRAGUE.—Antonin Dvorák's new opera, "The Devil and Katie" ("Cert a Káca"), was brought out for the first time at the National Theatre, on November 25, with great success. The libretto, from the pen of Herr Adolph Wenig, deals, not ineffectively, with a Bohemian traditional story. In the score the melodious and popular elements are happily combined with Dr. Dvorák's masterly and picturesque instrumentation. The composer, who was the object of enthusiastic demonstrations during the performance, was presented, at its conclusion, with a silver laurel wreath, the gift of some of his devoted admirers.

ROME.—The operatic season at the Costanzi Theatre was announced to be inaugurated on the 26th ult., with Verdi's "Aïda." The principal novelty here will be Puccini's new opera, "La Tosca," for which preparations have been going forward for some time past, and which is to be brought out on the 10th of this month.

OBITUARY.—CHARLES LAMOUREUX, the great French conductor, died, we regret to say, in Paris, on the 21st ult. The son of working people at Bordeaux, he was born there sixty-five years ago, and at twelve years of age he played the violin in the Theatre orchestra. In Paris he started a society for the production of sacred music, thus popularising the works of Handel and Bach. His enthusiasm for Wagner's music was equally great. M. Lamoureux was well known in London, where his poetical interpretations of orchestral works of all schools were deservedly appreciated. We hope to refer further to the sad event in our next issue.

ANTOINE DE KONTSKI, who was some twenty-five years ago a familiar figure in London musical society, died on the 7th ult., at Nowogrod, Lithuania, while engaged in a concert tour, at the advanced age of eighty-two.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THADDEUS EGG" IDENTIFIED!

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In your biographical sketch of Mr. Franklin Taylor, you quote from the Musical World a letter signed "Thaddeus Egg," and refer to the name as one of the late Mr. J. W. Davison's "numerous comical synonyms." It certainly did belong to Davison in the sense that he invented it, but the bearer of the name at the time (1867) when the letter appeared was none other than the insignificant person who now addresses you.

In his character as Ap Mutton, supreme chief and lord of the Muttonian fraternity, Davison recruited that curious association at his own good pleasure; enrolling any friend whom he deemed worthy, and bestowing upon him a name, prænomen and cognomen alike, for use in all matters and communications whatever. Himself he endowed with two very distinguishing appellations. First, and chiefly, he was Ap Mutton, and, following the "translation" of that much-to-be-feared personage, he became vicegerent under the style of Dr. Abraham Sadoke Silent. But the names were interchangeable at any time, and the letter you quote is, I observe, addressed to Dr. Silent, though Ap Mutton had not then sought the clouds. As Thaddeus Egg, I often communicated with my revered chief, more or less in the style used by himself, and enjoined upon his followers. This may have led you to identify the writer of the quoted letter as Davison, but in point of fact the author was myself.

I very well remember Mr. Franklin Taylor's appearance at the Crystal Palace in 1867, and the impression which his performance made upon me. I cannot, on the other hand, recall the act of writing the epistle in question, but I recognise it as mine by internal evidence. There is, first, the quotation, "Two remarks I have to make," &c. Davison never used it, but I did, and frequently, at that time. Again, the word "anent" is mine, not Davison's. He loved to "chaff" me on account of the value I seemed to set upon it. There are other parts of the letter in which I see a reflection of myself, but I will only refer to the postscript asking that the printer's attention might be drawn to the initial letter in the name of Mr. Egg's place of abode. The true name was "The Thatch," but the "printer," who of course was Davison himself, considered that an Egg would more appropriately be connected with a Hatch, and he made it so.

Who wrote the letter re Mr. Franklin Taylor is a question of the least possible importance. The point is that Muttonian epistles in the Musical World are not necessarily from the pen of the master, Ap Mutton himself. Of all the Muttonians, at any rate those of the inner circle, I fear that H. Sutherland Edwards and myself are the sole survivors.—I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

JOSEPH BENNETT.

A STOPLESS ORGAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have been much interested, and somewhat amused by the recent references in your interesting paper to the subject of church barrel-organs. In an old book of newspaper cuttings I find the following, which I think must have appeared about forty years ago. Perhaps you may feel disposed to insert it in the January number of THE MUSICAL TIMES:—

"In a small church at a little village near Brighton, where the congregation could not afford to pay an organist, they recently bought a self-acting organ, a compact instrument, well suited to the purpose, and constructed to play forty different tunes. The sexton had instructions how to set it going and how to stop it; but, unfortunately, he forgot the latter part of the business, and after singing the first four verses of a hymn before the sermon, the organ could not be stopped, and it continued playing two verses more. Then, just as the clergyman completed the words "Let us pray," the organ clicked, and started a fresh tune. The minister sat it out patiently, and then renewed his introductory words, "Let us pray," when click went the organ again, and started off on another tune. The sexton and others continued their exertions to find out the spring, but no man could put a stop to it; so they got four of the stoutest men in the church to shoulder the perverse instrument, and they carried it out down the centre aisle of the church, playing away, into the churchyard, where it continued clicking and playing away until the whole forty tunes were finished."—Yours truly,

AN OLD ORGANIST.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABERGAVENNY.—Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron" formed the main feature of a concert given in the Town Hall, on the 13th ult. The solo parts were well sung by Miss Maggie Purvis, Mr. C. Eynon Morgan, and Mr. Montagu Borwell. There was a chorus and orchestra of 140 performers, and the second part of the programme, which was miscellaneous, included Edward German's Masque in "As you like it." The conductor, Mr. W. R. Carr, was presented with an ivory baton at the final rehearsal.

BASINGSTOKE.—The Choral Society gave a concert on the 18th ult. Waddington's choral ballad "John Gilpin," Schumann's "Gipsy Life," and some part-songs were performed. Miss Ethel Barns (violin), Miss Marie Olson (pianoforte), Mr. Charles Phillips (vocalist), and Miss E. Galpin (accompanist) assisted. Mr. H. E. Powell conducted.

BOWDON (CHESHIRE).—On the 13th ult. the Choral Society performed "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The cantata proved so acceptable that it is almost decided to produce one of the later works of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor next season. Mr. C. H. Fogg conducted with great skill, and the accompaniments were supplied by the pianoforte and organ. The tenor solo was sung with great effect by Mr. Alfred Jordan.

BRIGHTON.—Miss Adele Haas gave a concert in the music room at the Pavilion, on the 5th ult., assisted by Miss Clarice Campbell (vocalist), Miss Eileen Owen (violinist), Mrs. Tennant (reciter), and Mr. Willem Coenen. A special feature of the concert was the performance, by the last-named artist and the concert-giver, of Saint-Saëns's "Variations sur un thème de Beethoven" for two pianofortes.

CHARD.—On the 14th ult., in the Corn Exchange, the Harmonic Society complimented its honorary conductor, the Rev. H. N. Dymond, by producing a cantata, "The Eve of St. Agnes," from his own pen, the words having been selected from Keats's poem. The music appears to have been appropriate and dramatically interesting, the choruses were sung with spirit by the choir, and the instrumental parts efficiently rendered by a fairly large orchestra. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire and Mr. J. Dean Trotter, and the composer, who conducted, was heartily applauded at the conclusion.

COVENTRY.—Handel's "Samson" was performed by the Musical Society on November 23. The chorus, which has been increased in size, displayed considerable power, and sang with confidence throughout. The orchestra, composed largely of professional players from Birmingham, played the overture and accompaniments excellently. The solo vocalists were Miss Ada Patterson, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Robert Cunningham, and Mr. Alec Marsh, all being efficient representatives of their respective parts, and Mr. W. H. Hoyle was an able conductor.

DRIFFIELD.—Mr. J. More Smieton's cantata "King Arthur" occupied the greater part of the Choral Society's concert, in the Temperance Hall, on the 12th ult. A marked improvement was observed in the singing of the choir, whose attack was excellent, and there was a small orchestra of strings. The solos were ably rendered by Miss Beatrice Pallister, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. W. Riley; and the conductor, to whose energy and ability the success of the performance is due, was Mr. W. G. Peake.

EASTBOURNE.—Mr. Smallwood Metcalfe's choir gave a concert in the Town Hall, on the 6th ult., when "The Mermaid" (Samuel Liddle) and "The Banner of St. George" (Edward Elgar) were performed. The former is a cantata for female voices, and was performed for the first time in public, accompanied by the composer. It is a melodious and pleasing work, and was well received. The singing of the choir reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. Metcalfe. The soloists were Miss Nora Clench and Mr. Plunket Greene.

EXETER.—The Oratorio Society gave two performances at the Victoria Hall, on the afternoon and evening of the 12th ult., of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty." The choir sang excellently throughout, and the orchestra (leader, Mr. Barré Bayly) gave a very creditable rendering of the delicate instrumentation. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Fanny Emerson, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. S. J. Bishop, the tenor being specially successful in the song "Onaway! awake, beloved!" Dr. Edwards conducted with marked ability.

HANDSWORTH.—The first concert of the present season of the St. James's Choral Society was held in the Public Buildings, on the 5th ult., the chief work being Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron." The solos were sung by Miss Mary Round, Mr. John Walker, and Mr. William Bennett. Miss Horton and Mr. B. Nock presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively, and Mr. Richard Richards conducted.

HOVE.—Mendelssohn's "Athalie," which formed the chief attraction of the Musical Society's concert on the 6th ult., was very creditably performed under the watchful direction of Mr. Frank Butler. The choir sang with intelligence and the accompaniments were very ably played by Mr. Walter Crapps (pianoforte) and Mr. Ernest Holmyard (organ), the latter gentleman accompanying the chief recitation with much skill. The solo vocalists were Miss Esmé Atherden (a very excellent soprano), Mrs. Alice Holman, and Miss Lalla Parry, the recitation of the verses being given, as on many former occasions, by Mr. Charles Fry. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous.

LEEK.—Two successful concerts were given by the children of the Brunswick Wesleyan Schools, on November 30 and the 1st ult., when "The Silver Penny," a delightfully pretty operetta by J. L. Roeckel, was performed. The music is particularly pleasing and considerably above the average of that usually found in school operettas. The two soloists, Elsie Stanyer as the Fairy and Herbert Brough as Will Dalton, both possessed excellent voices and acquitted themselves admirably. The dialogue proved very amusing, and Harry Leek as Freddy Thorn, the knowing boy, was a distinct success. The headmaster of the school (Mr. Davies) conducted, and is to be congratulated both on his choice of the operetta and its performance.

LINCOLN.—The sixth concert of the Musical Society took place in the Drill Hall, on the 6th ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's successful cantata "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was the specially attractive feature. An excellent performance was given, the chorus numbering 200, and the band, which was chiefly professional, was led by Mr. Edward O'Brien; the tenor solo being sung admirably by Mr. Gregory Hast. Sir Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," also most effectively rendered, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Tschaïkowsky's "Casse Noisette" Suite were included in a well chosen programme, upon the efficient carrying out of which Dr. G. J. Bennett, the conductor, is to be congratulated.

NEWBURY.—The Amateur Orchestral Union is to be commended for its selection of Sir Arthur Sullivan's beautiful music to the "Tempest," which was performed in the Town Hall, on the afternoon and evening of November 22. The orchestra played with much intelligence and excellent ensemble, under the very able direction of Mr. J. S. Liddle. Ariel's songs were sung by Miss Lilian Lambert, who was joined in the duet, "Honour, riches, marriage blessing," by Miss Amy Wells, and commendable completeness was given to the performance by the admirable recitation of extracts from the play by Miss Ellen Bowick.

PENZANCE.—At a meeting of the committee for the testimonial to Mr. J. H. Nunn, on the 2nd ult., it was announced that the amount subscribed was £550, and it was resolved that a cheque for £500, together with a silver salver and an illuminated album, containing the names of the subscribers, should be presented to Mr. Nunn at the Penzance Choral Society's performance on the 5th inst.

ST. ASAPH.—On the 14th ult. Sir Hubert Parry's oratorio "Job" was sung in the Cathedral. The chorus, numbering eighty, was composed of singers from St. Asaph, Denbigh, and Rhyl. The solos were taken by the lay clerks and choristers of the Cathedral. The organ, which was supplemented by a small band of strings, was played by Mr. C. Mason. Dr. Archibald W. Wilson conducted.

ST. NEOTS.—The Choral Society performed Elgar's "Banner of St. George," at the Corn Exchange, on the 19th ult. There was a small orchestra and chorus of about 190 performers, under the able direction of Mr. A. Thompson, who deserves commendation for devoting the attention of his Society to the performance of English works. The soloists who appeared in the miscellaneous second part were Miss Bessie Spells, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. R. C. Dutton.

SHREWSBURY.—The old established Musical Society held its second concert of the season on the 4th ult. The principal works given were Gade's "Crusaders" and Elgar's "Banner of St. George." The solo vocalists were Miss Eva Weston, Mr. A. F. Thornborough, and Mr. Ivor Foster. The works were accompanied by one of the finest bands in the Midlands, which greatly added to the effect of the performance, and the choir sang excellently. Mr. J. A. Lea, who has been hon. conductor to the Society since the commencement, must be congratulated upon the successful manner in which he has fulfilled his duties throughout.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Sir Frederick Bridge conducted an excellent performance of his cantata "The Cradle of Christ," in St. Mary's Church, on the 16th ult., in aid of the Girls' Friendly Society; the orchestra consisted of members of the Test Valley Society. Before the cantata Sir Frederick Bridge gave an organ recital. In the evening Sir Frederick lectured at the Hartley Institute on his "Musical Gestures," the illustrations being given by about thirty boys, from a local Board School, with remarkable precision. The boys also gave an excellent rendering of the lecturer's humorous cantata for trebles, "The Frogs and the Ox." The chair was taken by the Inspector of Schools for the district, who expressed his satisfaction at the results attained.

STONE (STAFFS.).—The Musical Society gave its first concert on the 4th ult., the programme including Macfarren's "May-Day" and a miscellaneous second part. The solo vocalist was Miss Jessie Moorhouse, and the whole performance was very successful under the direction of Mr. J. H. Oldham, the organist and choirmaster of Christ Church.

STRABANE (CO. TYRONE).—The Strabane Choral Society gave its first concert of the season on Thursday, the 7th ult., when "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" (Coleridge-Taylor) was produced. This was the first performance of the work in Ireland, and the numerous audience greatly appreciated its many beauties. Under the conductorship of Mr. C. J. Brennan the cantata went with spirit, and the singing was characterised by splendid attack. The Newland-Smith Trio delighted the audience with their beautiful playing and perfect ensemble, and Miss May Donaldson and Mr. Hammett Drake also contributed to the second part of the programme.

SYDNEY (N.S.W.).—The fifteenth annual festival of the Sydney Diocesan Choir Association was held in St. Andrew's Cathedral, on October 20. There was a small orchestra (chiefly strings) and a choir of nearly 350 voices, under the direction of the Rev. P. J. Simpson, the Precentor, and Mr. Montagu Younger ably presided at the organ. The music included Mr. Felix W. Morley's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, the final chorus from Mr. C. S. Packer's oratorio "The Crown of Thorns," which served as the anthem, and Bruce Steane's Te Deum. The Association should be congratulated on its excellent work in stimulating local interest in good Church music.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—At the Conversazione of the Vocal Association, held at the Great Hall on the 4th ult., the main feature of interest was Elgar's cantata "The Banner of St. George." Both chorus and orchestra acquitted themselves with credit under the able direction of their conductor, Mr. W. W. Starmer.

WANSTEAD.—A concert was given on the 18th ult., in the Drummond Rooms, the chief piece being Elgar's cantata "The Banner of St. George." Mr. H. Vincent Read conducted.

WELLINGTON (NEW ZEALAND).—The Orchestral Society at its Subscription concert in the Choral Hall, on October 3, played, for the first time at these concerts, Tschaïkowsky's Suite, "Casse Noisette"; Saint-Saëns's "Danse Macabre"; a Prelude and Mazurka by Délibes; and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March. Madame Eveleen Carlton was the vocalist, and Mr. Maughan Barnett conducted. The fourth of a series of chamber concerts, under the direction of Mr. Maughan Barnett and Herr Max Hoppe, was given on October 5, in the Choral Hall. The programme included sonatas for pianoforte and violin by Grieg and Jensen, and Schubert's String Quartet in B flat. Madame Eveleen Carlton contributed songs by Grieg and Blumenthal.

WEYMOUTH.—Cowen's cantata "St. John's Eve" was the chief feature in the programme of the Choral Society, on the 12th ult. The choir sang with marked intelligence and expression, and the solos were ably rendered by Misses Marie Roberts and Florence Croft, Messrs. D'Arcy Clayton and Sydney Jamieson. There was a small orchestra and Mr. Stone conducted with ability.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

PRECENTOR.—Yes, your protest is perfectly justifiable, and your definition, "outrageous," is strictly within the bounds of "righteous indignation." The pointing of some Bible Psalters seems as if it were the work of men who have little sense of rhetoric, and who are devoid of all poetic appreciation of the Hebrew parallels in the Psalms. The example you give is not the worst that has come under our notice. In one instance the first verse of Psalm 1 is pointed thus:—

Blessed is the mán that | walk-eth | not :

This pointing practically perverts the meaning of the Psalmist's Beatitude, and limits its application to one who has had the misfortune to lose both legs.

"ST. MALO."—Water motors, if good and properly applied, are by far the best means of mechanical organ blowing. Gas engines have many disadvantages in comparison. Messrs. Watkins & Watson, 16, White Lion Street, Islington, are very reliable hydraulic engineers, to whom you may with confidence apply for advice and engines.

C. M.—You should do nothing without previously consulting the builder of the organ. Any cheap system of mechanical blowing is doomed to failure; and it is a great mistake, unless under very exceptional circumstances, to attach engines to the ordinary feeders of an organ designed for manual blowing. See our answer to "St. Malo."

L. A. D.—"Gideon" has formed the subject of at least three English oratorios, produced in the following order: (1) Charles Edward Horsley, Glasgow Musical Festival, 1860; (2) John Stainer, Oxford (Exercise for Mus. Doc. degree), December, 1865; (3) William George Cusins, Gloucester Musical Festival, 1871.

MONA.—"Hymns Ancient and Modern" was published in 1860 (words only). The first edition with tunes (to No. 273) was issued March 20, 1861; the Appendix (to No. 386) in December, 1868; the revised and enlarged edition in 1875; and the present edition in the summer of 1889.

PRO.—The Incorporated Society of Musicians will doubtless serve your purpose. The Hon. Secretary for the Manchester section is Mr. Granville B. Humphreys, 109, Clyde Road, Didsbury, Manchester, who will furnish you with all information.

W. G. B.—We cannot express an opinion upon the qualifications of voice trainers. Be careful that you do not get into the hands of a voice strainer in any attempt to get up to B flat, when, "after some years' tuition," you can only sing up to E.

"DER EDLE RITTER."—We have never heard that the characters in Miss Jessie Fothergill's novel, "The First Violin," represent real personages. Perhaps some of our readers can throw some light upon the matter.

M. G. D.—The work by R. L. Pearsall about which you enquire is entitled "Essay on Consecutive Fifths and Octaves in counterpoint." Messrs. Patey & Willis have some copies in sheets (unbound), price 2*s. net.*

A STUDENT.—Dumb pianos of one or two octaves may be obtained from Messrs. Cramer, Regent Street, or Messrs. Chappell, New Bond Street, London.

REVILO.—Sullivan's "Duo Concertante for Pianoforte and Violoncello" is published by Messrs. Ashdown.

H. E. B.—Thanks for your very practical suggestion, which shall have early attention.

MR. BRIGHT JONES
(TENOR).

OLDHAM MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"The honours of the evening undoubtedly fell to the soprano and the tenor.... Mr. Bright Jones has a voice of exceedingly pleasant timbre, remarkably so in his upper register. He sang with great verve, and his magnificent voice rang through the building with splendid effect. His best efforts were the song, 'O, zephyr kissing 'midst the leaves,' and the duet with the soprano, 'Fairest of roses.' In the former he showed he was as true an artiste in pianissimo as in forte passages; while in the duet, the soprano and Mr. Bright Jones combined most delightfully, which was worked up to a magnificent climax.... The tenor gave a magnificent rendering of the recit. and aria, 'Lend me your aid,' from Gounod's 'La Reine de Saba,' which was certainly the song of the evening."—Oldham Standard, Nov. 19, 1899.

For terms, Glenhurst, Bath; or, N. Vert, Esq., 6, Cork St., London, W.

AN INFANT'S LULLABY
SO, SO, ROCKABY, SO!
NEW SONG
BY MAURICE F. BELL.

Price Two Shillings.

"'So, So, Rock-a-By, So!' is a kind of quaint lullaby, words by Eugene Field, an American poet of great reputation in the United States, and music by the Rev. Maurice F. Bell. We have on former occasions alluded in admiring terms to the works of this composer. The song before us is even more fascinating than usual. Simplicity itself, it is nevertheless arranged with masterly judgment, and the effect of the lullaby if sung in anything like a sympathetic manner must be extraordinary. The words are very touching and tender, and the music expresses them as well as possible. This little gem seems to us to be almost absolutely perfect, but the composer has omitted to indicate the exact tempo."—Lute, November.

HYMN BEFORE ACTION

SONG FOR A BARITONE VOICE

THE POEM BY

RUDYARD KIPLING

THE MUSIC BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

Price Two Shillings.

Ad libitum Accompaniment for Men's voices, in Four Parts, 4d.

NOTE.—Though written as a Baritone Song, this hymn is intended to be sung by many men's voices in unison. Except in the second verse (which may well be sung as solo), the pianoforte part is suited to many voices, and, when used as an accompaniment to a single voice, must be subdued as its character will allow.—H. W. D.

THE BALLAD OF THE "CLAMPHERDOWN"

BY

RUDYARD KIPLING

SET TO MUSIC

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Vocal Score, 8vo, paper cover, One Shilling.

THE TIMES.

The musical material is of the straightforward if rather obvious type that is calculated to endear the strains to a large class of hearers, and the only touch of pathos for which opportunity is given by the poet has been taken advantage of. It was admirably sung, and the applause of the audience was strongly reinforced by the enthusiasm of the choir.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The verses are set to music of a character which has become traditional in the case of naval subjects. . . . Not that it is by any means void of device. The composer's art cannot be described as artless even here, and he plies through tempi and tonalities, through tricks of form and expression, in a manner which shows that a musician, not merely a melodist, is the controlling power. Especially should be commended that part of the plan which, by reverting again and again to the bold and stirring phrases of the opening, binds the whole together, even as the theme of a Rondo unites the episodes. The work deserves to be regarded as a success. It is as dramatic as anything in narrative form can be made; it is animated by the right spirit, and it will go through the country with applause.

STANDARD.

The most striking portion of the composition is what may be termed the refrain, which possesses admirable breadth and dignity. The work was rendered with splendid precision, and with an attention to light and shade that presented the music in the most favourable manner, and the simple and direct style of the writing seemed to find much favour with the large audience.

DAILY NEWS.

It adds another to the still too scanty list of short choral works available to mixed choirs. Sir Frederick Bridge is an experienced writer for choirs, both great and small, and in the "Ballad of the Clampherdown" he has provided a brief choral ode, lasting just under twenty minutes, but extremely effective, although, to gain his effects, he presents no very special difficulties to a well-trained chorus. As such his ballad deserves, and will doubtless speedily obtain, wide popularity.

MORNING POST.

The chorus, mostly in four-part solid harmony, tells the story, the tenors give out the words of the sailors, and the basses the laconic answers of the captain. The lines are well accentuated, and there are some effective harmonic changes, but in its entirety the setting suggests a desire to meet the requirements and abilities of small choral societies.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

A notable feature of his latest production is its unpretentiousness. The music is as free and flowing as the poem. There is not the least indication of effort from the first bar to the last, and the entire work is instinct with a patriotic fervour that quickens the pulse as the end is approached. . . . The ballad has all the qualities conducive to popularity, and that it will be quickly taken up by choral societies there can be no question. It is unmistakably British, it is hearty and stimulating, and yet there is nothing vulgar or even commonplace about it.

GLOBE.

The broad tunefulness of the choral writing and the well-sustained spirit of the music evidently appealed to both the choir and the audience.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Sir Frederick Bridge has set in a simple, straightforward way, which should commend it to choral societies. . . . It is a spirited piece of writing from first to last.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

On the whole, we place the setting of "The Ballad of the Clampherdown" very far ahead of the setting by the same composer of "The Flag of England."

SUNDAY TIMES.

The new ballad was immensely liked by the huge audience, and Sir Frederick Bridge was twice recalled to the platform.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

*UNA

SIXTH AND SEVENTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Eleventh and Twelfth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100. The loan of Orchestral Parts on application to the Composer.

IMPORTANT TO PIANISTS.

THE AUTO-EXAMINER IN SCALES AND ARPEGGIOS
BY
J. MARSHALL BUCKLEY.

An entirely new work, which has received the highest encomiums from all musicians who have seen it, such as Dr. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Samuel Aitken, Hon. Sec. Associated Boards, and many others.

This work is laid out according to the requirements of the Ass. Boards, R.A.M. and R.C.M.—Auto-Examiner A.; the Incorporated Society of Musicians and Trinity College—Auto-Examiner B., in such a manner that students may practise as they will be examined, and may, in a regular daily quota, cover the whole of their Scale and Arpeggio work each week, or fortnight, as may be convenient.

There is no possibility of any item being overlooked or neglected, a thing hitherto unattainable.

This work is not only available for examination candidates, but should be in the possession of every pianist who wishes to keep abreast of his work.

"Students cannot be too careful to avoid a stereotyped style of practising scales and arpeggios. Your manual guards very effectively against this, and I am sure it will be a very great help both to teachers and pupils.

"JOSEPH C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. Doc."

"Your excellent work, most valuable to any student."

"SAMUEL AITKEN, Hon. Sec. Ass. Boards. (Unofficial)."

Large orders are now on hand. Ask your Musicseller for it, or direct from the Publisher, THOMAS MILLS, Imperial Chambers, 62, Dale Street, Liverpool.

"These pieces deserve to become widely known. We have here music that is the evident outcome of the composer's innermost feeling. Its sincerity is as obvious as its charm is penetrating. The Autumn season has inspired Mr. Percy Pitt with many beautiful thoughts. It is a pleasure to come across music so really worthy of the name, and it may be hoped that the 'Harmonies d'Automne' will soon figure on some important concert programme. In the meanwhile we gladly draw the attention of serious amateurs towards these delightful pieces, which can be played over and over again with increasing pleasure."—Morning Post.

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

A CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 30, NO. 2.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.
TONIC SOL-FA, 1S. VOCAL PARTS, 1S. EACH. WORDS ONLY, 5S. PER 100. STRING PARTS, 7S. 6D.
WIND PARTS AND FULL SCORE (in the Press).

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"Minnehaha" is, in its way, as complete and adequate a musical expression as the "Wedding-Feast," and from the very nature of the case one much more moving and impressive. . . . There is in it the same frequent repetition of a few short themes presented under varying conditions, such as relieve the strain of their persistency; there is the same aptness of expression in the phrases, the same partiality for diatonic melody, the same wealth of resource in the orchestration, and an equal measure of the persuasiveness which brings us to think that thus and thus, and in no other way, are the poet's thoughts best clothed upon with musical beauty. The fact just stated embodies the highest triumph of the composer's means and methods, and is the more remarkable because, apart from harmonies and colours that show the freedom of modern treatment, the melodies in which the real and true spirit of music always lies have the simplicity of an older time. About them there is nothing artificial. They never suggest that they have been sought after, but rather that they have come of themselves. Handel is hardly more natural than Mr. Coleridge-Taylor in this regard, or his subjects, so to speak, more inevitable, though, of course, their treatment by the old master, on the one hand, and the young aspirant, on the other, is in the broadest possible contrast. I do not in the least degree underrate the value of Mr. Taylor's powerful and expressive harmonies or the picturesqueness of his orchestration, but I contend, all the same, that the secret of his music's moving force lies in the happy phrases upon which he insists with such remarkable iteration. When sorrowful, there are tears in each one, and with a few notes he can touch the springs of emotion in a degree refused to many who labour strenuously and with elaboration towards the same end. Than this I can say nothing more conclusive of the fact that the youthful Anglo-African is a man with a mission, with a gift of free and natural eloquence in a domain which is the favoured home of that priceless quality, and with a potentiality such as must draw to himself the hope and expectation of all who wish well to English art.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"The Death of Minnehaha" made a deep impression on the listeners. It certainly realised the expectations no less kindled by acquaintance with the first section, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," than by the rumours of its pathetic character. As its position in the programme was the reverse of favourable for such a work, the effect it created was specially gratifying. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor avails himself of all the resources of the modern orchestra, the scoring being exceptionally full—and to emphasise certain passages he freely uses the bass drum, cymbals, and harp. Both chorally and instrumentally the opening passages are rather weird, as they presage the approach to Hiawatha's wigwam of the spectres of Famine and Fever, whose arrival is indicated in a genuinely dramatic manner. Additional suggestiveness is imparted by the dread visitors being respectively represented by the two soloists—baritone and soprano—who are thus heard for the first time. The chorus quickly resume, and the line describing how the doomed Minnehaha "Lay there trembling, freezing, burning," is graphically, but thoroughly legitimately dealt with alike in the voice parts and the accompaniment. Hiawatha's prayer (for baritone solo), "Give your children food, O Father," and the final breathing by Minnehaha (soprano soloist) of the name of her husband, are so agonising in their poignancy, that it is impossible to listen unmoved.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

The tragedy of Minnehaha's death and the sadness of Hiawatha's farewell were brought out with an intensity that profoundly affected the audience.

ATHENÆUM.

Mr. Taylor possesses the rare gift of expressing his thoughts and feelings in a simple, direct manner; with a few characteristic notes, a few expressive chords, he achieves more than some composers with their pretentious themes and startling progressions. He has not so much set to music as illustrated the lines of the poem; there is plenty of skill in the music, and it is all wisely hidden behind the notes; or in other, and perhaps better terms, the vivid soul of the music shines through its body. . . . "The Death of Minnehaha" is hitherto Mr. Taylor's highest effort, and if the final section of his trilogy shows no falling off, then, indeed, he will have produced something leaving powerful footprints on the sands of time.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

The young Anglo-African we may claim as our own. That he is a genius I do not hesitate to declare. He is in gorgeous imagination, a second Tschaïkowsky; in economy of thematic material, another Dvorák. . . . Fine as is "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," the "Death of Minnehaha" is finer. One stands for comedy, the other represents tragedy. . . . Few things in poetry are more pathetic and heart-breaking than the description of the famine in the story of Hiawatha—his fruitless quest for food in the snow-clad forest; the delirium of poor Laughing Water, the victim of fever and starvation; and the devotion of the old Nokomis. These are treated by the young composer with a power of pathos that no one can listen to unmoved. I must confess to being so overcome more than once that I could scarcely control my feelings. The themes are few, but they are so varied in treatment that every page is a fresh revelation. Hiawatha's prayer for food, and his farewell to Minnehaha, are nobly expressed, and are infinitely more touching than even the scene between Wotan and Brünnhilde.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"The Death of Minnehaha" touches a higher level than "Hiawatha's Wedding," and the reason is not hard to discover. In the "Feast" we have lightness and something like revelry. In "Minnehaha" we have tragedy, not, be it observed, the deep, and, so to speak, scientific and studied tragedy of the Greeks, but a human, tender, touching tragedy, which is all the more effective by reason of its simplicity. From the first bar the music takes hold. . . . Those who only see the pianoforte score cannot realise the tremendous effect of the unaccompanied call: "Minnehaha!" on pages 20 and 21, where the utmost passion of human desolation is expressed by the unaccompanied chorus.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

It is a story of despair, desolation, and death, and the composer has fully realised its tragic interest, every phase of it being vividly pictured. He employs the same devices, he startles again by his rhythmic innovations; some of his themes are almost barbaric in their wildness. In contrast with the joyousness, the fun, and the humour of its predecessor, the new work is very striking. A great effect is produced by the composer's treatment of the poet's awful personification of Famine and Fever, and there is something wonderfully pathetic in Minnehaha's death-song.

STAFFORDSHIRE SENTINEL.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's new work is magnificent. No less a term will describe it. It has proved to be an all-round improvement on the "Wedding-Feast." The choruses are more varied and beautiful, and the solos are inexpressibly affecting. . . . Many were deeply touched by the dramatic story and its wonderful treatment. . . . This work distinctly classes Mr. Taylor as one of the very finest composers who have seen the light in what some people will persist in describing an unmusical country.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

FIFTY-THREE BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING EACH.

"Mr. Franklin Taylor's splendid series of 'Progressive Studies' has advanced considerably since the earlier books were reviewed in The Times; those lately issued contain a book of Staccato Studies, two books of 'Repetition and Tremolo,' two of 'Part-playing,' and two of 'Rhythm.' The examples are chosen from numerous sources that are not, for the most part, in the ordinary repertory of the schools; and it is almost pathetic to think of the acres of Czerny's works, for example, that the able editor must have traversed in order to find good studies for the different branches of his book. His own examples are one and all excellent in design, and many of them are agreeable compositions, though all keep their practical end well in view. The choice of examples for 'Part-playing' was so wide that this of itself must have been a difficulty; the arrangements from Rink's Organ School are very suitable, and this division of the book ends with a Fugue by Mozart. No doubt the reason for not including any examples by Bach in this class was that the immortal '48' are in themselves the highest school of part-playing, and that any mere selection from them would be very little use. The books on 'Rhythm' contain many different kinds of difficulties, and here and there are studies that look quite easy at first, only revealing after a time some passage calculated to entrap the unwary student. The collection is entirely worthy of praise, and when the set of fifty-two books is completed it should be recognised as the standard work on technique."—The Times.

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

VERSE BY JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"This charming work was composed for the pupils of King Edward VI.'s High School for Girls, Birmingham, and bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. II., Chant No. 23, by Lord Mornington, which is included on account of its great popularity.

BALLADE

IN A MINOR

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 33.)

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo, 2s.
String Parts, 4s. 6d.
Wind Parts, 10s. 6d. Full Score, 7s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

Wonderfully interesting, quite beautiful and characteristic. It is marked by the same strong instinct for beauty of tone-colouring and for characteristic turns of melody that has distinguished his work in more modest surroundings, and it is a most favourable specimen of his powers. The theme, which we should be warranted in naming the second subject, is most fascinating in its naïve beauty, and placed as it is in contrast to a strenuous and most original theme of bluff and almost savage character, it is thrown into the best light. The feeling for real effect manifested throughout the work is most remarkable, and it is no wonder that the excellent performance given by the band called forth an exceptionally hearty outburst of enthusiasm.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie led his band very brilliantly through the fiery and passionate Orchestral Ballade.... This piece certainly loses nothing by repetition. The warmth and spirit of its themes and the luxuriance of its instrumentation are in every way characteristic of modern art and latter-day freedom of expression. Thus rightly classified, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade is a fine and impressive thing, which should surely be the forerunner of much more music in the same picturesque and imaginative vein.

MORNING POST.

It is a striking work, and it possesses a masterful force and half untamed and fiery exuberance that give it memorable distinctiveness. . . . These two themes and the initial subject are treated with great skill and command of the orchestra, the work in its entirety possessing a life and individuality that fix it in the memory, and increase expectation of what its composer may write in the future.

STANDARD.

The Orchestral Ballad produced for the first time in public to-night is a remarkable and striking work, and possesses in notable degree the peculiar blending of barbaric and Western modes of expression which is so distinguishing a feature of this young composer's efforts. . . . The whole work, indeed, seems to glow with intensity and life, and it holds the attention with relentless grasp. The success of the work to-night was instantaneous.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The work occupies barely a quarter of an hour in performance, but it is long since a Festival novelty has provided fifteen minutes packed so full of excitement and charm. In its alternations of barbaric gaiety with languid swaying melody, in its wayward rhythms and strange exotic harmonies, this remarkable work provokes comparisons with the best work of the Bohemian school, and emerges with credit from the ordeal of comparison.

ATHENÆUM.

A short composition, yet of such vivid imagination, rich colour, and wise restraint, coupled with youthful boldness, that it is a forecast of a great and brilliant career—if only health and strength continue, and if Mr. Taylor escapes from the many dangers which beset a rising artist. The composer at the close of the performance was received with marked enthusiasm.

THE SEASONS

NEW SUITE FOR FULL ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

String Parts, 18s. 6d.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HARVEST DANCE FROM ABOVE
Arranged as a Pianoforte Solo, 2s.; Pianoforte Duet, 3s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.
The music is full of the composer's wonderful vitality and distinguished by his usual command of every orchestral resource.

STANDARD.
The first number is based on melodious themes, the second subject being particularly expressive and graceful. . . . The following movement is a Harvest Dance. In this Mr. German is in his happiest humour. The chief melody is a splendid old ballad-like fling of dance time, to which it is almost impossible to keep the feet from beating time, and when, later in the movement, it is played slowly, it acquires a humorous suggestiveness that is irresistible.

MORNING POST.
A set of brilliant and elaborate tone pictures remarkable chiefly for the excellence of the orchestral treatment. The second number, "Summer," is the one most likely to become popular. . . . Mr. German's mastery of orchestral technique has often been happily exemplified, and the present work again exhibits his talent in the blending of instrumental tone colours to great advantage.

DAILY CHRONICLE.
The "Spring," "Autumn," and "Winter" (Christmas-tide) movements are replete with ingenuity, and possess the freshness that has rendered his Gipsy Suite and Shakespearean Incidental Music notable.

DAILY GRAPHIC.
It is delightful. The melodies are pleasing and the orchestration extraordinarily rich and suggestive. It is difficult to choose where all is good, but perhaps the most attractive numbers at a first hearing are the tender and graceful "Autumn" section and the brisk "Harvest Dance" which does duty for summer.

OBSERVER.
The most attractive number is the second, entitled "Harvest Dance," which is based upon a subject of such rhythmic force and strong melodic character that it is almost impossible to keep a still head while the dance notes fill the air; and when, in the course of development, the melody is played slowly, it acquires a savour of mock sagacity which is irresistibly humorous.

VARIATIONS

ON AN ORIGINAL THEME

FOR

ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 36.)

Full Score, 25s. String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, 22s.
Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the COMPOSER.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.
It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.
Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.
The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.
The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.
Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.
Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.
They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.
The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.
Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO. have much pleasure in announcing that they have made arrangements with the owners of the Copyright of Sir GEORGE GROVE'S well-known DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, which enable them, for a limited time only, to supply it at a greatly reduced price.

 This Special Issue, it should be observed, is only of a temporary character, and it is not to be regarded as implying the early appearance of an entirely new edition of the Dictionary, which, as a matter of fact, Messrs. Novello & Co. are authorized to say that Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have not in contemplation.

TEMPORARY PRICES OF THE FOUR VOLUMES

Previously published, only in cloth, at £4 11s. 6d.

CLOTH BINDING	£2 0 0
HALF MOROCCO	£3 0 0
FULL MOROCCO	£4 0 0

Should the purchaser desire to take advantage of the instalment system, he can obtain the complete Book on payment of a deposit of 7s. (Cloth), 13s. (Half Morocco), or 24s. (Full Morocco); and must then complete the transaction by five monthly payments of 7s., 10s., or 12s. respectively.

BY

J. A. FULLER MAITLAND, ESQ.

SIR GEORGE GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC & MUSICIANS

(1) Is now offered to the public at a price which should bring it within the reach of many who have long desired this valuable possession.
(2) Is now published, for the first time, in solid serviceable leather bindings; specially suitable for heavy books of reference, so constantly and quickly consulted.
(3) Has been recognised, since its first appearance, as a Standard Book of Reference on all topics connected with the Art and History of Music and the Lives of Musicians.
(5) Is the work of nearly one hundred and twenty eminent Contributors, both English and Foreign.
(6) Fills more than three thousand pages.
(7) Represents the zealous and unceasing labour of ten years.
(8) Contains a copious Index by Mrs. Edmond Wodehouse, a complete List of Contributors, and a valuable Catalogue of Articles contributed by each Writer.
(9) Is edited by Sir George Grove, with the assistance of J. A. Fuller Maitland, Esq.
(10) Has been written for a large public; appeals alike to the Amateur and the Professional; is based on original Research, and is thoroughly readable throughout.

Copies of the book may be seen at the offices of Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 1, Berners Street, Oxford Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C. An explanatory pamphlet, giving a full description of Contents, a List of Contributors, and a Catalogue of the Articles contributed by each writer, with specimen pages and illustrations, and an order form will be sent Post-free on application.

[AN ORDER FORM WILL BE FOUND IN THIS PAPER.

C. BECHSTEIN,

Pianoforte Manufacturer

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

The World's Greatest Pianists prefer the BECHSTEIN Piano to any other.

LISZT writes: "For twenty-eight years I have now used your Pianos, and they have maintained their superiority. Your instruments are perfect."

RUBINSTEIN writes: "At my Concerts I use BECHSTEIN'S Pianos almost exclusively. C. BECHSTEIN has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making."

VON BÜLOW writes: "C. BECHSTEIN'S Instruments are distinguished by their superior quality in every branch of Pianoforte manufacture."

WAGNER writes: "C. BECHSTEIN'S Pianos are resounding benefits to the musical world."

GRIEG writes: My enthusiasm for your productions in the art of Pianoforte-making has ever been far too great for it possibly to be increased."

MOSZKOWSKI writes: "BECHSTEIN has succeeded in producing THE pianoforte of the nineteenth century. Such is its perfection that players and hearers must all agree that by BECHSTEIN the last word in pianoforte manufacture has been said."

MOTTL writes: "We musicians have to express our heartfelt gratitude to the firm of BECHSTEIN for having given us, in their instruments, the possibility of producing quite orchestral effects on the piano."

STAVENHAGEN writes: "I do not know of any other Pianoforte besides yours which, in tone and touch, affords the player facilities so exquisite and ideal."

SARASATE writes: "BECHSTEIN is the Stradivarius of the Piano."

SOPHIE MENTER writes: "BECHSTEIN, the King of all pianoforte manufacturers."

JOSEF HOFMANN writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano possesses greater poetry of tone than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel."

LESCHETIZKY writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist. Nobility and power of tone, warmth and refinement in singing quality, perfection in mechanism with the utmost capacity for expression and shading are the great qualities of a BECHSTEIN piano. The pianist finds in it an intimate friend for his home, and a faithful and reliable ally in his battle for public renown."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN writes: "There is a mysterious charm in the tone of BECHSTEIN'S Pianos; as much power and fulness as unheard-of beauty and delicacy, coupled with a touch so capable of modulation for the player, that an artist could not desire a more ideal instrument. To me it is the height of joy to play on these instruments, then alone can I become one with the Piano and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a BECHSTEIN Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius string quartette."

RUFFORD ABBEY, Nov. 14, 1899. Specially engaged to sing before H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, on the occasion of his visit to Lord and Lady Savile.
Copy of letter from Lady Savile:—
"Rufford Abbey, Ollerton, November 27, 1899.
"Lady Savile presents her compliments to Mr. Samuel Masters, and is very glad of this opportunity of telling him how very pleased the Prince of Wales was with Mr. Master's singing, and all the other guests at Rufford Abbey were equally appreciative.
Extract from Retford and Gainsborough Times, Nov. 17, 1899:—
"Mr. Samuel Masters, who is the possessor of an excellent tenor voice, sang two songs . . . by special request of H.R.H. Mr. Masters sang yet another song . . . before leaving H.R.H. personally notified to Mr. Masters his appreciation of his singing."
Also engaged by Mr. ARTHUR CHAPPELL for Saturday Popular Concerts, Dec. 2.
Extract from Daily Graphic, Dec. 4, 1899.
"Mr. Samuel Masters, a tenor with a pleasant voice and good method, sang songs in a neat and unaffected manner."

(BARITONE),

SOLOIST, LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1898.

Of the principal North of England and Scotch Concerts, &c.

"JUDAS."—"In the favourite air, 'Arm, arm, ye brave,' Mr. Browning came out strongly. His voice is more full than when he last sang at Gainsbro', and his notes rang out with great richness. It was a splendid effort, and Mr. B. had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments. . . . He gave a magnificent rendering of 'The Lord worketh wonders,' rolling forth in rich full tones, and with dramatic force and power, this striking example of Handel's finest music. . . . In 'Rejoice, O Judah,' Mr. B. again scored a signal success."—Gainsbro' News, Dec. 15, 1899.

"ELIJAH."—"Mr. John Browning is well known in Goole, and his fine voice was heard to as great advantage as heretofore. In spite of the difficult and trying numbers entrusted to him, Mr. B. never tired, but was singing as freshly at the finish as at the commencement, his voice being remarkable for its staying powers, &c."—Goole Times, Dec. 29, 1899.

"MESSIAH."—"His vocalisation was a great treat, &c."—Whitby Times, Dec. 22, 1899.

"The finished and altogether effective rendering which he gave of the exacting bass solos, &c."—Stockton Telegraph, Dec. 29, 1899.

Address, Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

"KING SAUL."—"Mr. Charles Knowles' Samuel, apart from mannerisms which will be shed with wider experience, sang the lines allotted to the Prophet with fulness and sonority of voice that will assuredly place him among the favoured candidates for principal work at our chief Festivals."—Scotsman, Oct. 14, 1899.

"The fine bass voice of Mr. Charles Knowles sounded very effective in the delivery of the words, first of Samuel and afterwards of Samuel's Ghost, conjured up by the Witch of Endor."—Manchester Guardian, Oct. 14, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles, who has throughout the Festival accomplished consistently good work, maintained his usual excellence in the character of Samuel."—Nottingham Guardian, Oct. 14, 1899.

Beg to announce their Change of Address to—
The Elms, Acton Hill, W.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS)

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

"CREATION" AT MELKSHAM.—"Without attempting in the least to detract from the performance of the other artists, the star of the evening was undoubtedly Mr. H. Sunman, L.R.A.M., who was listened to with the keenest enjoyment, his rich bass voice being heard to advantage in all the parts taken by him."—Wiltshire Chronicle, December 2, 1899.

"CREATION" AT BURTON-ON-TRENT.—"Mr. Henry Sunman is the possessor of a powerful baritone voice of excellent quality, which was effectively used. The air 'Rolling in foaming billows,' with its realistic accompaniment, was very dramatically rendered, and 'Softly purling' was sung with much feeling. He was also heard to advantage in the air, 'Now Heaven in fullest glory shone.'"—Burton Chronicle, December 7, 1899.

"CREATION" AT COALVILLE.—"Mr. Sunman sang in masterly fashion the air 'Rolling in foaming billows,' and was also deservedly applauded for the excellent way in which he gave the solo, 'Now Heaven in fullest glory shone,' and in all his efforts he was very successful."—Burton Guardian, December 9, 1899.

"MESSIAH" AT PAIGNTON.—"Mr. Henry Sunman's best effort was 'The trumpet shall sound,' the bright ringing tones of his upper register coming out with thrilling effect."—Paignton Observer, December 7, 1899.

CLARENCE ROOMS, BRIGHTON.—"Mr. Henry Sunman, a baritone new to Brighton audiences, made a very favourable impression in 'The Bedouin Love Song' and 'The Song of the Bow.' He has a powerful voice, with some particularly good deep notes; and for both of his songs he was enthusiastically applauded."—Brighton Society, December 9, 1899.

"CREATION," COVENTRY.—"Mr. Henry Sunman was also distinctly successful, using his sonorous and powerful voice with great effect."—Coventry Reporter, December 16, 1899.

"SAMSON" AT MADELEY.—"Premier honours must be accorded the bass, Mr. H. Sunman, for his delineation of Manoah and Harapha. In every item he sang as a true artist; the air, 'Honour and Arms,' was rendered in a masterly manner, in fact it was the item of the evening, and at the conclusion he met with a storm of applause and cries of 'Encore.' He repeated his fine effort."—Wellington Journal, December 23, 1899.

"ST. PAUL" AT WORCESTER.—"Mr. Henry Sunman was equally successful in the bass music, for which his full rich voice was peculiarly suited. The air, 'Consume them all,' was given with splendid vigour, and 'Oh God, have mercy,' with perfect feeling. The duet between the tenor and bass, 'Now we are ambassadors,' was one of the best appreciated numbers of the oratorio."—The Worcester Advertiser, January 20, 1900.

PHILIP ARMES.

And holy Durham's Minster fair
A crown of yellow rays did wear,
And we beheld with rapture there,
By sunset's powers
Transfigured in the radiant air
The two West towers.
F. W. Faber.

"Half church of God, half castle 'gainst the Scot." With what truth do these words of the great Wizard of the North strike the visitor as he beholds the imposing pile on the cliff above the Wear. The site of Durham's stately sanctuary has perhaps no parallel in the world. Verily it is beautiful for situation. Its fellow, but more ancient edifice, the Castle, recalls the times of trouble and turbulence which characterised the strong and dominant character of the natives of the far North. Moreover, did not the Conqueror erect those frowning walls as a residence for the Prince Bishops of the Palatine of Durham? But all is changed. Prince Bishops no longer exist, and their successors—amongst whom are the honoured names of Westcott and Lightfoot—have sought a domicile elsewhere. The Castle, now no longer necessary as a place of defence, has become the peaceful habitation of the University of Durham.

The Cathedral, one of the grandest specimens of massive Norman architecture to be found anywhere, is an object of supreme interest. "Rocky solidity and indeterminate duration" is the description given by Dr. Johnson of its location and architecture. The graceful beauty of the Eastern Transept, which goes by the name of the Nine Altars, is a feature never to be forgotten. And of special interest is the Galilee Chapel, at the West End, which was designed for the sake and for the use of the women who wished to worship in the church. St. Cuthbert had an unusually monkish fear of women, and they were not allowed to approach the shrine. The student of Old Mortality will here find the tomb of the great St. Cuthbert, with whom the origin of the stately fane is so closely associated, and the last resting-place of the Venerable Bede.

Durham Cathedral is not without a musical history. In 1683 good old Father Smith, for a consideration of some £700 in hard cash and the old organ in kind, undertook "at his own proper costs and charges to make and sett up in the Organ loft of the said Cathedral Church of Durham, a good, perfect, tuneable, and harmonious Great Organ and Chair Organ with a case of good sound and substantiall Oak wood, according to a draught or modell of an organ in parchment, whereon, or whereunto all the said partys have subscribed their names," &c. Amongst the seventeen stops (twelve in the great and five in the choir) specified by Father Smith in this "tuneable and harmonious" instrument was "A voice Humane of Mettall, containing fifty-four pipes."

SOME DURHAM ORGANISTS.

In regard to the organists of Durham Cathedral, length of service has been a remarkable feature of those who have held the office during the last two hundred years. Here are some striking facts, gathered from Mr. John E. West's "Cathedral Organists."

	Dates and tenure of office.
James Hesletine	1710-1763 53 years.
Thomas Ebdon	1763-1811 48 ,,
Charles E. J. Clarke ...	1811-1813 2 ,,
William Henshaw ...	1813-1862 49 ,,
Philip Armes	1862-

Ebdon, by the way, was a Durham chorister and the composer of the popular Evening Service, "Ebdon in C." Excluding Clarke—the boy organist, who was appointed at the age of sixteen, and who held the post for only two years until he went to Worcester Cathedral—the last three organists averaged half-a-century of service good and true in Durham Cathedral. But it is now time to turn to the present holder of this chief musicianship, who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

Philip Armes was born at Norwich, August 15 (not March 29, as is often stated), 1836. His father, Philip Armes, was a schoolmaster. He was also an excellent bass singer. During his mastership of a school, four miles out of Norwich, Mr. Armes, accompanied by his little son, used to come into the city three times a week to sing at the various glee clubs in Norwich. Even in his tenderest years Philip, junior, began that invaluable "picking up"—that habit of close observation and self-acquired knowledge—which has been of incalculable service to him throughout his career.

Upon the return of his father to Norwich as the schoolmaster of St. Lawrence National School, Phil, aged nine, became a chorister of Norwich Cathedral, in the month of June, 1846. He possessed a beautiful voice and could read anything at sight. The celebrated Dr. (then Mr.) Zechariah Buck was organist and master of the choristers. "Buck," recalls Dr. Armes, "was a wonderful judge of tone: the tone that he obtained from us boys was of the purest kind, and it was most beautiful. I was sent by Buck to Dr. Brewer's school as a sort of show-off boy, to illustrate the music-teacher's remarks during the lessons to the boys there. Bunnett was the senior Cathedral boy at that time.

JENNY LIND'S FAVOUR.

"I well remember the visit of Jenny Lind to Norwich as the guest of the Bishop—Stanley, father of Dean Stanley—in September, 1847. The Cathedral choir was invited to the Palace to sing before the 'Swedish Nightingale' and a number of less celebrated people. With more 'braggadocio' than logic, Buck said: 'I'll show you what my youngest boy can do!' Whereupon I had to sing Arne's 'Where the bee sucks.' I think that Jenny Lind was pleased, as when I had finished she literally took me on her knees, and with me in her lap she sang one of her exquisite 'Swedish Melodies.'"

After a choristership of two years and a half at Norwich, Philip entered the choir of Rochester Cathedral, to which his father had been appointed a lay clerk. Two years later another lay clerk joined the Rochester choir, John Bridge by name, the father of Sir Frederick and Dr. Joseph C. Bridge. Thus the paternal relatives of the future organists of Durham and Chester Cathedrals and Westminster Abbey sang together, side by side, for many years in the choir of Rochester Cathedral. The salary of a lay clerk was then £50 per annum; but the Chapter Clerk gave Mr. Armes a clerkship in his office in order to make it possible for the bass singer from Norwich to make a living. The good lay clerk was not overburdened with riches; but to his credit be it recorded that he managed to bring up a family of seven children upon £150 a year.

ROCHESTER CHORISTERS.

Master Philip began his Rochester career on Christmas Day, 1848. His voice was so exceptionally good that he was at once made "solo boy," and he had to sing "There were shepherds," &c., from "The Messiah" on that festive day. The late Dr. John Larkin Hopkins was then organist of Rochester Cathedral. Amongst the small mites in the choir were Freddy Bridge and Edwin John Crow, now organist of Ripon Cathedral. In Armes's time it was compulsory for the six senior boys at Rochester to learn an instrument—violin, viola, or pianoforte. Master Armes took up the violin, but subsequently exchanged it for the viola, which he plays to this day. He sang all the solos in the Cathedral and many concert engagements came in his way.

A PRESENTATION PIANOFORTE.

At the end of his choristership he was the recipient of a gift that was almost unique in cathedral establishments. His singing had proved to be so very acceptable—not to use a stronger term—that in the Great Exhibition year (1851) the fourteen-year old chorister was presented with a sixty-five guinea Broadwood which had been purchased by public subscription. This instrument, a "Patent Superior Square Pianoforte, compass C to G, No. 60690," was purchased by Mr. (afterwards Dr.) J. L. Hopkins, and duly despatched on Lady Day, 1851, addressed to Master P. Armes, 3, Almon Place, East Gate, Rochester.*

The following, unearthed from the Rochester, Chatham, and Strood Gazette of March 25, 1851, furnishes an interesting reference to the aforesaid presentation:—

Master Armes.—We understand that Master Armes, chorister in Rochester Cathedral, is about to receive a substantial and handsome proof of the liberality of the Dean and Canons of Rochester. The members of the Cathedral Choral Society and others, who wish to encourage and stimulate the musical talent he has displayed, have also lent their aid to the project. To assist him in the study of music, and in training for the profession to which he is to devote himself, a costly pianoforte has been purchased for his use. As the contributions (which were on the most liberal scale), and the selection of the instrument (one of Broadwood's best grand squares) were entrusted to Mr. Hopkins, the organist, it is clear that under the able superintendence of that gentleman the youthful artist will enter upon his studies with very superior advantages. Such a tribute to art deserves especial commemoration, for, gratifying as it must be to the recipient of the gift, it evinces a generous spirit of patronage in those whose especial province it is to consecrate music to the noblest of its uses.

ORGANIST AT £25 A YEAR.

In 1850 Armes was articled to Dr. J. L. Hopkins, the Chapter Clerk kindly defraying the cost of his articles. He remained six years in this state of pupilage, and acted as assistant-organist at the Cathedral, always, however, making the most of his opportunities. In 1854 he obtained his first organ appointment—that of Trinity Church, Milton, Gravesend, at a salary of £25. Milton is seven and a half miles from Rochester, and the young organist frequently walked the whole distance four times on Sundays—thus he often tramped no less than thirty miles in the day, this in addition to playing his two services and assisting Hopkins at the afternoon service in the Cathedral. This is the sort of experience that gives a man grit and teaches him to dispense with luxuries. Two events of the year 1854 have a distinct place in Dr. Armes's recollections. On May 18 he sang among the basses in the special choir in St. Paul's Cathedral at the service held to commemorate the Bi-centenary of the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy. For that occasion Goss wrote his fine anthem, "Praise the Lord, O my soul," when the then senior chorister at St. Paul's was Master Johnnie Stainer. About three weeks later (June 10, 1854) Armes sang in the choir at the opening of the Crystal Palace by the Queen.

ST. ANDREW'S, WELLS STREET.

London was soon to be the residence of the young organist of Milton-next-Gravesend. In the early part of 1857 the organistship of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, was vacant, consequent on the resignation of Mr. John Foster, upon whom "must rest the credit of having established at St. Andrew's a purely Anglican type of a cathedral musical service." The vicar went to Elvey at Windsor in his endeavour to find a man for the vacant post. A friend of Elvey's present at the time said: "Why don't you get young Armes from Rochester? He is a smart young fellow who is only vegetating down there." The result of this (apparently) chance remark was that Philip Armes became organist of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, in March, 1857, at a salary of £100 a year, which was afterwards raised to £120. During the whole of his four years' residence in London he lodged at No. 69, Berners Street, second floor. With the addition of "a little teaching" to his organ salary he not only succeeded in making both ends meet, but when, four years later, he went to Chichester he had managed to "put by a something." "Since I was seventeen years of age," says Dr. Armes, "I have not cost anyone a shilling." At St. Andrew's he introduced the well known "York Litany," the first part of which was composed by Thomas Wanless, organist of York Minster (circa 1691), and the latter part, beginning with the Suffrages, was composed expressly for St. Andrew's by Dr. Armes.*

Immediately upon his arrival in the Metropolis, Armes joined Henry Leslie's Choir. He had no difficulty with the entrance sight tests, and he became an enthusiastic member of that celebrated choral company. "Leslie was extremely kind to me," he says. "He allowed me to attend all the rehearsals of his Amateur Orchestral Society, which he conducted, and gave me many lessons in scoring, absolutely without taking a farthing by way of payment. Leslie used to try over all his compositions with a select quartet, of which I was the bass, in order to test what their practical effects would be before he published them. I attended all the 'Monday Pops.' and frequently treated myself to the Opera."

DEGREE DIFFICULTIES.

During his early residence in London young Armes worked for his Bachelor's degree (Oxford), which he took in the year 1858. A windfall, not unconnected with the purchase of a Broadwood pianoforte, furnished the sinews of war wherewith to cover the University fees, which amount was carefully deposited in the Savings Bank. Philip Armes was the first candidate to be examined vivâ voce under the new Statutes at Oxford. No provision seemed to have been made by the University for the matriculation of non-resident examinees. Armes spent a whole day in Oxford being driven from pillar to post in vainly endeavouring to gain admittance into one of the Colleges or Halls. One Head was blandly courteous in his "regrets," another replied in terms akin to burglar civilities. At last, just as the would-be graduate was giving up in despair, the Warden of New showed compassion, and allowed Armes to place his name on the books of that College. The Warden, however, said to him (sotto voce), "You had better tip my butler half-a-crown as you leave." That was the half-crowning point of the examination process which was shortly afterwards crowned by the conferment of the degree of Bachelor of Music. His degree exercise was a setting of "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion" (Joel ii.).

CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL.

After holding for four years the office of organist of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, Mr. Armes successfully competed for a similar post at Chichester Cathedral, where he commenced his duties on May Day, 1861. There were five competitors for the post and Turle was the adjudicator. All the candidates played on the same day and afterwards lunched together at the Deanery. Armes was the only one of the quintet who held a University degree, and thus the remark of Dean Hook, "Mr. Armes, I think you hold an Oxford degree," was a very significant one. Dean Hook at his own dinner table afterwards said to him: "I wanted to elect you without a trial, for my friend Ouseley has spoken so highly of your doings at Oxford." The new organist was immediately admitted into the society of the Close; among his first pupils at Chichester were the daughters of the Bishop, Dean, and Precentor.

THE COMPETITION FOR DURHAM.

The lines had fallen to Mr. Armes in pleasant places in Chichester; but the Southern city was to be only a place of temporary sojourn for him—one year and a half, in fact. Dr. William Henshaw, who up to this time had been organist of Durham Cathedral, and who had raised the standard of its choir to a high state of efficiency, now resigned on "full pay," which he drew for fifteen years after his retirement. "Why don't you try for Durham?" asked Dr. Rowden, the Precentor. "Nothing venture, nothing have," thought the young organist at Chichester—at all events, he entered for the vacant post. But the Durham competition was a much more serious business than that of Chichester. Amongst the six selected candidates was the late Dr. E. T. Chipp. Each man played two services on a given day. The late Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes, who was then resigning the Precentorship, was the adjudicator. He also supplied the subject for the four-part fugue which each competitor had to extemporize. The Durham instrument was then a G organ, and Armes discreetly chose the St. Ann's Fugue as his chief organ solo. He was the only one of the six who did not play the Hallelujah Chorus, which was an especial favourite of the venerable

* We are indebted for this information to "A short account of the Musical Services" at St. Andrew's, Wells Street, contributed by Mr. F. A. W. Docker, the present organist, to an interesting "History" of the church, "1847 to 1897," privately printed.

Dean's dear old maiden sisters! The bill on Armes's trial-day included Travers in F and "In Thee, O Lord," Weldon (morning); Novello in E and "Ascribe unto the Lord," Travers (evening). The sight-reading tests in his case were a movement from one of Haydn's Masses and the last chorus from Spohr's "Calvary." "Mr. Philip Armes, of Chichester Cathedral," proved to be the successful candidate, and he was appointed organist of Durham Cathedral on November 14, 1862. Thus for a period of more than thirty-seven years the life-work of Dr. Armes (he took his Doctor's degree at Oxford in 1864) has been honourably associated with the city on the Wear and its extremely beautiful cathedral.

THE LATE REV. DR. J. B. DYKES.

One of the earliest important functions at which the new organist had to assist was a Choral Festival in the Cathedral, on September 10, 1863, when the choir, consisting of 1,900 voices, was conducted by the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dykes, who retained his Minor Canonry of the Cathedral until his death in 1876. Dr. Armes speaks of Dr. Dykes as "a valued friend, an excellent critic, and a beautiful player." Upon the death of the well known hymn-tune composer, Dr. Armes practically initiated a fund in aid of his widow and children. He was the first honorary secretary to the fund; but the work increased so rapidly that two additional secretaries had to be appointed. The appeal resulted in the magnificent sum of £10,250, contributed by English-speaking people of all denominations and in various lands. Even after the subscription list was closed £300 was received from Australia.

A VIOLA PLAYER.

Dr. Armes has by no means vegetated during the long tenure of his office at Durham. He has been blessed with good health—"I have not had a day in bed for forty-five years," he says. He plays first viola in the Durham Orchestral Society, which consists of fifty-five players under an honorary conductor. At his lecture, given at the College of Science, Newcastle, "On the rise and growth of the String Quartet," he played his own illustrations, so far as the viola was concerned. It is not every Cathedral organist who could do that. He was honorary conductor of the Durham Musical Society for about ten years from 1873. In regard to his "daily round," he rather favours the school of old Church music, which he thinks is in danger of being too much neglected. Any of the Durham choristers can learn instrumental music at the expense of the Dean and Chapter—excellent! Dr. Armes has a most efficient assistant-organist in the person of the Reverend John Lionel Shirley Dampier Bennett, one of the Minor Canons, an admirable executant, who also skilfully trains the boys. Mr. Bennett holds his appointment as assistant-organist direct from the Dean and Chapter. Thereby hangs a tale. At one of the Bishop's visitations, Dr. Westcott, pointing to a certain Statute, said: "Is there an assistant-organist?" The negative reply caused this non-observance of the Statute to be remedied forthwith. The question as to whether the Bishop did or did not intuitively make the discovery need not be raised here.

COMPOSITIONS.

In the realm of composition, Dr. Armes has naturally sought his muse in sacred music. The first place must be given to his oratorio "Hezekiah," of which, moreover, he compiled the libretto, produced at Newcastle-on-Tyne in November, 1877, and revised and enlarged for the Worcester Festival of the following year. "Hezekiah" was succeeded by two "Church oratorios." The earliest, "St. John the Evangelist," though first performed at St. Peter's Church, Bramley, Leeds, made its real public appearance at York Minster, two days later. The Musical Times of August, 1881, gave a full and appreciative description of the work and its performance by "Our Special Correspondent," and there is no harm in saying that the said "Special" was none other than the distinguished critic, Mr. Joseph Bennett. "I must at once felicitate Dr. Armes," wrote Mr. Bennett, "upon a composition distinguished by very great talent and almost faultless taste." A companion work in this interesting field of Church oratorio is "St. Barnabas," produced at Durham Cathedral, July 30, 1891. In addition to two Morning and Evening Services in G and A, Dr. Armes has composed three Communion Services, in A, G, and B flat (unison) respectively. Five anthems, many hymn-tunes (contributed to the "Hymnary," the "Quiver," and other collections), various chants, part-songs, and some organ music complete the list of his published compositions. Special mention must be made of his five-part madrigal, "Victoria," which gained the First, or "Molineux" Prize, and the Madrigal Society's medal, in 1897.

DEGREES AND APPOINTMENTS.

In addition to his Oxford degrees, already referred to, Dr. Armes was made a Mus. Bac., ad eundem Durham in 1863, Mus. Doc. in 1874, and M.A. in 1891. He is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music, and in 1892 he was elected an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, of which he is a Vice-President and an Examiner. He was one of the Examiners for musical degrees at Oxford University in 1894, and was Queen Victoria Lecturer at Trinity College (London) in 1897.

LECTURER.

As an interesting lecturer on musical subjects Dr. Armes has made his mark. In addition to his University courses, his subjects have included "Robbing Haystacks," a lecture delivered before the Royal College of Organists, for which Institution he is now preparing a series of discourses on "The Harmonization of Melodies," "Progress in Art," and "Toleration in Art" (Queen Victoria Lectures, Trinity College, London); "The rise and growth of the Anthem," delivered before the clergy of Durham; and "The rise and growth of the String Quartet," which has been already referred to. A specially interesting address was that on "The English Church Music of Purcell's period," delivered on October 10, 1895, at the Church Congress, Norwich. The illustrations on that occasion included the following anthems, all of which, be it noted, were unpublished and unknown:—

"O Lord, grant the King a long life" ... Child.
"Have pity upon me" ... ... Wise.
"O praise God in His holiness" ... ... Humfrey.
"Lift up your heads" (unaccompanied) ... Turner.
"Thy righteousness, O God, is very high" Purcell.

The first anthem on the above list is not to be confused with the simple four-part setting of the same words by Child in Vol. II. of Boyce's Collection. The Turner anthem was so much appreciated that it obtained an encore.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL LIBRARY.

Dr. Armes has given much attention to the antiquarian side of Church music. He has under his special guardianship some interesting manuscript volumes of which he is very proud, and of which the following, from Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," is a summarised account:—

Durham.—The old MSS. in Durham Cathedral have been recently [1889] carefully collated and indexed by the present organist [Dr. Armes]. They consist of four sets of books, all unfortunately imperfect. The old set contains about forty full and fifty verse anthems by Tallis, White, Parsons, Hooper, Morley, Weelkes, Byrd, Batten, Giles, Tompkins, East, Gibbons, &c. The second set is rich in anthems and services for men's voices only. The third consists of eight out of ten magnificent folio volumes containing Preces and Psalms for special days by Byrd, Gibbons, William and Edward Smith; and services by Shepherd, Parsons, Batten, and others. The fourth set consists of organ parts of practically all the anthems and services used in the Cathedral from Tallis to Purcell.

These precious treasures, as well as the pipes of the seventeenth century organ, fortunately escaped the depredations of the Cromwellian soldiers and the Scots in the year 1641. "On Midsummer Day of that year, and not till then, did they [the Scots] use any violence or harm to the organs in this church [Durham Cathedral]; but then they fell on and broke them, and tore up all the keys of the great organs. . . . But to prevent further mischief to the organs, the General of the Scotch army advised Mr. Blades (steward to Dean Balcanquall) to take the pipes out; and at night they did so in order to save them. But afterwards the said two cases—to wit, that of the white organ (on the South side of the church) and that of the great organ (over the quire doors) being standing in the church the 11th September 1650, the Scotch prisoners to the number of about 4,500 taken at the fight of Dunbar, being brought into Durham and put into the Cathedral, which was now made a prison to keep them in, they, the said prisoners, did burn all the said two cases, and all the seats and wainscott, and all the wood they could find in the said Cathedral church aforesaid." But the pipes and the music books escaped destruction from the flames of the apparently inflamed prisoners. This incident throws an interesting side-light, if not a lurid glare, on the organ that preceded the instrument erected by Father Smith. The Chair organ, with its original front pipes of the latter builder, which formerly stood in the Cathedral, is now located in the Chapel of the University. In 1876 Father Willis supplied the present fine organ in the Cathedral, which is divided and placed on the North and South sides of the Choir respectively.

DURHAM PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.

No biography of Dr. Armes, whatever the limits of its scope, would be complete without reference to his University Professorship and the Durham examinations for musical degrees. The present University of Durham, though established on an old foundation, was not authorised by Parliament until 1831. But no degrees in music were given for thirty years, the first, that of Mus. Doc., being conferred upon the late Rev. J. B. Dykes in 1861, and on the late William Henshaw, Dr. Armes's predecessor. At the instigation of Dr. Armes, examinations for degrees in music were instituted by the University. For five years Sir John Stainer lent his most cordial and valuable help by acting as an examiner. The first examination for the Bachelor's degree took place in October, 1890, when eighty-one candidates—evidently desirous to get on (or honour) by degrees—presented themselves for the preliminary test, though they did not all pass. In the intervening nine years 130 Bachelors have been made at Durham. In 1897 the Charter of the University was altered, whereby Dr. Armes was made Professor of Music, a position which he has filled with conspicuous ability, fairness, and courtesy. The Professor has all the vigour and alertness of youth, and there is no reason why he should not beat the record of longevity which, for nearly two centuries, has been one of the distinguishing characteristics of the organists of Durham Cathedral.

The view of the Cathedral, which, by the kind permission of the Photochrom Company, Limited, Cheapside, we give on page 83, is that visible from the Prebend's Bridge. It was this beautiful vista that inspired Sir Walter Scott with his fine stanza—now let into the stone parapet of the aforesaid bridge—for "Harold the Dauntless":

Grey Towers of Durham!
. . . . . .
Well yet I love thy mix'd and massive piles,
Half church of God, half castle 'gainst the Scot,
And long to roam these venerable aisles,
With records stored of deeds long since forgot.

CLASS SINGING

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS BY

W. G. McNaught.

WHAT A CLASS SINGING TEACHER IS EXPECTED TO DO.

It goes without saying that class singing in a school must be considered in rational relation to the whole curriculum now imposed upon schools of all grades. The most recent tendency is to look for increased attention to utilitarian bread-and-butter subjects. This tendency promises to obstruct musical training. But there are not wanting abundant and gratifying proofs of the recognition of the duty, if not the necessity, of educating (not merely of instructing) all the potential faculties of the child before attempts are made to specially direct those faculties into utilitarian channels. Everybody says, in theory at least, that we must mainly aim to educate the young how to learn. Whatever the result of the endeavours to proportion the time to be given to this or that study, it is certain that the pint pot will not hold more than a pint. With this obvious fact in mind one views with concern the increasing demands made upon the class singing teacher. Time was when the question as to who should have charge of the singing class was a matter of no particular importance. It was, and often now is, considered to be a sort of perquisite of the pianoforte teacher. But, nowadays, the ideal class singing teacher is expected to be a wonderful individual. The mere enumeration of the heads of the topics he or she is expected to deal with is sufficiently alarming.

CLASS SINGING TOPICS.

(1.) Sight-singing, time, and tune. This includes a great familiarity with theory. (2.) Ear training (recognition of scale sounds played or sung). (3.) Part-singing. (4.) Breathing and voice production. (5.) Enunciation and pronunciation. (6.) Expressive execution. (7.) The study of good music and the education of the taste.

No doubt many of the above topics overlap and can be attended to simultaneously by a vigilant teacher, but, when all is said, the task of dealing satisfactorily with such a variety of studies in about twelve hours a term is obviously an impossible one. Yet if you elect just to take off your hat to this or that topic, to shake hands with another and to cultivate the close friendship of the rest, you must be prepared to run the gauntlet of some set of critics. You may be told that while the sight-singing is eminently satisfactory the class does not get nearly enough real and good music to practise. If you spend time on "getting up" good part-music you will be told that the class should learn our fine old national or folk-songs, chiefly of the robustious sort that can be sung "heartily." You set your class aglow with enthusiasm with "Down among the dead men" and "Twenty years off," when next day comes a frost and you are nipped by the solemn warning that this hearty singing is wholly destructive of the voice. In a duly repentant mood you now ply your class with breathing exercises and the rules of voice production and fancy you are doing good work, when next you learn with dismay that, however satisfactory the results may seem, the children's voices are being hopelessly ruined and their health injured by the wrong methods adopted. Finally comes the unkindest cut of all, in the person of a hypochondriac, who gloomily assures you that class singing is an utter mistake, root and branch, not merely because you cannot attend to individuals, but because young people should not sing at all until their voices are "settled." The children, it appears, may laugh, shriek, and shout half the day whilst at play, but they may not sing gently for half-an-hour a week under careful guidance. It is fortunate that they are permitted to eat, notwithstanding the immaturity of their internal organs.

In the end you realise that the only sensible course is to carefully consider the condition and circumstances of the class, and to resolve to give it just the musical nutriment it appears most to need and is most capable of digesting. Aim to do something well and take care to do nothing badly. Do not dissipate the energies of the class by dealing incoherently with too much at a time. At every lesson try to deal with some point that grows naturally out of the previous lesson. You cannot work from a cut and dried ideal plan taken from a book. No two classes are ever alike. Every class needs special treatment. The sagacious teacher in actual touch with the class is always adapting himself to the exigencies of the moment. Personally, I have generally found that the most economical course is to devote at the outset and for a few terms the larger proportion of the allotted time to sight-singing matters, whilst throughout jealously watching and correcting the voice delivery. The skill thus gained can then be applied to other points. Pieces, especially if in two or more parts, can, of course, be more quickly mastered where there is some sight-singing than where there is none. It is weary work for everyone if other than simple unison songs are taught by ear. So, where a teacher has anything like a free hand, I strongly recommend that about four-fifths of the earlier lessons be given to sight-singing studies.

SIGHT-SINGING.

I approach this debatable ground with some diffidence, for I should be sorry to say anything that might widen the cleavage that exists as to the use of notations and, to a lesser degree, as to methods. Considerable experience as an examiner, and I hope as an impartial observer, has made me acquainted with the workings of a variety of methods, with the result that I feel benevolently tolerant of many ways of reaching the great ends—viz., a clear understanding of the great facts of music and a practical knowledge of the staff notation. Nothing I have come across has yet shaken my belief that the tonic sol-fa method with its notation is, on the whole, for popular class purposes, the best elementary musical educational scheme before the world. I content myself with this avowal of faith. The movable doh method applied to the staff is, of course, the same in principle, and may naturally be preferred by many who teach in middle class schools. In choosing a method beware of systems that promise too much — sight-singing-from-Wagner-while-you-wait methods and other "no difficulty" methods. The most experienced expert in school class teaching cannot get more than elementary results in sight-singing without a far greater expenditure of time than it is reasonable to expect that schools can allot to the subject. It is easy to "split the ears of the groundlings" by showy results with modulators, but real sight reading in time and tune combined and in parts, sung from printed music, is years beyond modulator work. Beware of teaching at one time a mass of theory without practice, and at another time giving practice of a kind that is really ear singing, in the hope that somehow in the future the two kinds of skill will automatically unite. It is profoundly disappointing to find that after all the recent attention given to education, otherwise sane people will go on teaching mere dead signs and suppose themselves thereby to be teaching things. It is depressing to have to believe that this kind of instruction obtains more in music teaching than in any other school subject. In these times of examinations galore it is a common thing to find young people who can answer on paper marvellous questions on theory and who can sing charmingly songs they know, but who cannot, at sight, sing an easy hymn-tune. There is a bridgeless chasm between their two acquirements. This is the natural result of the continued separation of the two studies.

The scientific sight-singing teacher must teach the musical thing first and afterwards weld it to its sign. Sight-singing involves the most exact and instantaneous appreciation of the musical meaning of a sign. The true function of theory is to vitalise; to bring to life the thing to which it has been indissolubly attached. Musical concepts and signs have, as it were, to be built into the pupil's mind. Anything short of this is a delusion and an imposture. It follows from all this that theory can only be taught slowly in the sight-singing class, and it also follows that all the teaching directed to the cohesion of thing and sign should be incisive, abundant, and always with a clear objective. The old adage that an ounce of practice is worth a pound of theory contains a wholesome truth.

CLASS MANAGEMENT AND SOME TEACHING RULES.

Every other power of a class singing teacher is sterilised if he does not possess skill in class management. I once offended an eminent musician by saying that a school singing class could be better taught by a good Board school teacher than by most professional musicians trained in musical conservatoires. It is as stale to say that a musical artist is not necessarily a good teacher as it is to say that teachers are born and not made. But in this connection we have to go farther and assert that many music teachers, who train individual executants admirably, are utter failures when they attempt to deal with a large class. The power to gain spontaneous attention and to seize the mood and immediate need of a class is an instinct.

The teacher, by his manner, must show his interest in, and enthusiasm for his work, and his earnest desire to succeed. He must make it clear that he is fully aware of his pupils' difficulties and is willing to be patient with their struggles and inevitable mistakes. The happiest discipline in class management is that born of an absorbed interest in the lesson. A class is a mirror to the teacher and the reflection is often not flattering. Unless the pupils have acquired bad habits elsewhere, much inattention is generally to be accounted for by the teacher's own manner, and therefore should not be vicariously censured. Righteous indignation at a superfluity of naughtiness is needful occasionally, but always provided that you can give vent to it without making a fool of yourself. Some teachers are effervescent almost throughout a lesson, and they complain that class singing is very exhausting —and one can well believe it. Discipline is maintained by startling smashes of a stick on a desk, with the object apparently of stimulating the pupils by reflex action to imagine how it would be if the blow fell elsewhere. What with the disciplinary whacks, the noisy beating of time with foot and stick, and the shouting of "one," "two," "three," "four," a singing class may be a pandemonium. In such cases a cynic may well enquire where the elevating and refining power of music comes in. As a matter of fact, attention cannot be coerced with any good result. An adroit change of topic will often give new life to an inattentive, sluggish class. Musical study happily affords many such changes of topic.

A lesson must fit the pupils' capacity. It may be below this capacity, but it must not be beyond it. Teaching on a set plan is all very well for beginners in teaching, but the plan must be constantly varied by circumstances. Most of the best teaching is an inspiration born of a realisation of the momentary, and probably unexpected psychologic mood of the class. A sudden and special interest is manifested and you gladly find your opportunity of meeting it. This situation makes demands upon the ready resource of a teacher and calls for a capacity to give an incisive lesson on any point at any moment. Experience must thus store the mind. The prepared plans of young teachers are often far too elaborate. They map out for a term what the old hand will spread over a year. The great art is to teach a few connected points thoroughly well, and by varied presentment and practice to maintain interest. Recognise when your class is weary of a point and refrain from pressing it farther for the present lesson. Encourage pupils to ask and to answer questions. Let them clearly understand that the object of your asking them a question is not necessarily to elicit a correct answer, but a desire to know the state of their minds for your guidance. If you want a correct answer to your question it is always easy to provide it in the question, as teachers often do in the stress of showing off pupils. The teacher says: "Don't you know that there are three flats in the signature of E flat major?" and commends an affirmative answer. Sincere, unprompted answers will probably make you wince inwardly, and, it may be hoped, induce a merciful view of the teaching of other teachers whose pupils you may have to examine. In teaching things—i.e., musical facts—give abundant singing practice until the point is easily executed and the mind saturated through the ear. In teaching notation take special pains to educate the eye, and be always planning to make the two lines meet. The signs of musical notation are arbitrary; there is nothing about them that is self-explanatory. Their intimate association with actual musical conceptions is, therefore, a growth. Be extraordinarily careful to secure the expectant attention of your class at the moment when thing and sign are to be rivetted. Note and avail yourself of the keen interest a class will manifest if one of their number is summoned forward to point out or to write something on the blackboard. The most indolent will watch the process with an absorbed attention you would be only too glad to experience when you write on the board. Everything taught should, if possible, grow out of something that has already been taught. Only in this way can you utilise the apperceptive laws of the mind's method of development. Isolation of points leads to confusion and forgetfulness.

I have said that the proper object of the class is the education of the individual. In choir training, you shape the mass and suppress the individual; in class training, you should entirely distrust the mass and should be everlastingly thinking of the individual. The wonderful quickness of the working of the imitative faculty in choral performance has often been remarked. I have sometimes tested it by getting three-fourths of a class to turn their backs to the platform and to sing what the remaining fourth sing from a blackboard exercise. The result is a practical unanimity. Obviously, pupils who thus imitate do not practise the conception of sounds from symbols, but merely the art of quickly picking up what they hear. It thus becomes possible and is really a common thing for a musically endowed pupil to attend a singing class for years without acquiring more independent reading power than should have been acquired in a few months. How to circumvent the anti-sight singing tendency of this faculty is the constant concern of the experienced class singing teacher. Abundant individual performance in the class is the only remedy. This, it must be confessed, is often very difficult to get, because pupils are generally reluctant to sing alone, and when they are persuaded to do so their performance is far from natural because it is paralysed by diffidence. Nothing else in class management tests more severely the moral power of a teacher than the situation now to be faced. If the class is to accomplish its highest purpose every device must be utilised to secure conditions that will encourage pupils to sing alone and in a natural manner. In the early stages give great credit to all who sing alone, whether they sing correctly or badly. Let it be understood that the effort is honourable and that the mere result is of secondary importance. Those most frightened at the sound of their own voices may be coaxed to try a monotone time exercise. Explain that it is a form of conceit to be so fearful of failure before others. Allow no ridicule at failure. Ask those who show a disposition to ridicule to stand up and do better. Let all the individual tests be of the easiest possible description. When the pupils are thus thoroughly persuaded that individual effort, however inefficient, will be honoured, the teacher will begin to have a real command of the class and will be able to secure the happiest possible lessons and the most abiding results. The vista opened by the establishment of the practice of individual performance is immense. You feel agreeably conscious that you are really educating. The reaction of individual upon individual is now incalculable for good. The means of varying practice and maintaining interest are now increased tenfold. A "dry" exercise, of no value as real music, gains the fascination of a game now that it is a problem to be solved by individual endeavour.

Much more could be written, but as I am not writing a book, I must refrain from adding further to these unpretentious hints.

"After learning to reason, you will learn to sing; for you will want to. There is so much reason for singing in this sweet world, when one thinks rightly of it."—John Ruskin.

THE FITZWILLIAM VIRGINAL BOOK.

One of the most precious treasures amongst the manuscripts preserved in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, is a collection of Virginal Music, which has long been erroneously known as "Queen Elizabeth's Virginal Book." Although much of the history of this remarkable collection is lost in obscurity, there is no justification for the statement made by Hawkins in 1776, and frequently repeated by other writers, that the volume originally belonged to Good Queen Bess. "The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book," to adopt a title which sufficiently answers its purpose, has hitherto been a sealed book to students. Now, however, it has been made available through the enterprise of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, who have issued the complete contents of this historical manuscript volume in modern notation. The title of the published work stands thus:

The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book.
Edited from the original manuscript, with an introduction and notes (translated into German by John Bernhoff), by J. A. Fuller Maitland and W. Barclay Squire.
London and Leipzig: Breitkopf and Härtel. 1899.

The learned editors contribute a very interesting and exhaustive Introduction to the book, which, like the "Notes," "Contents," &c., from the same sources, gives abundant proof of their erudition and qualification for their task, not only from a historical-literary point of view, but from the much more difficult standpoint of translating sixteenth and early seventeenth century musical notation into that of the present day. The result of their labours, which merits the highest praise, is shown in the two important volumes now under notice.

The mere mechanical labour of transcribing was attended with considerable difficulty. It was impossible for the volume to leave the Fitzwilliam Library, and, as the editors were unable to take up their residence in Cambridge, photographs were taken by Mr. C. F. Bell of each page of the manuscript. By the courtesy of the editors we are enabled to give a facsimile of one of these photographs. As there were no less than 418 pages to transcribe from these miniatures, it is no wonder that the task of transcribing almost cost the editors their eyes! This photograph is the second folio of a "Fantasia on Faire Wether," by John Munday (died 1630), of which the curious old spelling, the graceful caligraphy, and the pretty arrangement of the sextolets will not escape notice.

In a paper read before the Musical Association, on April 9, 1895, Mr. Fuller Maitland thus summarised the history of the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book:—

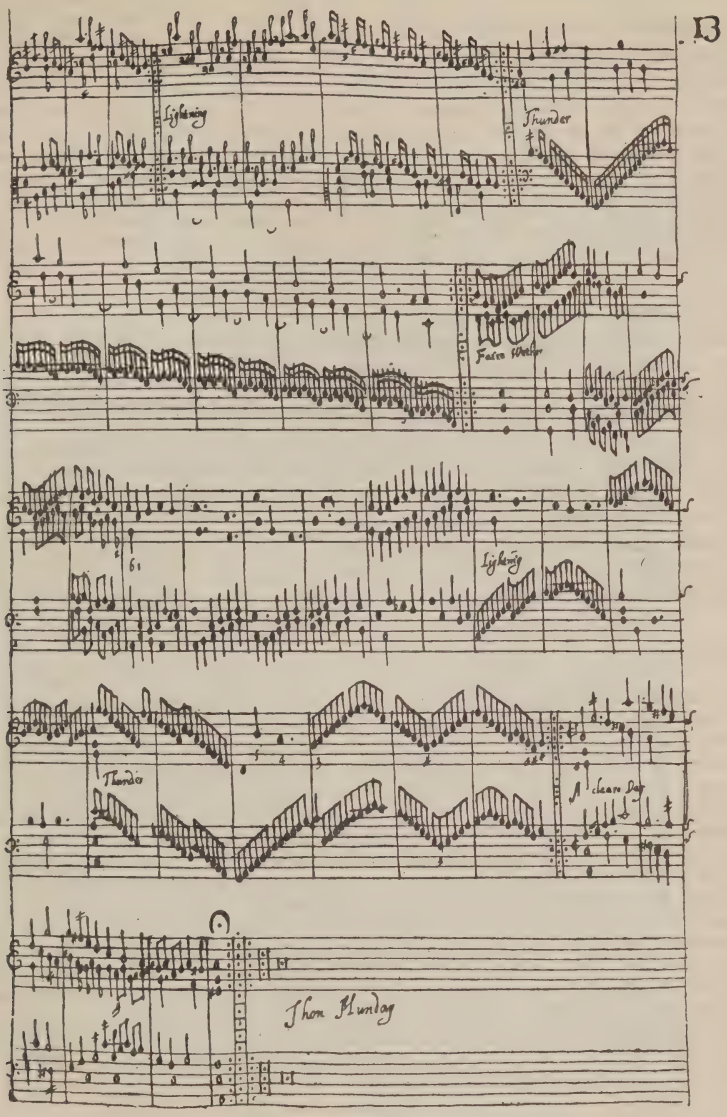
"A Cornish gentleman, named Francis Tregian, the head of a rich and powerful Catholic family, was seized on account of his religion, in 1577, and after many short imprisonments was thrown into the Fleet prison, where he remained for at least twenty-four years. In this prison eleven of his eighteen children were born. His eldest son, Francis Tregian, entered the College at Douay in 1586. On leaving Douay, in 1592, he was for two years chamberlain to Cardinal Allen in Rome. He afterwards returned to England and succeeded in buying back his father's lands; but in 1608-9 he was committed to the Fleet himself on a charge of recusancy. He died there in 1619, owing a large bill to the warden for board and lodging. It is this Francis Tregian who had been supposed to be the scribe of the greater part at least of the famous manuscript. The splendid binding is undoubtedly a piece of Netherlands work, and many other things connect the book with the Netherlands. . . . The theory of the circumstances of the book's compilation is, then, that the actual book, bound as it is now, was bought by Francis Tregian in the Netherlands, and that, during his imprisonment in the Fleet, he wrote out from musical manuscripts in his possession the transcript which has been, in some cases, the only means of their preservation."

In regard to those notational snares which beset the transcriber on every hand, Mr. Fuller Maitland said:—

"One of the greatest and most serious difficulties in the task of reducing this music to modern notation lies, of course, in the department of accidentals. Everyone who has scored a madrigal from the original part-books knows how very much is left to the imagination of the singers in this respect. The truth, of course, is that the laws of musica ficta were so generally understood by all musicians until the end of the sixteenth century at least, that all who could sing the parts could be trusted to put in the required flats and sharps in their own part."

There are many points of supreme interest discussed in the Introduction—such, for instance, as the Notation, Accidentals, Time-signatures, Ornaments, &c., of this venerable Virginal volume. Here is a typical extract:—

"In the history of musical notation, there is no more important document than the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. Transcribed from MSS. of widely different dates and degrees of correctness, by one writer, the pieces, which range from about 1550 to 1620, are so varied in style that almost all the resources of the time, as regard the writing down of music, must have been exhausted. The period is a peculiarly interesting one, since it marks the point when the old systems of musical theory, as well as of musical notation, were beginning to give place to those which are now observed, and when the modern laws were only in a very incomplete stage of their development."



FAC-SIMILE (REDUCED) OF FOLIO 13 OF THE FITZWILLIAM VIRGINAL BOOK, SHOWING THE CONCLUSION OF JOHN MUNDAY'S "FAIRE WETHER" FANTASIA.

Original size, 12 × 7¼ in.

BARS 2, 3, AND 4 OF THE ABOVE FAC-SIMILE IN MODERN NOTATION.

Equally interesting and instructive are the observations upon the barring of the music, e.g. :—

"It is necessary, in order to understand the system on which the bars are used in the MS., to remember that the bars are entirely independent of the time-signature. This latter has only to do with the proportional values of the notes to each other; the bars are merely, at this period, a convenient help to the player's eye, and although they usually follow the rhythmic outline of the composition pretty closely, yet they are often very irregular."

These two volumes, containing upwards of 900 pages, form a monumental contribution to the history of English instrumental music. Herein will be found many compositions by Dr. John Bull, William Byrd, Giles and Richard Farnaby, Orlando Gibbons, Thomas Morley, John Munday, Thomas Tallis, and other old-time worthies. The books are admirably printed and enriched with two fac-similes reproduced from the original MS. in the Fitzwilliam Museum. Their dedication to the Queen is in the highest degree appropriate.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Mr. Tree has issued an interesting little pamphlet in connection with his charming presentation of Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," at Her Majesty's Theatre. Under the sub-heading "Stage versions and stage history," we learn that in 1631 the play was represented at the house of John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln. On this episcopal occasion it seems to have so incurred the displeasure of the authorities that they caused the actor who represented Bottom, the Weaver, to sit in the porter's lodge with an ass's head upon his shoulders from six o'clock in the morning until six o'clock at night. In 1716 Richard Leveridge, the composer of "The Roast Beef of Old England," wrote the music for "Pyramus and Thisbe," a comic masque, compiled by him from Shakespeare's play, which was produced without success. In 1755 another opera on the same subject, entitled "The Fairies," was mounted at Drury Lane Theatre. Garrick was responsible for this, and into the original play he inserted no less than twenty songs! For more than fifty years the play was shelved until it was revived at Covent Garden on January 17, 1816. For this revival Sir Henry Bishop composed the music, and this, we are told, "was perhaps the only extenuating circumstance in connection with it." Bishop's music continued to be used until 1840.

Not the least attractive feature of Mr. Tree's "Midsummer Night's Dream" is the introduction of Mendelssohn's "immortal music," to adopt the designation of The Times critic. It is true that the out and out purist might object to certain interpolations and touchings up; but it is a matter of satisfaction that so close an approximation to the original form of the music to the play has been attained. Mendelssohn composed the overture—acknowledged to be one of the most original pieces of music ever written—when he was only seventeen. On July 7, 1826, he writes: "To-day or to-morrow I shall begin to dream A Midsummer Night's Dream." On August 6—less than a month later—the overture was finished. Pastor Schubring, Mendelssohn's attached friend, tells a pretty story concerning its composition. He says: "The weather was beautiful, and we were engaged in an animated conversation as we lay in the shade on the grass [in the Schönhauser Garten], when all of a sudden, Mendelssohn seized me firmly by the arm, and whispered 'Hush!' He afterwards informed me that a large fly had just then gone buzzing by, and he wanted to hear the sound it produced gradually die away. When the overture was completed, he pointed to the semiquaver scale passage of the violoncellos which makes the modulation from B minor to F sharp minor, and said: 'There, that's the fly that buzzed past us at Schönhauser!'"

Mendelssohn brought the score of his overture with him to England, on the occasion of his earliest visit to London, in 1829. The work was first played in England, appropriately enough, on Midsummer night, 1829, at a concert given by Drouet, the flautist, and it was conducted by Mendelssohn. At the same concert he played Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, then an absolute novelty in this country. After the concert, the score of the overture was left in the hackney coach by Attwood and—lost! "Never mind," said Mendelssohn, upon being told of it, "I'll make another." He did, and on comparing the new score with the band parts, no discrepancies could be discovered.

Seventeen years elapsed between the composition of the overture and the remainder of the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music; yet there is not the slightest trace of any dissimilarity in style or workmanship—in fact, its perfectness as a perfectly complete musical equipment to the play is one of its strongest features. The first performance in England of the entire music was at the Philharmonic concert of May 27, 1844, conducted by Mendelssohn. We are enabled to give some hitherto unpublished extracts from Mendelssohn's letters to his English publisher, Mr. Buxton (Ewer & Co.), relating to the English publication of the work. On December 13, 1843, he sends the "Scherzo, Notturno, and March" (i.e., the famous "Wedding March"), pianoforte duet, and mentions fifteen guineas as the price. "If," he says, "you wish to have the copyright of the whole for England (pianoforte arrangement and full score)," the price of the complete work (consisting of nine other pieces) "would be the same again as those three"—i.e., thirty guineas for the entire music! He adds that the work was given seventeen times in six weeks at the Royal Theatre, Berlin. A little later he writes to say that the English words will go to the music without any alterations, and proposes that some arrangement should be made with Cramer and Co., who had published the overture in 1829, whereby the entire work could be issued in a complete form. Buxton evidently suggested that a pianoforte arrangement for one performer should be made, as Mendelssohn says he is afraid that "it will be a little difficult." It is not surprising to find that the last reference to the publication contains the word "alterations." But Mendelssohn did not alter his mind in regard to his visit to England. "Since yesterday," he writes to Buxton on March 5, 1844, "I am certain that I shall go to England, and I need not tell you how great a pleasure I anticipate from a stay in your country. I intend to arrive towards the end of April and to bring several new things with me, and to remain several months, and to be very happy in old England!"

Hector Berlioz was a proof—if proof be needed—of the truth of the saying "that a man hath no honour in his own country." As a matter of fact, Berlioz was much more appreciated in Germany than in his native France. So long ago as June 26, 1854, he wrote to his friend Morel that he dreamt of the publication of a complete edition of his works that should be issued in Leipzig. After forty-six years this dream of the great French composer is about to "come true." Some years ago the heirs of Berlioz agreed to such an edition of the master's works, which Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig, are now publishing. The editorship is in the competent hands of M. Charles Malherbe, librarian of the Paris Opera House, and of Herr Felix Weingartner—the former probably taking special oversight of the literary and research aspect of the task, and the latter eminent conductor being responsible for the musical erudition. The full scores will be issued in fifteen folio volumes at a subscription price of fifteen shillings each; the operas will not, however, at present be published, though their overtures will appear amongst the instrumental music. A pianoforte edition of the vocal works is also to be issued. The Berlioz publication—of which nearly all the instrumental music is almost ready—will take rank with the monumental editions of Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and other great composers issued by the great Leipzig firm of Breitkopf and Härtel. This mention of the new edition to English readers suggests some reference to "Berlioz in England." But that is too large a subject to be treated of in "Occasional Notes." It may serve for an article, with perhaps some illustrations, to appear in these columns later on in the year. The accompanying portrait of Berlioz is inserted by the kind permission of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel.

Verdi was occupied, during part of Christmas week, with completing the work of charity he so nobly began a year or two since, by the erection of a magnificent "Home for aged musicians," in the Piazza Michel Angelo Buonarotti, Milan. Having appointed the administrative council, which includes Arrigo Boito, the composer of "Mefistofele," Signor Negri, the author and senator, and Signor Giulio Ricordi, of the eminent music publishing firm, the veteran composer, in a speech lasting over two hours, explained the principles upon which he desired the Institution to be carried on. Finally, the Maëstro, having handed the Deed of Gift to the Council, intimated to the latter that he had relinquished the proceeds of copyright of all his works, from January 1, 1900, in favour and as part endowment of the Home. Truly a right royal gift and a noble monument to perpetuate the memory of Italy's Grand Old Man!

Mr. Ruskin—whose loss, in common with all art-lovers, we deeply regret—uttered some noble thoughts on the art of music. His tastes were perhaps not so classical as those of another great thinker who passed away during the past month—the Rev. Dr. Martineau—but Mr. Ruskin had a great love for music. In his early years he regarded it as little more than "a mere sensual gratification," and placed it on a distinctly lower plane than his favourite art of painting. "I do not mean to depreciate Music," he said, "let it be loved and reverenced as is just, only let the delight of the eye be reverenced more." But he subsequently changed his attitude towards the divine art, and some of his most beautiful thoughts were the outcome of his regard for music. It would be quite possible to give many characteristic extracts from the writings of Mr. Ruskin on the art. Those readers, and there should be many, who would like to further pursue this interesting and inspiring study, may do so from that admirable book, "Ruskin on Music," compiled by Miss A. M. Wakefield.

One or two quotations from the great Seer's writings must, however, be quoted. The first, from "Fors Clavigera," is from a beautiful passage on the ideal education of children :—

> "In their first learning of notes they shall be taught the great purpose of Music, which is to say a thing that you mean deeply, in the strongest and clearest possible way; and they shall never be taught to sing what they don't mean."

Again, in prose which is as pellucid as a babbling brook on a sunny day, he says :—

> "The law of nobleness in Music and Poetry is essentially one. Both are the necessary and natural expression of pure and human joy or sorrow, by the lips and fingers of persons trained in right schools to manage their bodies and souls. Every child should be taught from its youth to govern its voice discreetly and dexterously, as it does its hands; and not to be able to sing should be more disgraceful than not being able to read or write. For it is quite possible to lead a virtuous and happy life without books or ink, but not without wishing to sing when we are happy, nor without meeting with continual occasions when our song, if right, would be a kind service to others."

The last extract relating to music, from "Queen of the Air," speaks for itself :—

> "This, which of all the arts is the most distinctly ethical in origin, is also the most direct in power of discipline; the first, the simplest, the most effective of all instruments of moral instruction; while in the failure and betrayal of its functions, it becomes the subtlest aid of moral degradation. Music is thus in her health the teacher of perfect order, and is the voice of the obedience of angels, and the companion of the course of the spheres of heaven; and in her depravity she is also the teacher of perfect disorder and disobedience."

It is with peculiar satisfaction that we refer to the article on "Class Singing," by Dr. W. G. McNaught, which is concluded in our present issue. Dr. McNaught has long been held in the highest repute as an authority on school music, and it may be said without fear of contradiction that no man in this country has had a wider experience or possesses such a thorough grasp of this important educational subject. But it is not every expert who can give his experience in language so powerful, direct, practical, and eminently readable as Dr. McNaught has done in this useful article. Moreover, as a psychological study in educational methods it should take a high rank; its application is by no means limited to the special subject which forms its theme. Many of our readers will gladly join us in a hearty vote of thanks to Dr. McNaught for his "hints."

Mr. Fuller Maitland contributes an essay on "Musicians" to a volume entitled "Unwritten laws and ideals of active careers," edited by Miss E. H. Pitcairn, and published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. It may be assumed that the various contributors to the book, men of mark in their respective professions, would not raise the etiquette-curtain too high, whereby one is permitted to see too much behind the scenes—in fact, the Editress in her Preface states "it is an Unwritten Law that certain things involving delicate relationships shall not be printed." Music and musicians form no exceptions to this "Unwritten Law," and there are "professional secrets which cannot be divulged." Two extracts from Mr. Fuller Maitland's contribution may serve to show his method of treating a delicate subject. Who amongst concert-givers has not suffered from fear and trembling in drawing up a programme? In this connection, Mr. Fuller Maitland observes :—

> It is amazing to observe the many and various devices employed by some of the singers to elude the rules made for the convenience of singers as a class, in their desire to exchange their place in the programme for one nearer the centre. Prime donne have been known to go to the printer's workshop and alter the programme at the last moment, after the proof has been sent back by the concert givers. Cab accidents, blocks on the railway, sudden attacks of faintness, stoppages on the part of watches, are commonly alleged as the excuse for late arrival, by singers who consider that their names have been put down for too early a point in the programme.

Singers hold certain opinions of those "dreadful men, the critics." They may be interested to hear what the musical critic of The Times has to say on the etiquette of the Fourth Estate in the discharge of their onerous concert-room duties :—

> It is often supposed by frequenters of concerts who see the members of the musical press in conversation with each other, that they are settling what they shall say; the outside public is very apt to sneer and to quote Sheridan's famous line: "When they do agree, their unanimity is wonderful." It will, no doubt, be difficult for these observers to realize that there exists a tacit understanding among critics that each man's opinion is his own private property until it appears in print; there is no interchange of views concerning matters of taste, although matters of fact are freely discussed, and there is every reason they should be. In the press of concerts and musical events it is beyond the power of any human being to be present from the beginning to the end of every concert and opera performed in London, for example; and critics are very often obliged to help one another in such matters as relate to the fact of certain artists having appeared or failed to appear in their place in the programme. Their conversation, apart from this, would be found to consist very much of the same kind of gossip that prevails in any society, and to deal to a surprising extent with topics unconnected with music, or at least unconnected with the particular performance at which they happen to be "assisting."

It is well known that the critics often have to attend more than one performance in the course of the same evening; therefore the above may be accepted as a contribution to the "ins and outs" of musical criticism, even in a literal sense.

Music-lovers in the Fen country seem to have caught some of the prevailing enthusiasm of the Northern portion of England in regard to musical competitions. We have before us the prospectuses of two such educational music-makings. The first is that of the "North Lincolnshire Musical Competitions," which are to be held at Brigg, on April 30 next. The contests, comprising in all twelve classes, are for village choirs, concerted and solo vocal performances, school choirs, and—most excellent feature—"Choral reading at sight." The first name on the list of the three honorary secretaries is that of Lady Winefride Cary-Elwes, The Manor House, Brigg, from whom all needful information may be obtained. The second event, fixed for May 4, is the Spilsby District Competitions, of which Mrs. Massingberd, Gunby Hall, Burgh, Lincolnshire, is the honorary secretary. At the Spilsby tournament there are to be six classes, which will include school, village, and church and chapel choirs; solo and quartet singing. Dr. W. G. McNaught, who, in the language of the hour, may fitly be termed a Field Marshal in adjudicating tactics, will be the marksman on both the above combative occasions. Both these Lincolnshire Musical Competitions have our warmest sympathy and best wishes for their success.

Here are some genuine answers to questions set in a school examination paper in music. They should no longer remain pigeon-holed:—

The use of the pianoforte pedals.—One to soften, one to louden the sound.

Ritard.—To get quiter.

A chord is notes in harmony.

A chord is a compination of notes played together.

These two passages are different as regards, but alike in notes.

A scale is a number of notes played in althabetical order. (In another answer "aphebrical order" is given.)

Some scales have more sharps and flats in their signatures than others, because they have the signature of the previous scales and the accidental.

sf means to begin soft and then swell.

The last answer is suggestive of fomentations.

The provincial pressman has been "at it" again. In a notice of a performance of "Elijah" he stated that the principal soprano possessed "a voice of great clarity and flexibility, and her style was direct and strong. If her voice was a trifle cold it was all the better suited to such music as that allotted to the widow." The music of the contralto part "is full of such seductive phrases that it often proves a pitfall to the artiste singing it, and the result is that the sweet is made a trifle too saccharine and cloys." "The band rendered yeoman service, and the various obligati were beautifully played." The organist "kept that instrument 'within the picture' with great care." Sweetly picturesque!

War songs are in the air, and there is much militariness in the melodies thereof. But plenty of scope remains for variety in the titles of these bellicose ditties. The subjoined title, but for its appearance in an actual programme of a concert given before hostilities commenced in South Africa, might be assumed to be that of a song in praise of "Bobs," to adopt Mr. Thomas Atkins's designation of his gallant Field Marshal. Here is the title in question, if not the questionable title—

Song ... "Roberts Oh, in the Adoro" Meyerbeer.

Boston (U.S.) newspapers to hand contain highly appreciative criticisms of Professor Horatio Parker's "The Legend of St. Christopher," performed at the "Hub of the Universe," under his direction, in December last. Two extracts may be quoted:—

A considerable audience listened to the orchestral rehearsal of "The Legend of St. Christopher" on yesterday afternoon. It is pronounced one of the most remarkable pieces of work yet produced by Mr. Parker, and in his warmest and most melodious vein. The dramatic features of the story are strongly brought out by voices and orchestra, and the exquisite spirit of the religious movements can hardly be surpassed. Certainly nothing more full of beauty and meaning has been done by any composer of our time than the passage "On the cross the Lord of heaven died"; and the contrast of a chorus of men voices, as fiends, and the women's chorus singing of redemption (with the angelic purity of the Cecilia's sopranos) was never more effectively made. The whole work is individual, Mr. Parker's own, not "influenced," new, yet keeping throughout the true oratorio tone. It more than meets the anticipations roused by the piano rehearsals, which have been attended with increasing enthusiasm on the part of the Club, and suggests that we need not go to Italy to look for new masters of oratorio. The unaccompanied chorus, "Jam sol recedit igneus," which precedes Offerus's recognition of the Christ, bids fair to be the most perfect musical expression which Boston will hear during the week.

Mr. Parker's oratorio is one of which our country need not be ashamed, and were he related to the Pope, and had the power of the church and the Italian music publishers at his back, the world might hail him as a second Perosi; as it is, we should prefer to call Perosi a distant second to Mr. Parker, save in the matter of dramatic feeling.

Signor Giacomo Puccini's new opera, "Tosca," was first performed at the Constanzi Theatre, Rome, on Sunday, the 14th ult. The correspondent of The Times in Rome thus records his impressions of the production of the opera:—

"Puccini's music is throughout sound and sincere, being marked by absence of artifice and of those conscious or unconscious plagiarisms which mar most of the work of Mascagni and Perosi. Melody is sparingly used throughout, and the Leitmotiven are carefully kept within reasonable bounds. The music flows along an even, harmonious course, which charms without tiring; and reserve, rather than incapacity, seems to explain an apparent neglect to profit fully by tragic situations in which the drama abounds. The orchestra and interpretation were alike excellent."

A Handel Festival is to be held in Bonn during the last week of May next, the principal works to be performed being the oratorios "Saul" and "Judas Maccabæus." The principal Bonn choirs will be reinforced on the occasion by choristers from the neighbouring cities; Musik-director Grüters will be the conductor. The arrangements are in the hands of an influential committee, under the presidency of Dr. von Rottenburg, the curator of the Bonn University, and much interest in the projected Festival is already being manifested, particularly in Southern Germany.

Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor was married to Miss Jessie Sarah Walmisley, at Holy Trinity Church, Selhurst, on December 30. The bride and bridegroom are both ex-students of the Royal College of Music. Congratulations to the composer of "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and his cara sposa.

Maria Piccolomini, an operatic star of fifty years ago, died in December last. Born in 1836, she came from an old Catholic family and was said to be the niece of a Cardinal. She made her first appearance in England in 1856, when she scored an enormous success in "La Traviata." The strong denouncement of Verdi's opera by The Times and several other journals of the day only helped to inflame the Piccolomini "boom." It was a case of the Jenny Lind fever over again. Verses were even written in praise of Pickle-hominy, as a distinguished musical critic of the day said that her name was popularly pronounced. The late Rev. Dr. Cox, in his "Musical Recollections of the last half-century," thus describes the fascinating little exponent of Violetta :—

"The greatest impostor that ever presumed to present herself before an intelligent musical audience as a prima donna—Mdlle. Piccolomini—who, by dint of sheer impudence, managed to lead the habitués, and a very large portion of the public, by the nose. As for singing, she had not an idea of what the meaning of that accomplishment really was. She could no more sing a scale than she could move the Monument! If it had not been an insult to common sense, whenever she came into contact with a difficulty, the manner of her shaking her little head, making a dash at it, and then scrambling helter-skelter through it, would have been amusing. There was one thing, however, very much to her credit—that she never denied her incapacity, but rather honestly and conscientiously admitted the fact. On one occasion she was known to have said, 'They call me little impostor, and they gives me bouquets, and applauses, and moneys; why not be a little impostor?' She, however, proved 'a great card' to Mr. Lumley during the seasons of 1856-7, and was the chief means of his keeping the doors of Her Majesty's Theatre open."

Piccolomini's career as an operatic queen was short, though extremely brilliant. In 1860, upon her marriage with an Italian nobleman, Marchese Gaetani, she practically retired from the stage.

Among various seasonable gifts sent to Verdi at Christmastide was one sent by an enterprising Viennese confectioner consisting of a box of biscuits, to which he had given the name of "Otello." The worthy tradesman was rewarded with an autograph letter, couched in the following characteristic terms :—

"Excellent Signor Favero.—As I have been absent from Busseto, I have only to-day, at Milan, received your delicious 'Otello.' I can truly say the eatable creation is preferable to that other—the singable one. Accept my thanks and greetings.

G. Verdi."

Many old Tenterden Street and other friends of Mrs. Blandford (née Miss Annie Jane Doorly), Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music, will be glad to hear of the success which has attended her pupils at the recent examination of the Associated Board, the first of its kind, held in far-away Dunedin, New Zealand. Of the twenty-three pupils sent up by Mrs. Blandford, twenty passed. Verily she scored on that occasion in more than a numerical sense, as one of her pupils, a little maiden of thirteen, obtained the highest marks made by the candidates who presented themselves in the practical examinations, senior grade. Such results must be alike gratifying and encouraging to Mrs. Blandford; they are certainly a matter for congratulation from the Mother Country.

Professor W. L. Tomlins, formerly of Chicago, who has for many years been known as an educationalist in music-teaching, has now taken up his residence in New York in order to practically work out his views upon the philosophy of music. He says: "I believe that I have discovered in music, not as it is now taught, but as it may be taught, a new force in education. The time-worn view which regarded music as an accomplishment only is fast disappearing, and the most progressive educators are beginning to realise the physical value of music, and to recognise the vital relation it holds to general education." Professor Tomlins expects to visit this country in the spring, when he hopes to have an opportunity of lecturing before the students of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted, on the 18th ult., the first part of the Symphony concert (No. 29), one of the admirable series given by the Municipal orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., at the Winter Gardens, Bournemouth. The compositions by Sir Alexander included Processional March and Morris Dance (first time), Overture—"Britannia," "Benedictus," and Ballet music from "Colomba." These attractive works received an excellent rendering by the band and were much enjoyed by an appreciative audience.

Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., M.P., the Attorney-General, has been elected President of the Abbey Glee Club, in succession to the late Sir Arthur W. Blomfield.

Mr. Eaton Faning was admitted to the degree of Doctor in Music at the University of Cambridge on the 18th ult. Congratulations to the music-master of Harrow School.

Mr. George Henschel will form the subject of the biographical sketch in our March number. The same issue will also contain an article of a specially practical nature on "Organ accompaniments," contributed by Mr. Edwin H. Lemare.

EDWIN GEORGE MONK.

We much regret to place on record the death of the former distinguished organist of York Minster, Dr. Edwin George Monk, which took place at his residence, East Cottage, Radley, Berkshire, on the 3rd ult., he having exceeded the Psalmist's limit of life by ten years.

The son of George Monk, an amateur musician, Dr. Monk was born at Frome, Somersetshire, December 13, 1819. Music seems to have been in the family, as his youngest brother, Henry Theophilus Monk, showed marked ability. His promising career, however, was prematurely and sadly cut off at the age of twenty-eight by drowning whilst he was bathing in North Wales in 1857. Dr. E. G. Monk (who was no relation to the late Dr. W. H. Monk, the musical editor of "Hymns Ancient and Modern") was a pupil of the brothers Henry and George Field (of Bath) for pianoforte and organ respectively. During a residence in London he attended Hullah's singing classes and took some private lessons in singing from Henry Phillips and from G. A. Macfarren in harmony and composition. His first organ appointment was at Midsomer Norton Parish Church, and he was subsequently organist of Christ Church, Frome. In 1844 (ætat 24) he was appointed the first organist, precentor, and music-master of St. Columba's College (now at Rathfarnham), founded in 1843 at Stackallan, the mansion of Lord Boyne, near Navan, and removed to Rathfarnham, near Dublin, in 1849. St. Columba's was the first public school in Ireland established upon strictly Church principles. Amongst subsequent holders of the office have been Mr. J. B. Calkin, Dr. G. B. Arnold, Mr. C. Lee Williams, and Mr. H. C. Perrin, the present organist of Canterbury Cathedral.

In 1847 Dr. Monk took up his residence in Oxford, where he became a teacher of singing and the first conductor of the University Motet and Madrigal Society. In the following year he was appointed, as at St. Columba's, the first organist, precentor, and music-master at St. Peter's College, Radley, near Abingdon. This post he held for eleven years—1848-59. He was evidently attached to the quiet little village, as he bought a cottage there, and within its walls he passed the last sixteen years of his life and drew his last breath. While at Radley he took the degrees of Bachelor (December 7, 1848) and Doctor in Music (March 15, 1856) at the University of Oxford, his exercise for the latter distinction being a setting, for bass solo and chorus, of words selected from Gray's poem "The Bard."

The great event of his life, however, was his election to the post of organist of York Minster at Christmas, 1858. The York appointment had been held by three generations of Camidges for 103 years, the last of the trio—John Camidge the younger—having died in September, 1858. York proved to be an ideal sphere for the abilities and temperament of so devotional a Church musician as Dr. Monk. One of his earliest duties was to superintend the rebuilding of the huge Screen organ, which he re-opened on November 10, 1859. "The Minster was thronged by above 4,000 persons," records The Musical Times for December, 1859, in a full account of the proceedings and a description of the reconstructed instrument, "and the resources of the organ were shown off with admirable effect by Dr. Monk." He also drew up the specification of the Nave organ at York, erected in September, 1863, by Hill. As one who was keenly interested in vocal music, he founded, in 1860, the York Minster Musical Society, its object being "to restore a class of music—madrigals, glees, and part-songs, which in modern days has been much neglected." After twenty-four years' splendid service as "chief musician" in York Minster, Dr. Monk resigned his appointment in 1883, and retired to Radley to end his days. In the previous year he had suffered a terrible bereavement in the death of his wife, to whom he was devotedly attached.

Dr. Monk took up astronomy as a hobby, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1871, and an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music in the same year. He was a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists from 1866 to 1870, and one of the original members (1874) of the Musical Association. From 1871 to 1883 he was a colleague of his friend, Sir Frederick Ouseley, as one of the examiners for musical degrees at Oxford. He was a Governor of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, from its foundation by Ouseley, in 1856, up to the time of his (Dr. Monk's) death. Amongst his pupils are Dr. Swinnerton Heap (the second Mendelssohn scholar) and Dr. M. J. Monk, organist of Truro Cathedral.

Dr. Monk's compositions include settings of Milton's "Ode to the Nativity," Gray's "The Bard," and Campbell's "Battle of the Baltic," in addition to a Unison Service in A, four anthems, many hymn-tunes, part-songs, &c. But it is chiefly in the important subject of chanting that the deceased musician was most widely known in connection with the music of the sanctuary. As long ago as the year 1850 he issued his "Anglican Chant Book." This was followed (in 1859) by "Chants for the daily Psalms, as used in York Minster." Three years later (in 1862) he collaborated with the late Sir Frederick Ouseley in the issue of the celebrated Psalter with which their names are so closely associated—a Psalter which had an extraordinary circulation and which is still largely used. He also edited "The Anglican Choral Service Book" and, with Ouseley, "Anglican Psalter Chants" (1872) and "Unison Chants for the Psalter" (1892). In conjunction with the Rev. Robert Corbet Singleton he edited "The Anglican Hymn Book" (1868), to which he contributed about forty tunes.

THE LATE DR. E. G. MONK.

Dr. Monk was not only the first editor of Novello's Part-Song Book, but he originated the idea half-a-century ago. Old readers of The Musical Times who have preserved their copies will find in our issue of April 1, 1850, the full prospectus of this popular publication. It was announced that the Proprietors "have determined to appropriate £100 per annum, to be expended in musical premiums, and a premium of eight guineas is monthly offered for the best PART-SONG for four voices, composed and adapted to the stanzas given in the current number." The prospectus, dated "St. Peter's College, Radley, March 15, 1850," and signed "Edwin George Monk," was headed:—

Pleasure and innocence ought never to be separated; yet we seldom find them otherwise than at variance, except when music brings them together.—Dr. Johnson.

And it concluded with the following paragraph :—

The difficulties attending the execution of a Work which is, to such an extent, an original one, cannot but be numerous: it is only hoped that they out-number its defects. However, it is now offered to all "that love or learne musick," with the hope that it may prove a healthy impulse to an art "that unites corporal with intellectual pleasure, by a species of enjoyment which gratifies sense without weakening reason; and which, therefore, the Great may cultivate without debasement, and the Good enjoy without depravation."

Dr. Monk and the Proprietors probably little thought when they started "Novello's Part-Song Book" fifty years ago that the series would attain to nearly eight hundred and fifty compositions, and that it would still be in progress in the year 1900.

Mr. Walter Macfarren, one of Dr. Monk's oldest and most intimate friends, thus writes of his personality: "As a man, Edwin George Monk was universally respected for his upright and honourable character. He was beloved for his singular modesty and his characteristic self-abnegation." Dr. Edward J. Bellerby, of Margate, an old pupil of Dr. Monk's, retains "the tenderest memories of one who was a devout Christian, an accomplished musician, a true friend, and an English gentleman. During the many years in which I was associated with him as pupil, assistant, and friend," continues Dr. Bellerby, "I never remember him not taking an earnest part in the service as a worshipper; he never played perfunctorily, nor left the organ-loft without a private prayer. And what a Bible student he was in his way! His big Bible in the organ-loft was in constant use during the Lessons, and many were the helpful comments he made sotto voce, during the reading of them, to the pupil whose privilege it was to sit beside him." In this connection it should be remembered that Dr. Monk prepared the librettos of Sir G. A. Macfarren's oratorios "St. John the Baptist," "Joseph," and "The Resurrection."

The funeral of Dr. Monk took place in the quaint old church of Radley, on the 9th ult. The Psalms were sung to a chant in A minor composed by him. Four familiar hymns were included in the solemn and impressive service. Amongst the mourners were Dr. and Mrs. Mark J. Monk (the latter a niece of the deceased), of Truro; and Mr. Henry King was present as the representative of Messrs. Novello. The remains of the much esteemed musician were interred in the same grave where his wife was laid to rest on "The Feast of the Epiphany," 1882.

MR. F. H. COWEN ON THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS AND ACCOMPANISTS.

A PAPER READ AT THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The subject upon which I have the pleasure of addressing you this morning is one which, so far as I am aware, has never yet during your various Conferences been brought before your notice; therefore it seems to me to be of sufficient importance to warrant its selection and to invite your friendly discussion, should you consider this desirable. I think, also, that it is a subject upon which I may perhaps have some slight authority to speak. During the early part of my career I passed some years' apprenticeship as an accompanist to most of the great artists of the time; and in later years I think I may lay claim to having had, perhaps, greater experience in orchestral conducting, in all its branches, than falls to the lot of most English musicians.

But if I have been fortunate in being able to gain my experience little by little, there are many who are not equally fortunate. Thus it is for the sake of these, and for those younger members of the profession who may be desirous of adopting the career of conductor or accompanist, rather than for those who are already more or less experienced and capable, that I would suggest some means by which they might gain the knowledge of the technique and the rudiments, so to speak, of these branches of our art, which would enable them to enter upon their work with, at least, some amount of excellence and confidence when the moment comes for them to put such knowledge into practice.

Conducting, as you all know, is no longer what it was at the beginning of the century. With the substitution of the baton for the violin bow, and with the gradual and ever-increasing development of music and orchestral resources, conducting has attained to so much importance that it has become to-day a real art, perhaps the greatest, as it is the most subtle of all the executive branches of music. The greatest because it is, or should be, the spirit that guides each individual effort, and leads all, in combination, towards the successful artistic interpretation of the highest form of musical art; the most subtle, because none but those under its immediate influence and control quite realise the power for good—or bad—which it exercises over their performances. A conductor cannot rise to any degree of real eminence without he possesses those rare innate qualities which, in every case, place the true artist above the rank and file of his brethren; but I cannot help thinking that given some natural aptitude, it is quite possible to become at least a fairly capable conductor with tuition and experience.

The actual technique of conducting can, I contend, be learnt by a musician of ordinary intelligence; the firm, decisive beat in forcible passages; the delicate beat in the pianos; above all is the clear beat. A good conductor should never allow the forces under his command, however experienced they may be, or however familiar the music to them, to imagine for themselves in what division of the bar they are playing (I once saw an eminent chef d'orchestre in the past give six down beats in a bar of six-eight time, but my esteem for him was considerably lessened for ever afterwards).

Then there is the knowledge of when to beat two in a bar, when four, the correct tempi of a piece, the compass and capabilities of each instrument in the orchestra, light and shade, the bringing out of certain parts or phrases, the subduing of others, the accompanying of recitatives and other vocal music; all this can, I feel confident, be learnt by the would-be wielder of the baton. I am afraid it is beyond the possibility of realization to hope for a school for the separate instruction of conductors, but I do not see why the art should not be taught in all our principal institutions in the same way as the pianoforte, or the violin, or singing.

I remember that when I was a student at the Berlin Conservatoire we used to have weekly meetings with a small band, consisting mostly of strings and a pianoforte, when each student had to take his turn in conducting some overture or a movement of a symphony, the score of which he had previously taken home to study for a week or two. I believe that occasionally at the orchestral meetings at our music schools a student is permitted to conduct a trial of his own compositions; but I think I am not wrong in saying that these practices are usually directed by the orchestral professor of the institution—if I err in this matter, I beg to offer my apologies. But what I feel is wanted, and so much to be desired, is the establishment of regular weekly practices for the benefit of students aspiring to become conductors. If a complete orchestra is not available, let there be only strings and wood-wind, or strings and pianoforte. Let each student in turn have the baton placed in his hand, as one would place the violin and bow in the hands of the would-be violinist, and let him begin from the beginning, and, with the professor at his side, gradually learn the technique of the art, and gain that confidence which is one of the most important preliminary steps towards success.

I would even advocate preparatory classes with pianoforte only, or private lessons on the same plan. Most of the essentials to which I have already alluded, and which constitute the grammar of conducting, can be at least studied, if not entirely mastered in this way, the professor at the pianoforte, with a duplicate score, forming for the time being an imaginary orchestra, following, not leading the student-conductor, correcting him when wrong, suggesting points of detail, and generally instructing him in all the initial points of beat, tempo, phrasing, &c., thus preparing him for the higher task of dealing with genuine forces and real tone colour. Above all, the student should make a study of the scores of all the great masters, both orchestral and choral, classical and modern, until he has mastered their minutest detail. This is as necessary a part of his preliminary training as is the reading and study of books on law or medicine to the embryo barrister or doctor. The suggestions I have just made apply not only to the young aspirant, but equally to those musicians throughout the country who, from lack of sufficient opportunity, find themselves somewhat hampered when the occasion arises for them to direct an orchestra.

I would wish it to be thoroughly understood that I am only speaking generally, and that my remarks are not addressed to those who are, fortunately, able to cope successfully with the difficulties of such a position at which I have already hinted. But there are doubtless not a few who, through no fault of their own, find the task a heavy one, and succeed but indifferently. I do not desire to speak disparagingly of their efforts when I say that some previous training, such as I have suggested, might often bring out any latent qualities they may possess, and enable them to carry through their duties with greater satisfaction to themselves and advantage to the performances. I think they would be the first to agree with me that there can be nothing demeaning in the desire to perfect oneself in any art, and if it be once understood that the technique of conducting can be taught—as I contend it can—why should not those who feel themselves in any degree deficient endeavour to benefit thereby in the same way as they would if they aspired to be singers or instrumentalists?

The musical development of the country and the education of the public are perhaps more dependent upon those who guide the performances of works than upon the performers themselves. To a very large extent the Provinces draw upon London for their soloists. But the conductor is usually a musician of local standing, and it is to his successful interpretation of the works he directs that we must look for the upholding of that high standard throughout the country, which means the continued growth of musical taste and intellectual appreciation.

If I have devoted the greater part of my remarks this morning to the training of conductors, it is not because that I do not consider the art of accompanying on the pianoforte of the same importance, but because much that I have said applies equally to both. The accompanist, like the conductor, has to study correct tempo, light and shade, to know when to allow his part to become prominent, when it is to be subdued, how to follow, and to be in sympathy with the singer. Added to this, he should be, or should have been, a good pianist, able to play the most difficult passages, and he should also be capable of transposing at sight. Indeed, I almost think that he requires a greater combination of gifts than the conductor; but, given the first essentials of good pianism and a sympathetic touch, he, too, with study and tuition, can become more or less efficient and capable in his art.

I would pursue the same plan with regard to the training of an accompanist as I have laid down for the conductor. I would make him study the accompaniments of vocal and instrumental music of all styles, in the same way as he would a pianoforte piece, and then, with a vocalist or instrumentalist to sing or play the solo part, and an experienced professor seated near him, instruct him in all those details which go to make an artistic and tasteful interpretation of the music. For it is a mistake to imagine that accompanying does not require the same artistic qualities as other branches of music. Think of a Schubert, a Schumann, or a Brahms song, without the same equal grasp of its inner depth and beauty on the part of the accompanist as on that of the singer! How much of its effect is lost! I am aware that by many accompanying is considered to hold an inferior position to solo playing, perhaps because its very nature renders it and its exponent less en evidence than the art of the soloist; but it is as much a subtle factor, unconsciously felt if not actually recognised by the public, in a successful performance as is its prototype—orchestra accompanying.

As regards opportunity, the accompanist has a hundred more chances of gaining experience than the conductor. Every day there are given numberless concerts all over the country, the success of which is increased, or marred, as the case may be, by the efforts of the accompanist. I cannot but feel that this particular branch of our art has been more neglected than it deserves, except in a few noteworthy instances, and it might be well worth while for some of our young students of the pianoforte to devote themselves to its serious study. It is only given to a few pianists of exceptional talent to rise to anything beyond a subordinate position in that career, or to do more than eventually earn their livelihood by teaching; whereas by employing their pianistic abilities as a means of becoming proficient in the art of accompanying, they would supply what is a constantly felt want, and create for themselves a lucrative position in a branch of the art which at present is but inadequately filled.

I feel that I have occupied your attention quite long enough. I have brought this subject before your notice with the desire and hope that I may obtain your views and opinions on the subject as compared to my own. I would once more repeat that my remarks have been made in a general and wide-spread sense. I have endeavoured to show that I am not incognizant of the talent and capabilities which already exist in these directions. But as we possess in this country many vocalists and instrumentalists of the first rank, and are fast raising up around us a school of composers, so would I wish to see these other branches of the profession equally well and numerously represented; and, moreover, to obtain for their disciples that preliminary training which would ultimately help them to place the executive and creative efforts of their colleagues before the public in the best possible light, and to lead them a long way upon the road towards becoming the efficient conductors and accompanists of the future.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

A FOUNDLING REHEARSAL.

The Foundling Hospital has musical traditions somewhat akin to the unique. Handel was one of its "Governors and Guardians." He presented to the chapel of the Institution a three-manual organ, which he "opened" with a performance of his "Messiah." Subsequent renderings of the great oratorio, under his own personal direction, brought to the funds of the charity the sum of nearly £7,000. The first organist (in 1750) was John Christopher Smith, Handel's right-hand man and amanuensis. Other holders of the office—for which Samuel Wesley once competed—have been John Immyns, William Russell, J. C. Nightingale, C. E. Willing, and Myles B. Foster.

The Sunday services of the Foundling Hospital Chapel have long been a feature of interest to country and American cousins who visit this "smoky nest." Through the courtesy of the present organist, Mr. Davan Wetton, we were enabled to attend a recent rehearsal. This is held on Saturday morning in the girls' schoolroom, to the accompaniment of a grand pianoforte. The children's choir consists of about 100 girls and 50 boys (1st and 2nd trebles and altos). The rosy-faced little maidens do not appear on Saturdays in those captivating caps which form so characteristic a feature of their "Sunday best." The professional choir of six ladies and gentlemen—a choir in itself, with all the attributes of fulness of tone, perfect phrasing and blending, and purity of voice—are in attendance. At present it consists of Miss Elsie Mackenzie (soprano), Miss Marion Severn (contralto), Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Edwin Moss (tenors), Mr. Arthur Barlow and Mr. Ben Grove (basses).

The excellent training which the children receive at the hands of Mr. Wetton at once manifests itself: there is an entire absence of that coarse tone which so often asserts itself in boys and girls found in such institutions. The Psalms are sung with commendable deliberation and due attention to clear articulation. The children first sing the melody of each chant to "oh" and "ah," as a sort of "tune up." The verses are sung antiphonally—first by the children (melody only) and then by the professional choir, of course in harmony. The effect is "mighty pleasant," as Mr. Pepys would say. Garrett in E is the service, which the children know quite well and seem to enjoy its melodiousness; the verse parts are sung by the professional choir. The anthem, Goss's ever-fresh "Wilderness," is similarly treated. Although the children have not sung the anthem for about a year, they sing it without hesitation; its tunefulness—oh! for more Goss-like melody in church music—has evidently imprinted itself on these young folks' memories. A hymn-anthem—to be sung on the next day "at the request of the Treasurer"—follows. It is a setting by Mr. Wetton for soprano solo and chorus of Wesley's familiar words, "Jesus, Lover of my soul," written for the Foundling choir. The hymn-anthem was introduced here by Mr. Myles B. Foster, who wrote his celebrated "Oh! for a closer walk with God" during his organistship. A congregational hymn, to a tune by Mr. Edwin Moss, concludes the rehearsal, which proceeds with great smoothness and with commendable attention on the part of the children. Mr. Wetton, who has held the appointment of organist and director of the choir for seven years, takes a warm interest in the training of his young charges, with whom he appears to be on very good terms. We hope on some future occasion to give an illustrated article on the Foundling and its musical associations.

"PILLS FOR CANDIDATES."

Adopting a title used by the late Mr. J. W. Davison in reprinting some musical examination papers in the pages of the defunct Musical World, it may serve to call attention to a little booklet of twenty pages by the late Dr. Gauntlett. In the year 1859 there was evidently a vacancy in the organistship of Sydenham Episcopal Chapel. The umpire was Dr. Gauntlett, who printed a series of "Questions for Candidates" on that competitive occasion. It should be remembered that these interrogations were published long before candidates had any experience of the Royal College of Organists' examinations. Gauntlett's five "preliminary questions" included such a domestic enquiry as "Are you married or single?" There are no less than sixty-three technical questions. Some of them are curious reading even in these much-examination days. Subjoined are a few specimens:—

Of all the cathedral chants, which, in your opinion, are the three best single and the three best double?

How many minutes are required for the chanting of the "Te Deum"?

Which is the most difficult verse in the Psalter to chant properly?

What time is required for singing four verses of a long measure hymn to a cheerful tune, with three short symphonies?

What are the geometrical extremes of the centre C in the key of C?

Why is tune a part of time?

A chord is not the cause of a chord. What is the cause of a chord?

Amongst the four "exercises" was the following:—

Write a tune in short score, and in four parts, in the key of B flat major, to the following verse:—

The day is past and gone,
Great God, we bow to Thee;
Again, as shades of night steal on,
Unto Thy side we flee.

Who was the successful competitor for the Sydenham vacancy on that sixty-eight-question examination occasion in the year 1859?

SWEELINCK AT ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

There was included in one of the recent Carol services in St. Paul's Cathedral the fine five-part motet, "Hodie Christus Natus est," by the greatest of Dutch organists, Jan Pieterszoon Sweelinck (1562-1621). Notwithstanding the strictness of their counterpoint and their leanings towards the style of the old polyphonic writing, the vocal works of Sweelinck are characterised by a general freedom of effect and a refreshing tunefulness in the part-writing rare in the music of that period. The St. Paul's Choir, who sang from the edition of the "Hodie" prepared by Mr. W. Barclay Squire, gave a most praiseworthy rendering of the old Netherlander's music. The work was, of course, sung without accompaniment, and the pitch was strictly maintained throughout. Sir George Martin and his excellent choir are to be congratulated upon the attainment of such admirable results in the too much neglected domain of pure choral music.

HYMN-TUNE QUESTIONS.

Is it an easy thing to write a good hymn-tune? And is simplicity a sine quâ non? These questions are suggested by two extracts from letters written to the late Dr. E. G. Monk thirty years ago in his capacity of Editor of "The Anglican Hymn-Book." Sir John Goss wrote: "In my opinion a good tune is a difficult thing to produce. . . . I am not proud of anything I have done in that line, and I should be glad to find I had produced a really good tune—in my own as well as in other people's opinion." In sending a contribution to Dr. Monk's book, Sir Sterndale Bennett wrote: "You will see that I have treated the hymn in a very simple manner. My experience since the Chorale Book leading me to the desirability of this. In an oratorio with accompaniment it is a different matter. Should you wish me to elaborate the tune, I shall be very glad to do so, or give you new harmonies for the last verse." The tune to which Sterndale Bennett refers is doubtless his setting in F minor of "The radiant morn hath passed away" (No. 25 of "The Anglican Hymn Book"). Dr. Monk seems to have accepted the composer's offer, as the last verse, indicated to be sung "voices in unison," has "new harmonies," as compared with the four-part version.

Impressiveness was the characteristic note of the interpretation of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," in St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 25th ult. It was quite evident that the service was a labour of love, consecrated with devotional spirit on the part of all those who took part in it, from Sir George Martin to the smallest chorister. What could more fitly celebrate the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul in the Cathedral which bears that great Apostle's name than the strains of Mendelssohn's music?

The Liverpool Church Choir Association seems to be making good headway. No less than 600 choristers, representing twenty churches, have joined the Association. Therefore the prospects for the forthcoming Festival, to be held in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, on April 24, are decidedly encouraging.

A complete collection of the hymn-tunes composed by Sir John Stainer is in the press and will shortly be issued by Messrs. Novello.

The Rev. Canon Henry Twells, the author of the familiar and beautiful hymn "At even, ere the sun was set," died at Bournemouth, on the 19th ult., aged seventy-six.

ORGAN RECITALS.

It is proposed to insert in this column, from month to month, two organ recital programmes typifying concert-hall and church performances on the "King of instruments." The first is that of a Saturday afternoon recital given by Dr. A. L. Peace, in St. George's Hall, Liverpool. Admission to these performances is 6d., but on Saturday evenings, when Dr. Peace puts forward a more popular programme, admission is 1d., with reserved seats at 3d. Each recital lasts one hour and consists entirely of organ music. Not the least interesting and educational features of the recitals are the pithy "programme notes" contributed by Dr. Peace, which so greatly add to the interest and understandableness—if the term may be allowed—of these municipal music-makings on the banks of the Mersey. As he has written about 500 of these "short commentaries," it is possible to estimate the extent of his répertoire.

1. Organ Sonata, No. 1 .. .. Mendelssohn.
2. Andante di molto, F major (Symphony in C) .. .. Mozart.
3. Prelude and Fugue, G major (Peters, Vol. 2, No. 2) .. Bach.
4. (a) Song, "Who is Sylvia?" .. .. Schubert.
   (b) Rhapsodie sur les Cantiques Bretons, No. 2 C. Saint-Saëns.
5. "L'heure de l'angelus" (Fantaisie Pastorale) Lefébure-Wély.
6. Marche aux Flambeaux, No. 2 .. .. .. Meyerbeer.

Mr. Walter Alcock, assistant-organist of Westminster Abbey, recently gave the following selection at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, of which he is the organist. His programme may serve as our second specimen—a church organ recital.

1. Fantasia on the tune "Hanover" .. .. E. H. Lemare.
2. Suite for Strings and Organ (Op. 149) .. .. Rheinberger.
   Violin—Miss Marian Jay. Violoncello—Mr. J. Renard.
3. Andante from Sonata in F (Op. 82) .. .. .. Silas.
4. Siegfried Idyll .. .. Wagner.

From a large number of programmes received during the past month we select the following for mention:—

Dr. G. F. Huntley, St. Mark's, New Barnet; Mr. Walter Heaton, Methodist Episcopal Church, Reading, Pa.; Mr. W. J. Stobbart (who played Stainer's "Jubilant March"), St. Peter's, Stockton-on-Tees; Mr. H. J. Davies, Christ Church, Bath; Mr. Alfred H. Allen, St. Clement's, Ilford; Mr. Arthur Docksey, St. Aidan's, South Shields; Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. Bede's, Liverpool; Mr. R. H. Whall (who included his own arrangement, for organ, violin, and clarinet, of the Andante from Schubert's Octet), St. Mary's, Chepstow; Mr. David Stephen, Ogilvie Free Church, Dundee; Mr. T. H. Collinson (who played Corelli's Eighth Concerto), St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh; Mr. R. E. Parker, Wilmslow Parish Church; Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe (who played an "Allegro in G" by Dr. Dupuis), at SS. John Baptist and Felix, Felixstowe; Mr. William Rigby, New Road Congregational Church, Bury; Mr. Herbert W. Jones, Bothwell Parish Church; Mr. H. Wells, Christ Church Cathedral, New Zealand; Mr. W. A. Roberts, St. Paul's, Princes Park, Liverpool; and Mr. W. W. Starmer (who played an "Introduction and Toccata" by John Stanley, the blind organist), St. Matthew's, Northampton.

Special reference must be made to a recital given by that admirable player, Mr. E. H. Thorne, at St. Lawrence, Jewry, for the benefit of Mrs. George Cooper, widow of the late Mr. George Cooper, the third bearer of that distinguished name. Mr. Thorne's programme included his own Overture in F, Bach's C major Fugue, S. S. Wesley's Andante in F, and Best's "Fantasy on English Christmas Carols." At a special "war service" held at St. Peter's, Chertsey (organist, Mr. F. Monk), Dr. Walford Davies's choral hymn, "Hymn before action," was sung, Mr. E. Head taking the solo.

Halifax is to have a new organ, to cost £2,400, in its Public Hall. The instrument is the generous gift of Miss Elizabeth Porter, of that Yorkshire town, in memory of her brother, Mr. Samuel Porter. It is not surprising to learn that the municipality of Halifax has gratefully accepted Miss Porter's offer. Sir Theodore Martin has presented a new organ to Llantysilio Parish Church, near Llangollen, where an alto-relievo in pure white marble of Helen Faucit (Lady Martin) was recently erected in the chancel.

The following candidates were successful in obtaining the Diploma of Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists at the examinations held last month:—

Mr. W. H. Bullock (Haverill), Mr. A. N. Bulmer (Sunbury-on-Thames), Mr. G. Dyson (Halifax), Mr. R. H. Mort (Pendleton), and Mr. E. B. Slinn (Boscombe).

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, Tewkesbury Abbey.

Mr. Allan Paterson, St. Paul's Church, Greenock.

Mr. R. Wilkinson, organist and music-master, All Saints' School, Bloxham.

Mr. G. S. Roper, organist scholar at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

Mr. Alfred T. Atkinson, Wesleyan Church, Bow.

Mr. James Lister, Cotham Wesleyan Church, Bristol.

Schottisches Concert für Pianoforte mit Begleitung des Orchesters. Von A. C. Mackenzie. Op. 55.
[Leipzig: Fr. Kistner.]

THIS work was introduced to London amateurs at one of the Philharmonic concerts last season, the solo executant being M. Paderewski. Naturally, a composition of important dimensions, elaborate structure, and crowded with significant details could not be judged with assurance under the conditions of a first hearing. It is now published and can be studied at leisure by those who would make complete acquaintance with a work destined, we think, to a high place among the composer's achievements, and also in the list of its kind.

The concerto is entitled "Scottish" for good and sufficient reasons. But, except in the Finale, we do not find the broader and more obvious characteristics of Caledonian national music. The nationality is, however, plainly suggested in many touches, while throughout one feels the influence of the Scottish spirit, and of those traits which distinguish the Celtic genius in music from all other. Adding to this that the work is profoundly thoughtful, brilliant in expression, and wrought out with a rare combination of daring and patience, it must be obvious that here we have something upon which the pains of a student cannot be wasted.

Allegro—E minor, 4-4.

The construction of the leading movement is new. At any rate, we know nothing exactly like it, nor even approaching to a near resemblance. There is, of course, an approximation to established form in the exposition of the matter constituting the first subject before the solo instrument enters, but, on the other hand, no reference is made to the second (really the principal) theme. It appears noteworthy also that the leading subject is not a set melody conceived beforehand, so to speak, and dropped into its place linotype fashion. Its sections grow out of several figures and passages, and having no vital connection one with another, yet come together in easy relationship. It is necessary to illustrate this by examples. In the first place, we find a horn solo—which may be regarded as the text of the movement—as that to which all the argument returns with seeming inevitableness. We should note particularly the triplet figure before going on to a passage of two detached phrases scored for full orchestra—

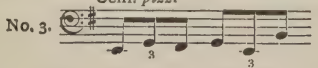
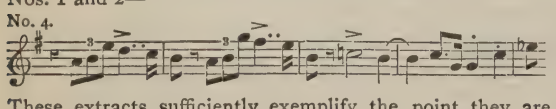
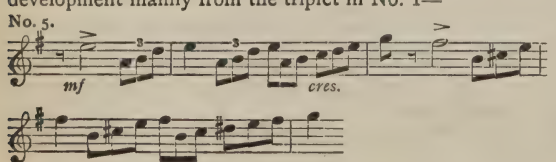
Repeating No. 1, the composer gives a triplet figure to the celli—



This also is important, and much will come out of it, but first we have a more complete subject developed from Nos. 1 and 2—

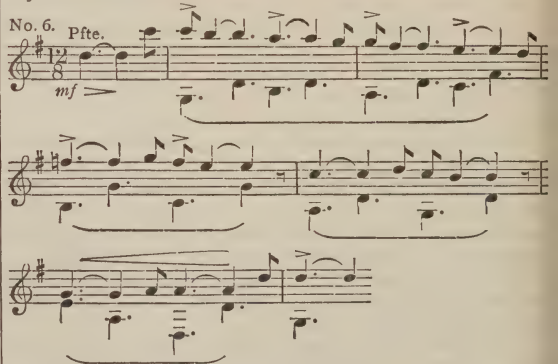


These extracts sufficiently exemplify the point they are here cited to prove, but account must be taken of a development mainly from the triplet in No. 1—



Such are the materials of the first section, which is, for the most part, orchestrated with fulness, and remarkable for energy. It ends abruptly with No. 3, in unison of wood-wind and strings, followed by a pause.

Now the pianoforte, beginning its work, enters with a solo in the nature of a cadenza. It employs several figures which have already appeared, notably No. 3; stops abruptly in the antepenultimate bar, and leaves the close to bassoons and strings, which repeat, in unison, an abbreviated form of No. 1. The next section (Allegretto, 12-8) has a subject freely developed from No. 3, and based upon a dominant pedal. In its animated exposition both pianoforte and orchestra take part antiphonally, but this is not so much an independent division of the work as an introduction to, and an attendant upon, the set melody constituting the main theme of the movement; in the second capacity furnishing interludes as a set off against the sedate strains of the subject. The tempo has now changed to Andantino, but the 12-8 remains, and in that measure the pianoforte sings the new melody—one of much beauty and rhythmic freshness—



Upon this subject, which is promptly repeated, No. 3 is an assiduous attendant, the triplet figure everywhere pervading the accompaniment as well as the interludes. The melody ceasing, No. 3 resumes its sway till the Andantino closes with another varied form of No. 1, in unison of bassoons and strings as before—

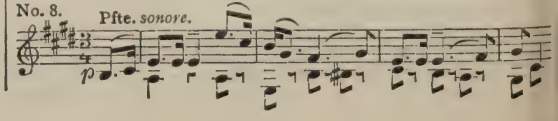
The Allegretto and Andantino are now repeated with B major as the principal key, after which the melody is somewhat largely developed, in quicker time and with more emphatic utterance, the pianoforte being still the chief exponent. So the movement marches to another cadenza and a peroration which includes the melody and leads to a Coda (Maestoso), wherein No. 2 alternates with cadenze in a novel and effective form. The Scottish atmosphere surrounding this movement is obvious, and equally so is the element of fantasia which takes the place of ordered and orthodox form. But each feature is quite consistent with the other, and in that fact lies the warrant of both.

The first movement leads into the second—

Molto lento—E major, 3-4

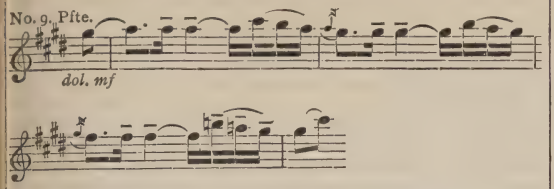
—a slow modulatory passage for pianoforte serving as a connecting link, and coming to a pause on the dominant of the new key.

Trumpets, trombones, and tuba, which take part in the first movement, now stand out, leaving the second to the usual wood-wind and strings, with horns, drums, and, of course, the pianoforte. At the outset all the strings are "muted" save the celli, these having thematic passages which it is desirable to make prominent. As regards the national character of the music, in this case nothing need be said. Frequent recurrence of the "snap" would alone serve to proclaim it. The principal theme, entrusted to the pianoforte, is strongly marked—



After repetition an octave higher, a continuation unfolds itself, and had better be displayed here—

No. 9. Pfte.



This, briefly expanded, is followed by an episode wherein large use is made of antiphonal passages for orchestra and pianoforte, after the fashion of those which open the slow movement in Schumann's Concerto, only more elaborate. Save for one passage wherein a melodic idea, noticeable in the brief discussion of the melody, is ingeniously worked out, the antiphony runs through the episode.

Later, the short detached phrases so largely used in this movement are confined to the pianoforte, and displayed against a background of impressive harmony (horns and bassoons) connected with steady repetition of the principal rhythmic figure—in the principal theme. At the close of this section the pianoforte again refers to the melody, and, in conjunction with the orchestra, deals freely with the more salient features in it. This section, indeed, is an example of quite elaborate development, being crowded with interesting details. Yet the strength of the conception is not frittered away upon comparative trifles. The music is purely homogeneous, and its elaborate expression serves a single and obvious end. The peroration (meno mosso) brings a change to comparative simplicity and closes the movement in a very beautiful and even touching manner. To our mind, the whole of the Lento deserves careful inspection by those who would understand the composer's art and measure his resources.

Allegro vivace (ma non presto all' principio)—
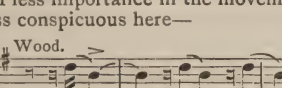
E minor and major, 2-4.

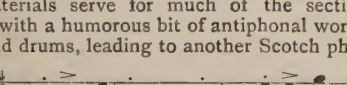
There is no link between the slow movement and this Finale, which appropriately stands alone in its rude strength and rough humour. Hearing it, one becomes conscious, so to speak, of brown heath and shaggy wood. There is no mistaking the atmosphere, nor would it be mistaken were there less of the "Scotch snap" and other specialties in the national strains of our Northern neighbours. The leading section, full of exuberant life, appears in the nature of an introduction. It is largely built upon a dominant pedal, above which two short phrases assert themselves quite strenuously. The first of these has an unmistakable flavour, and is heard from a bassoon—

No. 11. Fag.



The second, of less importance in the movement generally, is none the less conspicuous here—

No. 12. Wood.



Note an obvious connection between No. 11 and No. 1. These materials serve for much of the section, which continues with a humorous bit of antiphonal work for pizz. strings, and drums, leading to another Scotch phrase—

No. 13.

and to a codetta which stops abruptly to let in the pianoforte with a brilliant series of passages ending in a prolonged trill for wood-wind and strings. Here what may be regarded as an exordium closes, and the pianoforte proceeds to enunciate the principal theme, already foreshadowed in No. 11—

No. 14. Pfte. molto marcato.

With this, and connected matter, the composer deals at length, in very straightforward and resourceful style; with the utmost energy likewise. Still unexhausted, and without pausing to breathe, he "goes for" a second subject in F sharp major (dominant of the dominant)—

No. 15. Pfte.

On reference to No. 13, we find that this subject, like its predecessor, was foreshadowed in the introductory section. Discussion of the new theme is not prolonged. As though weary at last, the pace slackens, and soon we have a time of comparative calm (Andante tranquillo, quasi dolente, 6-8), in which the pianoforte theme is "subtended" by a subject for celli (sonore) of striking character—

Celli. sonore.

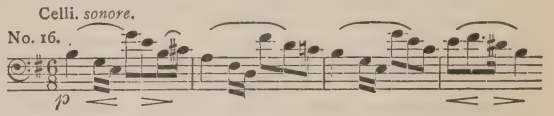
No. 16.



Having rested, the composer gets again (sempre accelerando e cresc.) into his former stride, and enters as vigorously as ever into renewed treatment of the themes already displayed, never slackening until he passes the post—a winner. We cannot follow him through this further discussion. Enough that the Finale is rounded off with unexhausted resources, and that so ends a work as remarkable for vigour and freshness as for wealth of musicianship.

(Novello's Part-Song Book. Nos. 796—798; 810—812.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

"As torrents in summer" is one of the many attractive four-part choruses found in Mr. Elgar's cantata "King Olaf," but it is complete in itself and forms an effective part-song. The Irish melody allied to "Silent, O Moyle!" has been cleverly arranged by Mr. Seymour as a four-part song, the vocal writing containing several notably effective points.

"A Birthday Serenade" is bright and cheerful, as a serenade for such an occasion should naturally be. The music is simple and melodious, and could be sung unaccompanied without fear of mishap by singers of moderate capabilities. Shelley's pessimistic lines, "The Flower that smiles to-day," have been set by Mr. Elliot Button in a sympathetic manner. The part-writing, which is characterised by a commendable simplicity, is interesting, and this part-song should be acceptable to singers.

Peculiar interest is attached to "Let Erin remember the days of old," as it obtained the prize offered by the Feis Ceoil of 1898 for the best original unaccompanied part-song. As will be expected by those who are acquainted with the poet's lines, the music is martial in character; nevertheless it contains considerable variety and some highly effective contrasts. In particular, the significant use made of the opening phrase is admirable.

It should be frequently heard at the multitudinous concerts on St. Patrick's Day. "To Sylvia" is written in legitimate English glee style. It will interest intelligent executants, and if they follow the directions of the composer, who has written with great skill, their listeners will be much pleased by the music's "sweet, feat ways."

How Music developed. By W. J. Henderson.
[John Murray.]

Mr. Henderson is a distinguished musical critic of New York, whose book, "What is good music?" has made him of good repute on this side of the Atlantic. "How music developed" gives some evidence of having been the outcome of a course of lectures; not that it is any the worse on that account—in fact, it is just that note-book character of the volume that is likely to make it acceptable to students. The book is divided into twenty-seven sections, having such titles as "The Birth of Counterpoint," "Evolution of the Orchestra," &c. In thus subjectising his material, so to speak, Mr. Henderson has done better within the limitations of his space than if he had followed a strictly chronological plan with the inevitable "jumbling up" that results from such a proceeding. An excellent feature of the book is its concise and pleasant style. Thoughtfulness is stamped on every page, and dry pedanticism is mercifully absent. Mr. Henderson has the good sense to express his opinions in just a few simple words—friendly like—which makes them so much more acceptable than if they were couched in the opiniated verbosity that some writers on music—who think they know so much—too often affect. Here is a specimen of Mr. Henderson's critical remarks. Speaking of Bach's "48," he says: "All these preludes and fugues have a note of personal intimacy. Some are playful, some are bold, some are sad, some are full of celestial calm, some are passionately pathetic. The higher qualities of these compositions are their consistency, their sense of fitness, their apparent inevitableness."

It may seem ungracious to refer to one or two shortcomings in a book which has undoubted merits. But Mr. Henderson's musical examples have suffered at the hands of his American proof readers, if our surmise is correct that the book was printed on "the other side." Not only are there many misprints, but in two whole pages the key signature (G minor) has been entirely omitted, and the results—should the notes be played literally as printed—would be more curious than euphonious. The opus numbers given to Mozart's symphonies—e.g., 543, 550, &c.—are the numbers in Köchel's catalogue. The whereabouts of the original MS. of "Sumer is icumen in" might have been given. It is in the British Museum, Harleian MSS. 978. The date of the first performance of Handel's "Messiah" (in Dublin) should be April 13, not 18, 1742; and that of the year "1749" for the London performance is wrong. The work was given in Covent Garden Theatre, March 23, 1743, and from 1750 to 1758 annually at the Foundling Hospital under Handel's personal direction. But these blemishes will doubtless be removed before the book reaches its second edition. Nothing but praise can be given for the copious and admirable index, which greatly adds to the practical value of Mr. Henderson's interesting volume.

Turbarum Voces. Auctore Guglielmo Byrd. Edited by W. Barclay Squire.
Out of the Deep. Full Anthem for Lenten and General Use. Composed by H. Walford Davies.
(Novello's Octavo Anthems, Nos. 618 and 638.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

"Turbarum Voces" is a setting by our great Church musician, William Byrd, of the demands and answers of the Pharisees and people as related in Chapters xviii. and xix. of the Gospel according to St. John. The music is in three parts, for soprano, tenor, and bass, and is intended to be sung unaccompanied. Were the aforesaid chapters intoned, with the passages specified given out as directed by the composer, the effect would certainly intensify the significance of the scenes described. The music is remarkable for its directness of expression. The opening is chiefly in solid harmony, but in verse 40 of Chapter xviii. and in verses 3, 6, and 7, containing the cries of the people, some contrapuntal devices are used with dramatic effect. It should be added that the tenor part might be sung by altos, and that the English text is placed under the Latin. Mr. Barclay Squire has discharged his duties as editor with that conscientiousness which is naturally expected of him.

Dr. Walford Davies's anthem is a very fine example of modern Church music. In it the best traditions of our magnificent store of worship music are preserved, while the resources now at the command of the composer are used with remarkable skill and judiciousness. The music imperatively demands an intelligent and well-trained choir to do it justice, but it does not present exceptional difficulties. A specially commendable feature is the employment of three staves for the organ accompaniment. Moreover, the organ part is admirably laid out to enhance the effect of the voice parts. These are contrapuntal in style, and contain many entrances in imitation which increase the significance of the text. The perfect fitting of the music to the words is, indeed, a special feature of the anthem. In his endeavours to attain this end Dr. Davies has occasionally expanded the usual four-part writing into that of seven parts, but such passages are few. Towards the end there occurs a quintet for two sopranos, two tenors, and a bass, which greatly adds to the effectiveness of the composition. A reference to the opening theme in augmentation and four bars of choral writing of considerable originality bring the work to an impressive close.

Beethoven. By Frederick J. Crowest.
Wagner. By Charles A. Lidgey.
(The Master Musicians Series. Edited by Frederick J. Crowest.) [J. M. Dent and Company.]

These two volumes are specimens of mere book-making. It would occupy too much space to point out their shortcomings and literary defects, more especially that on Beethoven. But we should be glad to be directed to the source of any biographical information relating to "Anhang," whose name (!) is given by Mr. Crowest as an "author" in his Appendix A. What would Beethoven have said to any biographer of his who could perpetrate such a travesty as: "a journey which, unhappily, proved to be the last he undertook ere essaying that bourne along which no traveller has yet turned a face." Shades of Shakespeare!

The National Music of America and its sources. By Louis C. Elson.
[Boston (U.S.): L. C. Page and Company.]

In this attractively got up book Mr. Elson chats pleasantly upon a subject which has an interest all its own. He states that American music was at first planted in very sterile soil. The Pilgrims were certainly not given to overmuch music-making, and deep-rooted prejudices had to be seriously encountered. Amongst several amusing extracts from old church records in the New World, there is one against "the new way of Psalmody"—i.e., singing from printed music instead of by ear. Here are some of the written objections to the new system (circa 1700):—

> 1st, it is a new way—an unknown tongue. 2nd, it is not so melodious as the old way. 3rd, there are so many tunes that nobody can ever learn them. 4th, the new way makes disturbance in churches, grieves good men, exasperates them and causes them to behave disorderly. 5th, it is popish. 6th, it will introduce instruments. 7th, the names of the notes are blasphemous. 8th, it is needless, the old way being good enough. 9th, it requires too much time to learn it. 10th, it makes the young disorderly.

Equally interesting are the references to the beginning of secular music in New England. As early as 1756, while Handel was yet alive, Stephen Deblois, a public spirited citizen, built a Concert Hall in Boston. Mr. Elson may well say that the following, from the Boston Chronicle of November 1, 1768, speaks for itself: "This is to acquaint the Gentlemen and Ladies that a Concert of Music will be performed on Monday, the 21st inst., at Six o'Clock in the Evening, at the Music-Hall in Brattle-Street, opposite Dr. Cooper's Meeting-House. After the concert is over, the Gentlemen and Ladies may have a Ball till Eleven o'clock." Continuing, he says: "The tickets were one shilling and sixpence sterling, not an exorbitant price." Church music and dancing seem to have had a curious connection in Boston, as, in 1774, the organist of Trinity Church, advertised that he was about "to open a dancing-school in addition to his musical duties." There are many plums to be picked from this entertaining and readable volume. A list of eighteenth century American Psalmodies on p. 52 has not escaped our notice, and there are other interesting features which we have not space to mention. Mr. Elson has done well. The illustrations and fac-similes add to the attractiveness of this dainty book.

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH ORGAN.

RE-OPENING AND HISTORICAL NOTES THEREUPON.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

DR. HOOK, the great Vicar of Leeds, was no musician—there is a well known story of his mistaking the Old Hundredth for the National Anthem, and calling for three cheers after its performance—but he thoroughly realised the importance of music as an adjunct to devotion, and not the least of his legacies to Leeds was the daily musical service at the Parish Church. This has been the model for so much "levelling up" in the music of our parish churches that it no longer is as unique as it once was. Its absolute merits are, however, as great as ever they were, for the good work begun by S. S. Wesley has been continued by his successors, R. S. Burton (1849-80), Dr. Creser (1880-91), and the present organist, Mr. Alfred Benton. The organ has long been one of the finest in English parish churches, but in its action and mechanism it was behind the times, a reproach which has just been removed by the important alterations that have been in hand since last July.

Two stops have been added to the great organ, two to the choir, one to the echo, and one to the pedal. An entirely new solo organ, on a separate keyboard, with seven stops, has been constructed, and couplers, pistons, hydraulic engines, action, keyboards, &c., have been renewed or added. The work has been done by Messrs. Abbott and Smith, of Leeds, with the exception of three stops—a trumpet on the great and a double bassoon and Cor Anglais on the solo—which were supplied by the late Cavaillé Coll, of Paris. The organ now contains ninety-one drawstops, of which seventy-seven are speaking stops. It includes one stop by Byfield, two by Holt, others by Greenwood, Schulze—to whom its nobility of tone is largely due—Hill, Cavaillé Coll, and Abbott and Smith, so that the instrument is now as composite as it is varied.

The reconstructed organ was opened on November 30. On December 5 Sir Walter Parratt gave a recital, and on December 7, with Dr. Sinclair, of Hereford, as organist, the instrument took the place of an orchestra at a performance of Brahms's German Requiem. Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given on December 19, Dr. Armes, of Durham, being the organist, and Mr. Benton occupying his usual post as conductor.

A really valuable memento of the occasion has been brought out in the shape of a pamphlet, which, in addition to a specification identifying the maker of each particular stop in the organ, and a diagram and description of the instrument, contains a number of notices concerning the organ and organists, culled from the Parish Church records. Thus we are furnished with a fairly consecutive history from 1714, when, in the "Burial Register" (!), is an entry:—"August 29, ye first Sunday that ye organ play[d]." These entries are the raw material of the historian, and their very conciseness makes them the more suggestive. In 1770 we find a notice of an embryo musical festival, "for the benefit of Mr. Crompton, organist of the church," which occupied two consecutive days. On the first there was a performance of "'The Messiah,' a sacred Oratorio, by a band of upwards of seventy select performers," and, on the second, "Judas Macchabeus." "The choruses will be accompanied with Trumpets, French Horns, Kettledrums, Clarinetts, &c." The hardiness of our forefathers is indicated by the fact that the performances began "at ten o'clock in the forenoon." "Tickets at 3s., 2s., and 1s. each, to be had at the Old and New King's Arms, Talbot, Golden Lyon, White Horse in Boar Lane, &c.," is another interesting sign of the times. In 1795 there was evidently a lady blower, as the accounts show an entry: "Widow Metcalf, Bellows blowing, ½ year, £1 16s. 9d."

Another curious incident is the election of John Greenwood as organist in 1821. The appointment seems to have been in the hands of the Vestry, and the doubtful methods of a popular contested election brought into operation, for we read that the Vestry meeting was adjourned to the Cloth Hall Yard, while the polling shows that, for some reason or another, a widespread interest was taken in the event. The result was:—

Greenwood	2,608	votes.
Hopkinson	1,242	,,
Theaker	259	,,

The date of Dr. Wesley's appointment to Leeds is given as "1839," whereas Sir Herbert Oakeley, in Grove's

"Dictionary of Music," and Mr. F. G. Edwards, in the "Dictionary of National Biography," assign the event to 1842. The apparent discrepancy is probably to be accounted for by the fact that he did not actively assume the duties of his post at Leeds till some time after he had been appointed. When the organ in the newly-built Parish Church was formally "opened," on October 18, 1841, the organist was "Dr. S. S. Wesley, of Exeter," and the Leeds Intelligencer, in giving a preliminary announcement of the event, significantly adds, "The situation of organist is now vacant." It may be interesting, perhaps, to recall the fact that the programme at the opening consisted of selections from "Creation" and "The Messiah," interspersed with "Voluntaries," which included "one of his (Wesley's) own composition," and "J. S. Bach's celebrated Fugue in E flat major."

It was not until the following year, however, that Dr. Wesley came to reside in Leeds. The Leeds Intelligencer of January 1, 1842, announces his coming thus: "We have hitherto abstained from mentioning that S. S. Wesley, Esq., Mus. Doc., and now organist of the Cathedral of

HEINRICH EDMUND SCHULZE (1823—1878),
THE ORGAN BUILDER, SON OF J. F. SCHULZE.

Exeter, had accepted the situation of organist and composer of this splendid church, and intends mostly to reside in this town; but all necessary arrangements having been now satisfactorily completed, we have great pleasure in announcing that Dr. Wesley will immediately commence his official duties." From the wording of this paragraph, it is evident that the "arrangement" had been made for some time before this date, so that possibly there may be correctly assigned to it even so early a date as 1839, which has the authority of the Parish Church records, as well as that of the late Mr. Walker Joy, a Leeds amateur, who was closely connected with the music at the Parish Church. No doubt the long interval between the so-called appointment of Dr. Wesley and his actually beginning work at Leeds is to be accounted for by the fact that the Parish Church was, during this period, being rebuilt, and the parishioners worshipping at the daughter church of St. John the Evangelist. According to the Chapter Records of Exeter Cathedral, Dr. Wesley did not resign his position there till November, 1841; so, unless we are to understand that he held both appointments at the same time, the "arrangement" with the Parish Church authorities must have been merely an informal understanding, which did not come into operation as a definite engagement until he actually left Exeter.

In one important matter one may perhaps trace Dr. Wesley's influence. In 1840, the year after his "appointment," an agreement was made with Messrs. Greenwood, organ builders, to alter the pitch to "the Philharmonic of Sir George Smart's Fork." Before then it would seem to have been something like a semitone lower, for the builders were instructed "to replace the whole of the pipes of the Great and Choir organs and Swells half a tone upwards." Sir George Smart's pitch we know to have been A = 433·2, so that the present reversion to a lower pitch brings the instrument once more into touch with orchestral players, or at least with those who have adopted the normal diapason, A = 439·0.

Not the least pleasant feature of the Leeds Parish Church history is that there have never been wanting amateurs who have rendered very material assistance to its music. During an interregnum in 1809 we find a Mr. Cawood acted as organist, to whom a pair of silver cups were presented "as a compliment to him for his services." In more recent times the late Mr. Walker Joy spent much trouble and money on the instrument, and now, in Mr. Henry C. Embleton, who is with great appropriateness the hon. treasurer of the choir, the Parish Church has an amateur who not only serves as a most efficient and willing deputy-organist, but who spends both time and money freely upon the music of the church. It is to Mr. Embleton that we are indebted for permission to reproduce the view of the organ and the portrait of Schulze from the interesting pamphlet above referred to.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT SCARBOROUGH.

The fifteenth annual Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians was held, from the 2nd to the 5th ult., at the Grand Hotel, Scarborough, where the meeting of 1894 also took place.

After the Mayor (Councillor Henry Darley) had welcomed the members on their opening day (the 2nd ult.), Mr. Edward Chadfield, the Secretary of the Society, read the annual report, which stated that the position of the Society was "generally satisfactory," and that £500 had been added to the reserve fund during 1899. The confidence of the public in the examinations of the Society was shown in the number of candidates—between 6,000 and 7,000—who had presented themselves for examination. The registration of teachers, one of the most prominent objects which the Society has always had in view, was next referred to, with the important announcement that a scheme had been prepared by the Committee with this end in view. This scheme would be presented to the General Council, and, if approved, would then be made public.

In the unavoidable absence of Sir Frederick Bridge (the official chairman of the meeting), owing to his Royal Choral Society duties in London, Mr. W. H. Cummings presided. The chairman referred to the question of the registration of teachers of music, which the Secondary Education Bill of the Government would secure. This was a bill which they all hoped would pass, but great obstacles had to be overcome. Of the general work of the Society it was only necessary for him to say that it was satisfactory for the members to reflect that their efforts to improve themselves were really having a great effect outside the profession.

"TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE."

Mr. W. Macdonald Smith followed with a paper on "Touch and Technique," in relation to his system of training the muscles specially required in pianoforte playing. He insisted upon the fact that muscular command alone could assure good tone, while bad tone was due to weak muscles. He had simply made the discovery that with the development of muscle, independence of finger was secured. This fact the lecturer practically demonstrated, and he then proceeded to emphasise the point that while scale playing was not everything, we were accustomed to think it depended upon equal strength of fingers. It was not so, he maintained, for it was impossible to make the weaker fingers as strong as the stronger ones. But he could do something to make the weak ones strong, while the strong ones could take care of themselves.

"WOMAN AS A MUSICIAN."

Dr. H. A. Harding (Bedford) contributed a paper at the afternoon sitting on "Woman as a Musician"—a subject, by the way, which was ably treated by Mr. Stephen S. Stratton in an essay, entitled "Woman in relation to musical art," which he read before the Musical Association on May 7, 1883. Dr. Harding began his survey with four centuries ago, explaining that despite what learned men might say about Japanese and Greek music, music was not an independent art until the fourteenth century. His initial reference to the fair sex was "woman as a singer," in the course of which he interpolated the remark that he was not sure that woman was impregnable in the world of song, while he added that he "understood" prime donne were "a little trying at times." The fact was that their (the ladies') knowledge was not equal to their great natural gifts, and many humble members of the orchestra which accompanied them were much better musicians than the prime donne themselves. Dealing with songs for women, he instanced one wherein the word "love" occurred twelve times in eight bars! Every child, he contended, should be taught to sing, and faulty voice production should be promptly checked. Now-a-days in large classes girls were told to "sing up," which often enough ruined their voices and completely destroyed those charming high notes which children possessed. After quoting Lord Chesterfield's remark to his son, that "he would rather see him with a pipe in his mouth than with a fiddle under his chin," Dr. Harding adverted to the enormous increase of female musical executants, and especially violinists, which, he added, would perhaps induce composers to return to the symphonic form of Beethoven's time. "We are told that there are women novelists, women artists, and so on," said the lecturer; "why not women composers?" "I say, emphatically, that there are women composers; they do actually exist." He definitely stated their number to be 489; but no woman, he added, had ever taken a high position as a composer, although they had done so in literature and the sister arts. They were splendid executants; why had they not the genius to compose? One authority declared that woman's strength of body would hardly endure necessary strains of brain and nerve power to compose. He took strong exception to the objectionable use of the words "feminine" and "femininity," as applied to composers and to music; and after alluding to the alleged femininity of Schubert, he expressed the devout hope that if Schubert really was feminine, women would imitate him. Women as musicians had been prevented from coming to maturity for want of training and development. Although there had not hitherto been a great composer found in the ranks of women, in these days, when woman was advancing so rapidly, there was no reason why she should not take a high place in the ranks of composers.

During the discussion which followed the reading of the paper Sir Frederick Bridge arrived. In winding up the business of the meeting, he expressed the opinion that Oxford and Cambridge should allow women to become graduates in music.

Mr. F. H. Cowen, the president of the second day, opened the proceedings with an address on "The Training of Conductors and Accompanists," of which we print a full and authorised report in another column.

"PITCH: PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE."

Mr. W. H. Cummings, the chairman on Thursday (the third day of the Conference), contributed an essay on "Pitch: past, present, and future." Mr. Cummings started by correcting the mistaken impression that the pitch was originally very low and had gradually grown higher and higher. He reviewed the actual state of affairs existent at the time of Purcell and subsequently. In Purcell's time there were two pitches, one for the church and one for the chamber. On the Continent, too, there were two pitches; and he instanced an organ tuned a third of a tone above chamber pitch, and a stop was added a third lower than the others whereby it was possible to use the organ with orchestral instruments. Coming to the present time, Mr. Cummings said that on the Continent one pitch prevailed, which was approximately what we called the Diapason Normal. Throughout the United States the low pitch was generally adopted; but in Canada they still clung to the high Philharmonic old pitch. In June, 1896, he submitted to the Philharmonic Society a proposition to abandon the high pitch, and to adopt the Diapason Normal. It was favourably received. He was then authorised to go into the various bearings of the question with that eminent authority on acoustics, Mr. A. J. Hipkins. As a result the recommendation was made to the Philharmonic Society that a pitch of A 439, in a temperature of 68 deg. Fah., be adopted, and this was substantially agreed to. The directors approved the recommendation, and the action of the Philharmonic in 1896 had met generally with warm support from practical musicians. Mr. Cummings concluded his paper with a reference to the difficulty which attended the adoption of tuning pianofortes and organs by equal temperament, an idea first suggested in England by James Broadwood in 1811, and not adopted for pianofortes until 1844. If such had been the history of temperament we need have no fear that the fight over the question of pitch will terminate in an equally satisfactory manner.

In the discussion which followed Professor Prout said that Bach wrote his separate organ parts transposed a tone lower than the orchestral score, in order to enable the two to combine. Sir Frederick Bridge and Mr. F. H. Cowen, though they were previously high pitchites, both cried low—in other words, they acknowledged their conversion to the Diapason Normal; and finally a resolution was unanimously adopted, requesting the General Council to consider the matter, and take such steps to promote a universal low pitch as were possible.

"BROAD-MINDEDNESS IN MUSIC."

Mr. Henry Newboult (Bradford) read a paper at the afternoon sitting on "Broad-Mindedness in Matters Musical," in which he dealt mainly with the attitude which practical musicians ought to adopt towards music. He pointed out what would be gained if there was more breadth of sympathy, more liberalism of thought and feeling, greater absence of prejudice towards music, without reference to the composer, his particular school, or age. Mr. Newboult deprecated ardent partisanship where it led to depreciating one great musician because another was more greatly admired. He warned them against the tendency towards narrow-mindedness amongst work-a-day musicians, and the singer's indifference to purely instrumental music. Another failing he adverted to was the proneness of musicians in the higher ranks to be interested in music in direct proportion to its complexity. They were too prone to regard simple and commonplace as synonymous terms, and to discard everything emotional in favour of the purely intellectual. He did not see why it was not possible to appreciate the works of Brahms as well as the operas of Sullivan. He claimed more unity in the search for the beautiful, in which they ought all to be engaged.

AN ORCHESTRAL CONCERT PROPOSAL.

At the concluding session on Friday, when Dr. Samuel Weekes (Plymouth) took the chair, an interesting proposal was made by Mr. F. H. Cowen—who, we believe, acted upon the initiative of Dr. Henry Hiles. Mr. Cowen said that he thought it would be an immense benefit if they could have a regular orchestral concert in connection with their annual Conference, at which the works of younger members of the Society, who were perhaps unable to otherwise obtain a hearing—and of composers not connected with the Society—should be performed. He thereupon moved that the Society should give during each annual Conference an orchestral concert, and should engage a professional orchestra for the presentation of new or untried works by members or non-members of the Society. Dr. Hiles, in a warm and sympathetic speech, seconded the motion, which was unanimously agreed to, amidst general acclamation.

The chief features of the evening concert given on the Wednesday of the Conference were a Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello, by Signor Esposito; a Pianoforte Trio in C, by Mr. F. W. Austin; Professor Prout's Sonata in D for pianoforte and viola; and Mr. John Dunn's masterly performance of the solo part of Tschäikowsky's Violin Concerto in D. The performance of Handel's "Alexander Balus" is separately noticed (p. 115).

The lighter side of the Conference—features of no inconsiderable importance at these annual gatherings—included sundry excursions, impromptu concerts, and the inevitable banquet, at which Sir Frederick Bridge presided. The Conference of 1901 is to be held at Llandudno, beginning on the first day of the New Century.

TRADITIONAL SONGS OF THE IROQUOIS INDIANS.

An interesting paper by Mr. A. T. Cringan, of Toronto, was read at the Imperial Institute, on the 22nd ult., by Mr. J. Spencer Curwen, on the "Traditional Songs of the Iroquois Indians." The chair was taken by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland.

The paper began by emphasising the fact that the Indians were the oldest race on the American continent; but their songs were only traditional, they had no musical notation whatever. The music of the Iroquois who had embraced Christianity had been influenced by the hymns of the missionaries. It is not surprising, therefore, that Mr. Cringan had preferred to go for his inquiries to the pagan Iroquois as the pure and primitive source of native melody. The investigations, which had been undertaken at the request of the Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education for Ontario, had been difficult owing to the way in which the singers slide from note to note, the way in which they use the tremolo, their perplexing tonality, and the whoop and grunt with which their songs close. An Indian named Kanishandon was the gentleman selected by his tribe to be the exponent of their native songs, he being held in high esteem as an ideal interpreter of their ditties. The pentatonic scale was largely, but not exclusively used. The Iroquois had for instruments the drum, the flageolet, and the "Turtle," "Gourd," and "Horn" rattles.

Mr. Cringan, who is superintendent of the public schools of Toronto, wrote down the first set of melodies by listening to them as they had been sung by a noted master of ceremonies, but on his second visit to the Indian Reservation he took a graphophone with him and made the Indian sing into it.

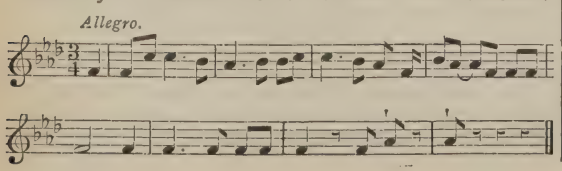
Mr. Semer Betts, in illustrating the lecture, sang a number of these difficult Indian melodies with praiseworthy skill and effect. Through the courtesy of Mr. Curwen we are enabled to give three characteristic specimens of these curious Indian songs in musical notation:—

PIGMY SONG.

In the Pigmy Song the evidences of modern influence are probably more marked than in any of the others. At the commencement the tonality is very uncertain, as it might, at first hearing, be assumed to be in G major. The C sharp, however, is merely an auxiliary note which is cancelled by the C natural in the third measure.

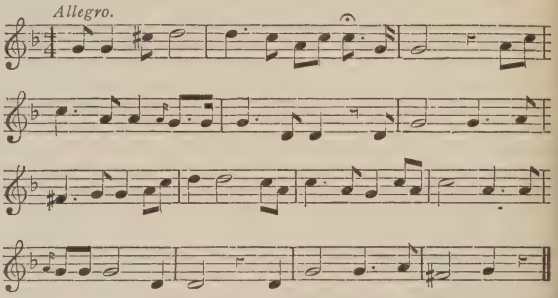
GREEN CORN DANCE SONG.

The Green Corn Dance Song is among the most ancient known to the Iroquois. It contains four notes only of the key of F minor. The syncopated rhythm in the fourth measure is a marked characteristic of Indian melodies, which may be observed in other numbers of the collection.



BEAR DANCE SONG.

The Bear Dance Song contains many interesting points, among which are the leap of an augmented fourth in the first measure and the introduction of the F sharp in the seventh measure with a repetition of the same phrase at the close. The latter clearly suggests the key of G minor, although the third of that scale is absent.



Mr. Fuller Maitland, at the close of the lecture, expressed his opinion that the primitive element was not prominent in the songs that had been sung, there being a notable absence of that monotonous rhythm which is so marked a feature of the earliest folk-tunes. He could trace very strongly the ecclesiastical, or old mode element in the melodies, two of them being distinctly suggestive of the Lydian mode. He also noticed that one of the songs had a strong likeness to a French romance of the eighteenth century. Thus he showed that outside or foreign influences undoubtedly left their impressions even in the folk-music of the Iroquois Indians.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Cringan, and to Mr. Curwen, the reader of his interesting paper, concluded the proceedings.

TONIC SOL-FA ASSOCIATION.

NEW YEAR CONVENTION.

This Association (which is an organisation independent of the Tonic Sol-fa College) held a New Year Convention in the Hall at 186, Aldersgate Street, on the 13th ult.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. Maskell Hardy read a paper on "The Teaching of Voice Production in the Elementary School." The address was mainly a practical one, and was intended to help school teachers to handle this difficult subject in their ordinary school singing lesson. To this worthy end a class of school children was present to illustrate Mr. Hardy's remarks. In the discussion that followed, Dr. Cathcart, Dr. McNaught, Mr. George Thorp, and Mr. W. Harding Bonner spoke.

Later on, Dr. Henry Coward, of Sheffield, who made himself famous as the choir-trainer of the 1899 Sheffield Musical Festival, was accorded a special reception. Mr. Curwen presided over the gathering, which overflowed the accommodation. In the course of a long and interesting speech, which was delivered in characteristic style, Dr. Coward gave an account of the formation of the Sheffield Festival Chorus. He stated that the 700 candidates who offered themselves were tested by seven judges, who were screened. Many sang to sol-fa syllables from either notation, and many to laa. Throughout the rehearsals and at the performances, tonic sol-fa copies were freely used, except in the case of "Samson and Delilah," which was not issued in that notation. Seven works were performed and forty-nine rehearsals were held. The ease with which the sol-faists mastered the music had very much impressed other members of the chorus, not a few of whom were now learning tonic sol-fa. But Dr. Coward preferred a chorus of staff notationists, who were not dependent on sol-faing, combined with sol-faists; because there were corners where key was uncertain and intervals had to be calculated, and at this sort of thing sol-faists were not so sure as some staff readers. The professor of the future should be a dual notationist. He considered that the tonic sol-fa movement was now too much on the defensive. In every branch of music tonic sol-fa comes in, but it is not the Alpha and Omega of the art.

At the evening meeting Mr. L. C. Venables gave a highly interesting lecture on "The Teaching of Time in both Notations." Every point discussed was made perfectly plain to the audience by the exhibition on a large screen of a number of magic lantern slides. Mr. Venables very properly denounced the absurd way in which time is supposed to be taught by making pupils study a comprehensive diagram of symbols—as though mere symbols were things. He read extracts from quite modern "primers," from which it was obvious that this idea had permeated the minds of their authors. In one book, accent was not explained in any form until quite late in the course, and then was referred to indirectly! Methods of counting, or otherwise realising rhythm, were described. Mr. Venables expressed his belief in the utility of the French time names, which were sometimes ridiculed by persons who evidently did not understand them. Dr. Creser, who was to have presided, was unable to attend, and the chair was taken by Dr. Warriner.

After the lecture, Dr. Coward turned the audience into a choir, and gave a practical illustration of his method of rehearsing a part-song, the piece chosen being "The river floweth," by Dr. Roland Rogers. During the evening the proceedings were greatly enlivened by the excellent singing of Miss Nellie Coward (daughter of Dr. Coward), who is a student of the Royal Academy of Music.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

OPENING OF THE NEW ORGAN.

The "old place"—as past students affectionately call their alma mater in Tenterden Street—has just been provided with a new three-manual organ by Messrs. Henry Willis and Sons. The present writer—one of a few students who "opened" the superseded instrument in 1876—can go back to the time when there was no organ at the Academy! Then the students were obliged to go to Dr. Steggall's private house to receive their lessons, and much "picking up" was possible under those pleasant conditions of the old Academy days. Now the Institution has an instrument worthy of its history and position as our oldest music-school. The following is the specification of the new organ erected in the concert-room by "Father" Willis, whose craftsmanship is known and read of all men:—

Great (9 stops).

Double Diapason ..	16 feet	Harmonic flute ..	4 feet
Open Diapason (No. 1)	8 ,,	Super octave	2 ,,
Open Diapason (No. 2)	8 ,,	Sesquialtera	3 ranks

Swell octave.	Swell pistons to ditto.
Choir to great.	Choir pistons to ditto.
Choir to pedals.
Great to pedals.

Manual compass, C to C. Pedal compass, C to G. 4 pistons, in the key slips, to each keyboard, in addition to 4 composition pedals. Tubular pneumatic action throughout. The organ is blown by a hydraulic engine.

An interesting programme was provided for the formal opening of the new organ on the 25th ult. Four of the organ professors of the Academy—Mr. W. Stevenson Hoyte, Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, Mr. H. W. Richards, and Mr. Henry R. Rose—were responsible for the organ solos which admirably served to demonstrate the capabilities of the performers and to display the resources of the instrument. Pleasant variety was afforded by two violin solos, which were skilfully rendered by Miss Edith Byford; two songs by Liszt, contributed by Mr. William R. Maxwell, and Verdi's unaccompanied and difficult quartet, "Lauda alla virgine," finely sung by Miss Ethel M. Wood, Miss K. Kelwyn Williams, Miss Edith M. Nutter, and Mrs. Franks, who also (with the exception of Miss Nutter) gave an expressive interpretation of two vocal trios by Elsie Horne (student), entitled "Nocturne" and "The sea hath its pearls." Mr. Alfred Amy was "at the pianoforte."

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The performance of "St. Paul," at the Albert Hall, on the 25th ult., the Feast of the Conversion, was in every way worthy the Society of which Sir F. Bridge is the able conductor. The rendering of the choral portions was marked by intelligence, as well as by executive efficiency. To the dramatic spirit of "Stone him to death" justice was done, and the full height of the noble choruses was throughout attained, exceptional regard for details of expression being manifested in "Happy and blest." Misses Esther Palliser and Emily Foxcroft carefully sang the soprano and contralto solos respectively. Mr. Watkin Mills was admirable in the music of the Apostle, and Mr. Gregory Hast made a favourable impression in the tenor airs and recitatives. Messrs. Ivor Foster and Harry Dearth also assisted. The orchestra was thoroughly satisfactory, and Mr. H. L. Balfour did excellent service at the organ.

MR. E. F. JACQUES'S LECTURES.

The first four Royal Academy of Music Lectures of the year were delivered by Mr. E. F. Jacques. He chose for his subject "The Music of the Middle Ages," and encompassed in his scope of view a period ranging from the epoch of St. Ambrose to that of Martin Luther. The first lecture, delivered on the 10th ult., was devoted to a study of the earliest music of the Christian Church, and of the pre-Christian artistic tendencies and technical developments that had influenced its tonality and rhythm. The earliest systems of musical notation were examined, and the services of modern investigators into this recondite branch of the art warmly recognised. Thanks to them, the lecturer said, we now possessed printed versions of the most beautiful melodies written during the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh centuries that might be relied upon as fairly representing their originals. These were to be found in the version of the Gradual, Vesperal, &c., published by the Benedictine Fathers at Solesmes and elsewhere. Though no copies of secular pieces of so early a period existed, we need not conclude that therefore no traces of secular music of the period had been preserved. It had always been the practice of the Church to appropriate to her own use everything likely to attract the faithful and bridge the gap between secular and sacred tendencies; and there could be no reasonable doubt that the Gradual and Antiphonarium had enshrined many a melodic phrase that owed its origin to secular sources.

At the second lecture, on the 17th ult., a number of sacred and secular melodies (sung by some of the Academy students) were brought forward to illustrate the state of music from the seventh to the tenth centuries. An account of the musical habits of those who constituted the "composers" of that epoch, and a sketch of the development of the organ (as representing the earliest form of a "keyboard" instrument) were given. The third lecture was mainly devoted to an exposition of the "Evolution of Polyphony" on the lines of the lecturer's articles on that subject which appeared in The Musical Times for August and September, 1895. The earliest examples of harmony were given and the progress of part-writing traced to the fourteenth century.

HANDEL'S "ALEXANDER BALUS."

"Handel, as she is wrote," has probably never in our time, or indeed in this century, been so closely approached as in the highly interesting performance which was, as it were, the top-stone of the recent Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and brought the proceedings to a most satisfactory close on the evening of the 5th ult. Recent attempts to give us Handel pure and simple have been hindered by the different conditions that now obtain, but this occasion was an ideal one for a revival of Handelian methods. The comparatively small room in the Grand Hotel at Scarborough allowed of a reversion to the curious proportions between chorus and orchestra that Handel maintained, whether from choice or necessity, in the Foundling Hospital performances, which afford us our most exact criterion of the forces he had at his disposal, and these evidently had been taken as a guide by Dr. A. H. Mann, the indefatigable enthusiast who organised and conducted the present performance.

It is worth while to put on record, with some exactness of detail, the composition of band and chorus. The latter consisted of twenty-four voices, six to each part, while the orchestra numbered thirty-seven: ten violins, three violas, three violoncellos, two double-basses, two flutes, four oboes, four bassoons, two horns, two trumpets, kettle-drums, harp, and mandoline. Professor Prout was at the harpsichord, a fine Tschudi, made 110 years ago, and now belonging to Tschudi's successors, Messrs. Broadwood. The organist was another Handelian expert, Mr. W. H. Cummings, who played on one of Messrs. Casson's small instruments, whose pleasant "churchy" tone blended well in the ensemble. Unfortunately it was half a note above the harpsichord in pitch, which obliged Professor Prout to transpose his part accordingly. The mention of harp and mandoline may excite some surprise, but Handel, who was willing to press into his service every instrument he could lay his hands on, has written obbligato parts for these instruments to a florid soprano air, "Hark, hark! He strikes the golden lyre." The harp part, it may be interesting to add, was not that which appears in the German Handel Society's edition, and is presumably taken from the autograph score at Buckingham Palace, but an entirely distinct one preserved in the large collection of Handelian MSS. at the Fitzwilliam Museum in Cambridge.

It will be seen that these forces are practically identical in numbers and proportion with those of the Foundling Hospital, where there were twenty-three in the chorus and thirty-four in the band (including the organ) at a performance in the year of Handel's death. Probably many who attended the Scarborough performance were, like the writer, curious, and a trifle sceptical as to the effect of such a combination. They must have been agreeably surprised, for the chorus held their own most satisfactorily. They were, to begin with, all picked voices and efficient musicians, but they had, in addition, the advantage of being placed in front of the orchestra on a platform that was all on one level, so that the orchestral tone was almost as effectually veiled as at Bayreuth. The result was that in distinctness they were better than an average oratorio chorus, being, as it were, in closer touch with their audience, while in power they sufficed amply.

The laurels certainly rested with the singers, for while the chorus was really excellent, singing with admirable spirit and precision, the seven soloists were all most efficient, and in some cases quite admirable. The greater credit belongs to Mrs. Midgley's singing of the florid and very exacting soprano part of Cleopatra, since she undertook it at short notice, as a substitute for the singer actually engaged. Mrs. Midgley has a voice of no great volume, but she uses it so discreetly, and, in a word, put so much "brains" into her singing, as to reduce any physical shortcomings to a minimum. The clever management of her breath in the long divisions illustrated her technical accomplishment, while her emotional power was strongly displayed in her final air, "Convey me to some peaceful shore," which proved to be capable of remarkably pathetic expression. The part of the hero is assigned to a contralto, and was sung with great intelligence and force by Miss Lilian Hovey, while Mr. Bantock Pierpoint's incisive method gave full effect to the part of Ptolemy, who is virtually the somewhat melodramatic villain of the piece. Minor parts were taken with uniform success by Miss K. van Noorden, Messrs. Branscombe, Gordon Heller, and A. H. Cross. The band lacked cohesion, being of the "scratch" order and adequate rehearsal impossible; but it sufficed to give some idea of the general effect as well as of many interesting and characteristic features of the score. The use of muted strings—it has been said for the first time—in the air, "Here amid the shady woods," is one of these; but the oratorio contains not a few interesting specimens of Handel's inclination to experiment in orchestral effects.

"Alexander Balus" is indeed a work that is musically remarkable for its freshness and vigour, and would no doubt be far better known did it not suffer from a libretto of unusual stupidity. The subject, selected from the pages of Josephus in order to please the Jews, who had helped in the previous year to make "Judas Maccabæus" a success, is uninteresting, and it is set forth by Dr. Morell in the most absurdly stilted language. It is what Scott called the "big bow-wow" style, handled with a minimum of skill. In these days we are not content with the axiom that "what is too silly to be said must be sung," but, in spite of the silliness of the "drama" of "Alexander Balus," its music has a vitality that would render an occasional performance a pleasant relief from the eternal change-ringing on two or three of Handel's many oratorios. Dr. Mann, who conducted with much point, deserves the thanks of musicians for placing before them so interesting and complete a picture of Handelian music and methods.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

Mr. Arthur Chappell resumed his popular afternoon concerts on the 6th ult., at St. James's Hall, and enlarged his repertory by the addition of César Franck's Sonata in A for pianoforte and violin, which was effectively interpreted by Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeberg and M. Johannes Wolff. The work is too well known to music-lovers to need description.

The re-appearance of Herr Mühlfeld, on the 13th ult., naturally led to the concert on that date and on the following Saturday being chiefly devoted to works which contained an important part for the clarinet. On the former occasion the programme was opened with Brahms's beautiful Quintet in B minor (Op. 115), and contained a real novelty in the shape of a Sonata in G for pianoforte and clarinet, by Herr Gustav Jenner. As this composer is not mentioned in the chief dictionaries of music, we may record that he is supposed to be a member of the same Gloucester family to which Dr. Jenner, of vaccination fame, belonged. But since the composer was born (1865) at Keitum, in Sylt, an island in the North Sea, it would probably be difficult to trace his connection with the English medical celebrity. More to musical purpose are the facts that he was for some little time a pupil of Brahms, and is now music-director at the University of Marburg and conductor of the Academic Concert Society there. The Sonata is devoid of originality, but it is well written and for the most part pleasing, the third movement in particular being dainty and refined in character. It is only necessary to add that the work was beautifully rendered by Miss Fanny Davies and Herr Mühlfeld.

The programme on the 20th ult. included Herr Rabl's Quartet in E flat for pianoforte, violin, clarinet, and violoncello—first performed in England at a concert given by Mr. G. A. Clinton on April 1, 1898—and Mozart's fascinating Clarinet Quintet in A. The vocalists at the concerts since Christmas were severally Mdlle. St. André, Mr. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Lawrence Rea.

MRS. NEWMARCH ON "THE DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL OPERA IN RUSSIA."

At the monthly meeting of the Musical Association, on the 10th ult., Mrs. Newmarch read a very interesting and instructive paper on "The Development of National Opera in Russia." The lecturer said that the Russians, naturally gifted with great musical capacities, had suffered for some centuries from the intolerance of the Byzantine clergy, who opposed every form of secular art. The primitive songs of the nation were saved by the Skomorokh, or gleemen, who fled before monkish persecution into the least civilised districts of Russia. Coming to a later period, Mrs. Newmarch spoke of the first performance of opera in Russia, in 1730, when an Italian company took part in the coronation festival of the Empress Anne. The earliest opera written by a Russian, to a Russian libretto, was Volkov's "Taniousha" (1756). Between 1737 and 1830 the growth of national music was very slow, because foreign influences were then paramount in Russian society. The French invasion of 1812 awoke the slumbering conscience of the nation, and a reaction set in in favour of all that was national. A number of clever amateurs began to make use of local colour in opera and song. Among these were Alabiev, Varlamov, and Verstovsky, who, after the success of his opera "Askold's Tomb," was hailed for a time as the true Messiah of Russian music. Glinka, however, must be considered the actual founder of the new Russian school.

The lecturer spoke at some length about Glinka's first opera, "A Life for the Tsar," a work which awoke intense enthusiasm in the Russian people, who had waited so long for an adequate expression of their musical temperament. Glinka went beyond the superficial view of nationality in art which sufficed his amateur predecessors. Having fortified himself by a course of theoretical studies under Dehn, he set himself to assimilate all the special characteristics of his native music. His opera was national in the truest sense of the word, because he addressed himself to the national life of the people for whom he wrote. Mrs. Newmarch went on to describe in detail Glinka's less known, but more mature, opera "Russlan and Lioudmilla." She pointed out that in this work the Oriental element plays an important part, and gave instances of melodies of Turkish, Persian, and Tatar origin.

Illustrations to the paper were given by Madame Rose Koenig and Miss Gwynneth Morgan. During the discussion which followed, the chairman (Dr. Charles Maclean) spoke of the paucity of information concerning Russian music, and advised all those interested in the subject to study the literary works of M. César Cui. Mrs. Newmarch called attention to the admirable articles by Mrs. Edmond Wodehouse upon Russian song, and also upon Dargomijsky in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians." Replying to Mr. W. Cobbett's remarks upon Rubinstein's work in connection with the Petersburg Conservatoire, Mrs. Newmarch pointed out that this institution could not be described as "the foster mother of the new Russian school," since—with the exception of Tschaïkowsky—none of the representative composers of Russia had received any academic training. In answer to a question of Mr. Southgate's, she said the ecclesiastical modes had undoubtedly influenced the folk-songs of Great Russia.

THE WORKINGTON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

This annual event was held at Workington (Cumberland) on the 1st and 2nd ult. As usual, the Festival took the form of a series of vocal and instrumental competitions and evening concerts.

In the Glee choir section the Workington Wesleyans, under Mr. T. Morgan, were victorious. The test piece was Pinsuti's "There is music by the river."

In the School choir section the Brunswick Board School (Penrith) choir, under Miss Lewens, came out first after a very pretty performance of the test piece, "Sleep, gentle lady" (Bishop).

In the Church and Chapel choir section the Seaton Wesleyans, under Mr. T. Dixon, gained the first place, and in the Male-voice choir section Seaton was again successful. The mere fact that there were competitions in solo singing, duet singing, violin, trombone, and cornet playing, and innumerable other branches of musical work, proves that the Festival is accomplishing great results in stirring up and stimulating musical study. Dr. Joseph Parry, of Cardiff, was the adjudicator, and he also took part in the conducting of the evening concerts, the programmes at which were miscellaneous. The solo singers were Madame Kate Bensberg, Madame Clara Samuell, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. James Leyland, and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Mr. Stanton Rees contributed violin solos. Mr. Ivander Griffiths, the originator of the scheme, was, as usual, the secretary. He must derive much satisfaction from the thought that his life-long labours have wrought so much good for music.

MENDELSSOHN'S "MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM" MUSIC.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree, in the revival, on the 10th ult., of Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," at Her Majesty's Theatre, deserves the thanks of all lovers of Mendelssohn for having devoted so much care to the performance in its entirety of this master's beautiful music. Exception may be taken to the setting of the exquisite lines "I know a bank," to the melody of Mendelssohn's "On wings of song" ("Auf Flügeln des Gesanges"), and certainly it was a mistake for Oberon to speak the words before singing them; moreover, it was distinctly destructive to the situation for Oberon to take part in the lullaby "You spotted snakes," which Shakespeare directs to be sung by the first and second fairies of Titania's followers. An excerpt from some of Mendelssohn's orchestral works would also have been a more artistic proceeding than the arrangement of the "Song without words" in C, No. 34, to serve as an interlude while the stage carpenters were busy preparing the fourth scene of the first act. But, take it for all in all, the music was so well played that it seems ungracious to point out these errors of judgment, particularly with regard to Oberon's misdoings, since Miss Neilson, who embodied this character with so much distinction, sings so well. Some repetitions and alterations, presumably attributable to Mr. Raymond Roze, the conductor, are also noteworthy and were justified by results, especially the repetition of the opening of the Clown's march and the fragments of the melody played while Bottom soliloquises over his "most rare vision."

WORCESTERSHIRE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

A most successful concert was given in the Public Hall, Worcester, on the afternoon of Thursday, December 21, the room being filled from end to end with a most influential and appreciative audience. The principal work performed was Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ," and, as usual at these music-makings, the composition was represented to the minutest detail desired by the composer. The principal vocalists were Madame Bertha Rossow, Mr. Gregory Hast, Mr. Douglas Powell, Mr. H. Large, Mr. Charles Knowles, and Mr. J. E. Healey. The chorus of the Society, which has greatly improved, acquitted themselves well. Specially noteworthy was their fine rendering of the concluding chorus, "Oh! my heart!" with its impressive unaccompanied "Amen." The orchestra, consisting mainly of amateur players, gave a rendering of the elaborate instrumentation that came as a revelation in the important matters of neatness and expression. Mr. Edward Elgar, as on previous occasions, proved himself a most able conductor, and to him not a little of the success attending the Society and its interesting concerts is due.

SIR HUBERT PARRY'S "JUDITH" AT SWANSEA.

An enthusiastic reception was accorded to Sir Hubert Parry when he appeared at the Albert Hall, Swansea, on the 18th ult., to conduct his oratorio "Judith." The work was performed by the Ebenezer Choral Society, whose conductor, Mr. J. D. Thomas, had prepared his choral forces so well that very few corrections were needed to be made by the composer at the final rehearsal. The choir sang indeed throughout with great impressiveness and excellently balanced tone. Miss Gertrude Drinkwater gave an admirable rendering of the soprano solos, Madame Belle Cole sang the part of the Queen sympathetically, and was associated with Masters D. J. Thomas and G. J. Hill in the scene with the two children; Mr. Lloyd Chandos aroused the enthusiasm of the audience by his singing of "God breaketh the battle," and Mr. David Hughes was consistently excellent in the bass solos. There was a complete and efficient orchestra led by Mr. W. F. Hulley, and Miss Maggie Jones deserves special commendation for her able and discreet use of the organ. Sir Hubert Parry, in reply to a vote of thanks, enthusiastically carried, said "that the honour was rather to him to come amongst people who had music so thoroughly at heart."

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

There has been a month of grand opera in New York, and Mr. Grau has had abundant opportunity to add to his experiences as manager. He has had no financial difficulty, but the illness of singers has made it troublesome to keep faith with the public, and after an incident which the newspapers made a subject of comment, Mr. Grau purchased peace at the expense of a rule which he had enforced for years and which he thought essential as a safeguard. Hitherto, the only circumstance under which he would refund money for a purchased ticket has been a change of bill. A warning to this effect is printed upon all his tickets. If "Carmen" was announced with Calvé, and "Carmen" was given with Miss de Lussan, Mr. Grau insisted that he had kept his contract, and that all that was left to the public was the privilege of relieving itself of its abundant indignation orally at the box office or in the newspapers. While on tour before the beginning of the Metropolitan season, however, he met a man who not only took a different view of his rights in the premises, but enforced his contention by a suit at law against the manager of the theatre in which the company played in Louisville, Kentucky. Hardly had the New York season begun before Mr. Grau found himself compelled to substitute Suzanne Strong for Madame Calvé, in "Faust." A public clamour arose which Mr. Grau met very philosophically; he maintained his old position until he could meet with the directors of his company, then published a statement of his position and frankly yielded it. Hereafter an important change in the cast of an opera will be recognised as entitling a ticket purchaser to a return of his money.

Except for this little flurry and the embarrassments caused by the illness of Madame Calvé, M. Van Dyck, and M. Saléza, the season is moving on smoothly enough. M. Alvarez has provided the critics with their chief topic. He had been proclaimed supremely great by Boston and the local writers were startled at his perverseness in wandering from the pitch. New York has its share of untuneful singing, but its writers are not disposed to condone in a Frenchman or Italian what they condemn in a German, but are inclined to look upon impure intonation as the unpardonable sin in music. The conventional list has not been departed from thus far, except to permit Madame Sembrich to revive "Don Pasquale," which has been absent from our stage for twenty years.

The country echoed throughout its length and breadth with "The Messiah" during the Christmastide. In New York the Oratorio Society gave two performances of the oratorio, as is its custom, and made enough money to keep itself alive for another year and prepare for the performance of Bach's B minor Mass in April. A mission like this has been fulfilled here by Handel's work for two generations at least. Without "The Messiah" it does not seem likely that any of our choral societies could remain in existence. There were also two performances in Boston by the Handel and Haydn Society, under its new conductor, Mr. Emil Mollenhauer, son and nephew of the Mollenhauer Brothers, well known German musicians who came to America with Jullien in the early fifties. In Worcester, Mass., the oratorio was given in a church under the direction of J. Vernon Butler, and there was no charge for admission, though a collection was taken while Handel's "Largo" was being played on the organ between the first and second parts.

The first performance in America of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," of which information has reached me, took place in St. Paul, on December 5. Curious interest attaches to this performance from the fact that it took place only half-an-hour's ride from the spot where the departing wedding guests left

> Hiawatha happy
> With the night and Minnehaha.

The concert was given by the Schubert Club, under the direction of Emil Ober Hoffer. The Musical Art Society, of New York, gave its first concert on December 21, and disappointed its best friends by devoting the greater part of the evening to a group of songs sung by Mr. Bispham and some choral pieces by local composers. The choir of the Society consists of fifty professional singers, all of whom are paid, and its avowed mission is the cultivation of a capella music of the kind that cannot be heard under ordinary conditions. This mission it disposed of at this concert by singing a Missa Brevis by Palestrina and Verdi's "Ave Maria." There were other numbers of course, but they were scarcely worthy of production under such circumstances—an arrangement of "Adeste, fideles," by Henry Holden Huss; two motets, with words of Mrs. Browning's, by Walter Damrosch; and two part-songs by Howard Brockway. Mr. Frank Damrosch is the conductor of the Society, which for five years has illustrated the highest achievement in choral music in America. Mr. Walter Damrosch's "Te Deum," written to celebrate Admiral Dewey's victory in Manilla Bay, will be sung again (it was given last season) by the Oratorio Society at a concert designed to raise money for the arch, with which the deeds of the American Navy are to be commemorated.

Mr. William Shakespeare is spending the month of January in the States, delivering lectures on singing, which he illustrates himself. He has been pleasantly received in a social way in New York, where he began his lectures on January 4.

Music has felt the beneficent influence of Mr. Andrew Carnegie's magnificent generosity and public spirit in several ways. To it New York and Pittsburgh owe their finest concert halls. The latter city has also been encouraged to organise and maintain a symphony orchestra, which is now under the direction of Mr. Victor Herbert, and will give two concerts in New York this season.

H. E. Krehbiel.

MR. HENSCHEL'S "STABAT MATER."

Mr. George Henschel's "Stabat Mater," for chorus, solo quartet, and orchestra, first produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1894, was performed, on the 18th ult., by the Breslau Singakademie, under the composer's direction, and in the presence of a highly appreciative audience. Forming part, as it did, of a programme which likewise included sacred compositions by Bach and other old masters, the modern work was subjected to a somewhat severe test, from which, however, it emerged in a manner most gratifying to its author. The Breslauer Zeitung, referring to the performance, says, inter alia:—"In the working-out of his various themes, Mr. Henschel has shown remarkable skill and much refinement of taste, his style is in no way imitative of that of any of the older masters who have set the same words, but is frequently characterised by distinct originality; an originality of a somewhat severe order, perhaps, but replete with independent musical thought, attractive to the connoisseur and calculated to strongly impress the general hearer." Equally favourable opinions of the work are expressed by the critic of the Breslau Morgen Zeitung. The performance was an excellent one, the solo vocalists being Mrs. Henschel, Frau Klosseck-Müller, Herr Dierich, and Professor Kühn. At its conclusion the composer was vociferously applauded and presented with a laurel wreath.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The annual performance of Handel's "Messiah" was given by the Festival Choral Society on Boxing Night. Mr. Charles Saunders was engaged for the tenor solos, but at the last moment a severe cold compelled him to give up, and Mr. S. Roper, a member of the Society, took his place. He did so well that he received quite an ovation. The other principals were Mesdames Emily Squire and Alice Lamb and Mr. A. H. Gee, the last-named making a very successful début here. No liberties were taken with the text, and for once Handel's music was heard as written. The chorus sang magnificently throughout. There was an excellent orchestra, Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ, and Dr. Heap conducted.

The same evening Mr. J. W. Turner commenced a six weeks' season of opera at the Grand Theatre. In the first fortnight only the stock pieces were performed, but on the 13th ult. Balfe's "Satanella" was revived. The performance was most successful and attracted a large audience. Miss Chrystal Duncan took the title-part and Mr. Turner appeared as Count Rupert.

At the Oratory, Edgbaston, the first of three lecture-concerts was given on the 3rd ult. The programme was devoted to chamber music, with Herr Theodor Werner as violinist, and Mr. W. Sewell (organist at the Oratory) as pianist. Among the pieces given was the Septet for pianoforte, trumpet, and strings, by Saint-Saëns. On the 8th ult., after the lecture, Herr Werner gave a historical violin recital. The third function was a chamber concert, given at the Edgbaston Assembly Rooms, on the 20th. The artists were Madame Amina Goodwin, Herr Werner, and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse, with Mr. W. Sewell as accompanist. The programme included Beethoven's Trio (Op. 97) and Rubinstein's Op. 52.

On the 16th ult. Mr. Halford resumed his orchestral concerts in the Town Hall. The programme comprised Schumann's Symphony, No. 2, in C (Op. 61), the Preludes to Acts II. and III. of "Manfred," by Sir A. C. Mackenzie (first time here), and Wagner's Prelude to Act III., "Lohengrin." The whole was finely rendered, and Mackenzie's compositions were most interesting. Signor Ronchini appeared here for the first time, and gave an admirable reading of the solo part in Hans Sitts's Violoncello Concerto (Op. 34), an excellent composition; he also played some short solo pieces.

The well known harpist, Mr. Aptommas, gave recitals in the Committee-room of the Town Hall, on the 18th and 19th ult. He was assisted by his wife in several harp duets.

Patriotic concerts are the order of the day. The Birmingham Choral Union held one in the Town Hall, on the 20th ult., when a popular programme was prepared, including a selection from "Judas Maccabæus." In the Masonic Hall an Ashdown Ballad concert was given on the 23rd ult.; and on the 25th the Meister Glee Singers held forth in the Town Hall.

On the 15th ult. Mr. W. H. Hadow gave a lecture, at the Midland Institute, on "Expression and description in music." The lecture was illustrated by selections from the great masters, played upon the pianoforte by Mr. Hadow. The interesting and instructive discourse was much appreciated by the large audience.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

ST. GABRIEL'S Choral Society, numbering fifty-two members, which was formed in a populous district of East Bristol in September last, gave a concert at St. Gabriel's School, on the 9th ult. There was an orchestra of amateurs, with Miss Bartholomew at the pianoforte. Mr. G. B. Smart conducted. Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day," which was fairly rendered, constituted the first part of the concert, the soloist being Miss Marion Harris.

The ladies' night of the Bristol Madrigal Society was held at the Victoria Rooms on the 11th ult. There was a large attendance, the Lord Mayor and High Sheriff being present. On this occasion, for the first time, Mr. E. A. Harvey took his seat as president, and the secretarial duties, which were formerly undertaken by him, are now discharged by Mr. W. Roberts. Mr. D. W. Rootham was conductor. With the exception of Mr. Abraham Thomas (bass), from Gloucester Cathedral, the singers were all local residents. The committee, on account of the war in the Transvaal, had, in arranging the programme, chosen four compositions martial in character—viz., Striggio's "No din of rolling drum," Weelkes's "Like two proud armies," Gastoldi's "Soldiers, brave and gallant be," and Mendelssohn's "Victor's return." These were all familiar to the choir, and they received expressive interpretation. A novelty was presented in Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's setting of Sir Walter Scott's lines "Waken, lords and ladies gay." The composer-organist of Gloucester Cathedral was present, and experienced the gratification of listening to a spirited rendering of his clever production. Two part-songs dedicated to the Society were given publicly for the first time. They were from the pen of Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, son of the conductor, organist and choirmaster of Christ Church, Hampstead, in succession to Dr. Walford Davies, now organist of the Temple Church. Mr. Rootham set Matthew Arnold's poem "Strew on her roses" and Arthur Grey Butler's "In the days when earth was young." They are effective compositions, and the latter was redemanded by the audience.

A violin and organ recital was given, on the 22nd ult., at St. Mary's Church, Tyndall's Park, the executants being Mr. F. S. Gardner (violin) and Mr. F. W. Rootham (organ). This was the first of a series of recitals to be given in the church.

The members of St. Mary's Church Choral Society have resumed their weekly practices, under the direction of Mr. F. W. Rootham. In addition to "The Golden Legend," Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," which has not yet been given in Bristol, has been put in rehearsal for the approaching concert of the Society

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Governors of the Royal Irish Academy of Music have just made a new appointment. M. Henri Verbrugghen, late pupil of Ysaye, and diplomé of the Brussels Conservatoire, has come to undertake the classes formerly taught by Signor Papini. On Friday, the 12th ult., M. Verbrugghen gave a violin recital by invitation of the Academy authorities, when he was heartily greeted as a welcome addition to Dublin's musical resources.

The entries of the Feis Ceoil for the composers' competitions closed on the 1st ult. The number of compositions received was eighty-six altogether for all the prizes. No fewer than four cantatas for full orchestra, soli, and chorus were received, six compositions for full orchestra, and three string quartets. This argues a considerable amount of activity in the higher branches of the art, and is a very fair proportion. Sir Frederick Bridge is the adjudicator on this occasion, and the awards are eagerly looked for. Belfast is to be the locus operandi of the Festival this year, and great efforts are being made to eclipse any of the former meetings. The most important thing to note in the new syllabus is the increased artistic standard required by the choral competitions. Motets by Palestrina, Vittoria, Roland de Lassus, or Luca Marenzio are to be sung in every competition, all of which are for unaccompanied choirs. The beautiful sixteenth century madrigals and motets, than which no better test can be given, are heard too seldom, and lovers of pure vocal music are eagerly looking forward to the works to be sung by the Feis choirs this year in Belfast.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

IT was a kind and considerate act on the part of the Dean to ask Dr. Bunnett to give two recitals upon the new Cathedral organ, for was not the worthy doctor associated with the old instrument for many years in his younger days? The event took place on the afternoon and evening of the 17th ult., and on both occasions large congregations were drawn together to enjoy Dr. Bunnett's skilful and masterly manipulation. The afternoon programme was as follows:

Fantasia in E flat major	W. Faulkes.
Pastorale in A major	E. T. Chipp.
Andante in D	Bunnett.
Concerto in B flat (No. 2)	Handel.
Toccata in G	Dubois.
Andante Pastorale ("Light of the World")	Sullivan.
Grand Chœur in D	Deshayes.

The evening programme comprised the following numbers:

Overture, "Samson"	Handel.
Adagio in E flat	Mozart.
Offertoire in G	Batiste.
"Ave Maria"	Bunnett.
Prelude and Fugue in A minor	Bach.
Prière in F	Guilmant.
Allegro in G	Dupuis.
Schiller-March	Meyerbeer.

Handel's "How excellent" and Bunnett's "I was glad when they said unto me" being sung as anthems by the Cathedral choir with outside assistance. Bach's Fugue was a grand piece of playing, fully developing the powers of the organ, leaving no doubt as to the brilliant success of Messrs. Norman and Beard's latest specimen of organ building.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Norwich Musical Festival, held on the 13th ult., Lord Cranworth in the chair, the following balance-sheet of the last Festival was presented:—

Receipts: Tickets, £4,933 5s. 7d.; rehearsals, £178 10s. 6d.; stewards, £34 13s.; books, &c., £236 17s. 4d.; donations, £14 14s. 11d.—total, £5,398 1s. 4d.

Payments: Due to bankers, £80 10s. 5d.; books of words, &c., £237 12s. 5d.; conductor, £157 10s.; musical composers, £92 0s. 9d.; principal vocal performers, £1,420 17s.; instrumental band, £1,060 15s.; chorus, £419 19s. 2d.; choral practice and rehearsals, £157 9s. 4d.; music and orchestra expenses, £238; fitting and lighting St. Andrew's Hall, £402 13s. 4d.; doorkeepers and carriage attendants, £31; printing and stationery, £173 6s. 9d.; advertising, £88 5s. 3d.; contingent expenses, £438 1s. 11d.—£4,998 1s. 4d.; balance, £400—total, £5,398 1s. 4d."

During the meeting it was stated that the gross receipts exceeded those of any previous Festival for a period of thirty-three years, and which had only once been exceeded in fifty-five years. Votes of thanks were passed to all those gentlemen who had taken a prominent part in helping to secure so successful a series of performances. Of the £400 profit, £200 was appropriated to local charities, the remainder being carried forward.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

Just too late in December last to be noticed in this monthly chronicle, the Choral Union gave a performance of Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," in the McEwan Hall, under Mr. Collinson's baton. Interest in the beautiful work attracted a very large audience, who awarded unstinted applause to the choir and its capable conductor. The intonation of the tenors was not always above reproach, but, on the whole, the chorus deserved all the praise so freely given. The second part of the concert was devoted to Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "Cameronian's Dream."

Messrs. Paterson's orchestral concerts are better attended this season than ever. The Scottish Orchestra has settled down to steadier and better work, and the accompaniments to the "Stabat Mater" and Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto (No. 2) were as carefully and successfully played as were Symphonies by Goetz (in F), Beethoven (No. 1), and Dvorák ("New World"). The soloists at the concerts mentioned were Mr. Frederick Dawson (who was very well received for his excellent performances), on the 8th ult., and Madame Marchesi (whose songs were enthusiastically applauded), on the 13th ult.

A crowded audience assembled in the McEwan Hall, on the 22nd ult., to hear Rheinberger's "Christoforus" and the Ninth Symphony, given at Messrs. Patterson's concert by Mr. Kirkhope's Choir and the Scottish Orchestra. This splendid choir was in its best form in its rendering of the "Ode to Joy." The long high notes, the terror of choirs and conductors, were easily and successfully vanquished. The instrumental movements suffered from an ineffective disposition of the band and a very pointless reading of this noble composition. In "Christoforus" the singers seized the numerous opportunities which the rich and beautiful score offers to show all the qualities that have won for them their enviable reputation. Mr. Kirkhope conducted "Christoforus" and Mr. Bruch the Symphony.

Mr. Denhof's second chamber concert, in the Music Hall, also on the 13th ult., was well attended. The chief attraction was Miss Clara Butt, but excellent artistic work was done by the concert-giver, with whom was associated M. Johannes Wolff and Herr Bramsen in trios by Dvorák ("Dumky") and Mendelssohn (in C minor).

On New Year's Day the Choral Union gave the annual performance of "The Messiah." Never has the chorus shown to better advantage; the massive choruses were splendidly given, and the florid passages taken with a precision and ease which left nothing to be desired.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On December 23 the lady pupils of Glasgow Athenæum sang Cowen's "Daughter of the Sea" and other pieces at their annual concert.

The Classical Orchestral concerts have been fairly well attended. Mr. Bruch has given more or less satisfying renderings of Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, Beethoven's No. 4 and No. 8, Mozart's "Jupiter," and Goetz's Symphony in F (Op. 9), a particularly interesting revival, which was well received; also Mackenzie's Prelude to Act II. of "Manfred." The only soloists of note who have appeared are Mr. Frederick Dawson (always welcome here), who played Brahms's Second Concerto; M. Siloti, who played the Schubert-Liszt "Wanderer" Fantasie, and Madame Blanche Marchesi.

At the second concert of the Helensburgh Subscription series, the Brodsky String Quartet played Schumann's Quartet, Op. 41, No. 3, and Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 6, and Miss Nedda Morrison sang.

At the annual Guards' concert, Madame Albani and Mr. Edward Lloyd sang.

The death is announced of one of the most notable of Scottish musicians, Mr. J. Roy Fraser, teacher and organist, Paisley, who, by means of great open-air concerts on the Braes of Gleniffer, raised funds sufficient to erect statues of Tannahill and Burns in the town.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

At the Philharmonic Society's concert, on the 9th ult., the most interesting feature was Schumann's Symphony in D minor (No. 4). In Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor the solo part was played with admirable sympathy and expression by Mr. Leonard Borwick. Much interest was added to this concert by fine renderings of Smart's part-song, "Dream, baby, dream," and Cooke's "Hark! the lark." On the 17th ult. the Società Armonica's 119th concert, under the direction of Mr. Vasco Akeroyd, was a great success. The orchestra proved reasonably equal to Beethoven's A major Symphony, and further exhibited skilful efficiency in Dvorák's Suite in D (Op. 39). Mr. Akeroyd, who has worked hard and with excellent results to bring the orchestra of this old Society up to a reliable standard of efficiency, played the solo part in Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor. On December 28 an Eisteddfod choral competition between the Dwyrwd Male-Voice Choir, of Talsarnau, and the Manchester Prize Glee Society resulted in the former winning an award of £20 and a gold medal.

Gounod's "Redemption" was admirably performed by the Sunday Society, in St. George's Hall, on the 14th ult., under the skilful direction of Mr. W. I. Argent. The principal vocalists were Miss Ada Standen, Mr. Ben Roberts, Mr. Arthur Weber, and Mr. Hargreaves Hudson. Dr. Peace rendered excellent service at the organ.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

After a fortnight's silence, it was pleasant again to listen to the Hallé Orchestra, albeit its performance on the 11th ult., even in so well known a work as Mozart's G minor Symphony, was by no means so finished as we have been accustomed to during the last three years. It must be confessed that the interest excited by the "Hiawatha" scenes of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor was not increased by his Orchestral Ballad in A minor. In the other novelty of the programme—Dr. Stanford's concert-variations upon the jovial old air "Down among the dead men"—there are passages so charming that one is reluctant to own that the whole work is rendered somewhat disappointing by the attempt to make the most of isolated sections of the text, instead of endeavouring to grasp the general idea of the whole theme with its irresistible jollity and genuine English character. The pianoforte part—although admirably played by Mr. Leonard Borwick, an especial favourite here—was felt to be a constant interference with such continuity of orchestral development as might have been consistently carried out with far greater effect. Miss Ethel Wood was one of the original students in our College of Music, and we note with delight her growing success in London and elsewhere. Gifted with a voice of considerable charm, a perfectly steady intonation, and with evident musical insight, it would be quite worth her while to acquire such greater freedom in the control of her breath as would enable her to render most valuable service in the concert-room and especially in oratorio.

At the meeting of the 18th ult., besides Sir Hubert Parry's Orchestral Variations, originally given here in 1898, there were two works quite fresh to our ears. Glazounow's Symphony in B flat (Op. 55) is decidedly interesting, bold, and fresh; and only in the last movement degenerating into that blatant uproar to which Russian writers seem prone. The "Sea Pictures" of Edward Elgar were presented by the orchestra under the guidance of the composer, with Miss Clara Butt as the Narrator. As when listening to many of the bright fancies of an artist now attracting great attention, one could not help wondering whether the young author would not feel greater freedom in a purely orchestral work, wherein his imagination could take a wider range and his ideas be not merely sketched, but fully worked out. Miss Ilona Eibenschutz played Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto and several of the Brahms Waltzes.

We have had quite a festival of chamber music, rendered specially interesting by the visit of Herr Mühlfeld, of which Mr. Brodsky, Mr. Cohn, and Mr. Carl Fuchs have taken advantage in producing, at their respective concerts, many works which we may only rarely hear. At Mr. Brodsky's third recital, on the 17th ult., after Beethoven's Op. 131, the gifted clarinettist, with the assistance of Miss Olga Néruda, gave us the Brahms Sonata in E flat (Op. 120), and then joined the quartet party in a most finished rendering of Mozart's delightful Quintet in A major. Two evenings later, Mr. Isidor Cohn's programme included the Brahms Trio in A minor (Op. 114) for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello, Schumann's Fantasiestücke for pianoforte and clarinet, and Mozart's Trio in E flat for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola; and, for his third meeting, on the 22nd ult., Mr. Carl Fuchs, modestly keeping himself and his admirable violoncello playing in the background, provided the Brahms Quintet (Op. 115) for clarinet and strings, and the same composer's Duet in F minor for clavier and clarinet. As the result of all this enjoyment of the exquisite playing of Herr Mühlfeld and of the delicately modulated tones he produces, one cannot but be sensible that the clarinet may be heard to full advantage only in association with orchestral instruments of varied character and not with a mere pianoforte accompaniment, however skilfully that support may be managed. At the Schiller Hall concert Miss Irene Schaefsberg, who played so successfully a few weeks back at the Free Trade Hall, again distinguished herself in her interpretation of some Chopin morceaux.

Mr. Lane's Ballad concerts are always attractively varied by the interspersed choral work, and Leslie's "How sweet the moonlight" and Battye's "How short, sweet flower," served to give solidity to the programme of the 20th ult., which otherwise might have been somewhat monotonously fragmentary. Chief among the soloists was Madame Marchesi, whose rendering of Schubert's "Erl-King" was simply superb.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

"Messiah" performances.

As usual, Handel's "Messiah" occupied the almost exclusive attention of Yorkshire musicians in the closing weeks of the year, and it will perhaps be convenient if we consider a few of the most representative performances together.

The greatest interest undoubtedly attaches to that of the Leeds Choral Union on December 27, which followed the model set by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society a year ago. Everything that was not expressly Handel's was rigorously excluded, and, if the result approximated more closely to the Handelian letter than to its spirit, it may at least be said that the conditions were more favourable to a realisation of the effect of the oratorio in its pristine form than at the Albert Hall. The bassoons had an appreciable effect upon the general tone-colour, but the half-dozen oboes were as naught in the ensemble. The trumpets in "Glory to God" were stationed at the top of the orchestra, and proved fairly effective, though it still seems doubtful to us whether this is not a case where it is necessary to go behind the letter of the score to get at Handel's intentions. The "letter" of the score is in this case very literally in doubt, for the direction in the autograph is variously read as "da lontano e un poco piano" or "o un poco piano." Judging from Chrysander's accurate fac-simile, the former seems intended, but in either case the characteristic effect of the trumpets would gain by keeping down the chorus and strings in the opening bars. A noteworthy feature of the performance was Mr. T. T. Noble's artistic playing of the organ part, upon which much devolved in the absence of Mozart's additions. The soloists were Miss Lillian Blauvelt, who was successful alike in the brilliant and the pathetic airs; Miss Clara Butt, who has been at her best of late; Mr. William Green, who nobly abstained from the customary high A at the end of "Thou shalt break them," and Mr. Dan Price as the sound and conscientious bass. The singing of the chorus was delightfully bright and full toned, and did credit to their teacher and conductor, Mr. Alfred Benton. The significance of Handel "pure and simple" was emphasised by a performance of the oratorio just a week before by the Leeds Philharmonic Society, under Dr. Stanford, when the usual Mozart version, purged from its worst traditional accretions, was used. Apart from historical considerations, the comparison involved between these two interesting and excellent performances by no means put one out of love with Mozart, while we may here confess to a sneaking fondness for the traditional trombones and a strong belief that Handel would have welcomed them with enthusiasm. The Philharmonic performance was distinguished by the artistic feeling infused into it by Dr. Stanford's musicianly reading of the music, while as a matter of interest it may be mentioned that on this occasion Mr. Edward Lloyd made his last appearance at Leeds as an oratorio singer. It was a pity that, in the very last bars he sang, he should have adhered to the traditional alteration of the text; but this did not affect the enthusiastic demonstration, amid which he left the platform. The other principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Clara Butt, and Mr. Tom Daniel, the last of whom made his first appearance in the town, and showed promise, if he seemed lacking in experience.

At Bradford, as at Leeds, there were two important performances of "The Messiah." On December 19 the Bradford Old Choral Society, under Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw, gave the oratorio, the freshness and vigour of the capital chorus being the best feature of the performance, and the adherence to not a few of the more stupid traditions the worst. The principals were Miss Bensberg, Miss Bellas, Mr. Brophy, and Mr. Mansell Lewis, who proved efficient. On December 22 the Bradford Festival Choral Society and the Permanent Orchestra united in giving "The Messiah." If the freshness of youth belongs to the rival Bradford chorus, the experience of maturity is the possession of the other Society, and the singing was characterised by their usual intelligence. The principals were Madame Albani, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. W. Green, and Mr. T. Daniel; and Mr. Sewell conducted. The Halifax Choral Society, under Mr. T. Smith's conductorship, held its "Messiah" celebration—for that is what these annual performances may fitly be styled—on December 14, when all-round excellence, rather than any especial distinction, characterised the reading. Miss Wynne, Miss Lonsdale, Mr. Brophy, and Mr. C. Knowles were the soloists. As usual, the greatest magnificence of choral tone and force was found at Huddersfield, where the Choral Society gave "The Messiah," on December 22. This powerful chorus is still supreme, even in the West Riding, for weight and grandeur of tone, and, though it has its limitations, these are not felt in "The Messiah," which might have been written for it. The one good feature of the orchestral part was the trumpet playing of Mr. A. Tomlinson, who, in the obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound," has no superior in this country, whether in or out of the Metropolis. The principals, Miss Nicholls, Miss Lonsdale, Mr. Brophy, and Mr. Dan Price, were all excellent, and Mr. John Bowling conducted with a genuine command over his forces.

Other musical events have been neither numerous nor important. At Leeds, the Prize Musical Union, of which Mr. A. H. Ashworth is the conductor, set a good example to other societies by devoting one of its meetings, on the 8th ult., to songs and part-songs by Hatton, and making a collection for the fund in aid of the composer's two daughters, who are greatly in need of such help. On the 11th ult. the Leeds Parish Church Choir gave a concert that showed what excellent vocal material the choir contains, and, on the 20th ult., the School Board Choral Society, whose chorus is composed of old scholars at the Leeds Board Schools, showed a praiseworthy ambition in attempting Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Stanford's "Revenge," and Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." Mr. W. Godson conducted. On the 16th ult. the choir of St. Margaret's gave Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter," under Mr. G. H. Sutcliffe's direction.

At Bradford, Miss Wehner gave a concert on the 3rd ult., at which the Chaigneau Trio were introduced to Yorkshire. These very clever young ladies gave a highly finished performance of Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Trio in F, and played some solos very artistically. Miss Wehner sang with great artistic intelligence a most interesting series of songs of varied character. The Subscription concert, on the 19th ult., was of the miscellaneous order, the artists engaged being Miss Louise Dale, Miss Butt, Messrs. Grover and Plunket Greene, with Mr. Moszkowski as pianist and Mr. Gérardy as violoncellist.

The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. Ibeson, gave a varied programme of concerted vocal music on December 19. On the 16th ult. there was another of the Subscription concerts, at which Madame Amy Sherwin, with Mr. H. Verbrugghen as violinist, Mr. Willibald Richter as pianist, and the Meister Glee Singers, whose ensemble is as perfect as ever, made their appearance. The very artistic Brodsky Quartet Party was responsible for the Halifax Subscription concert on the 10th ult., and played quartets by Beethoven and Schumann most sympathetically.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A large number of Eisteddfodau have been held in various parts of the Principality, as usual during the week extending from Christmas to New Year's Day.

At that held at Cardiff, on Christmas Day, the Rhymney Male-Voice Choir was declared best in singing Saintis' "On the ramparts," four choirs competing, and that of Canton (Cardiff) in Handel's "Then round about the starry throne." The adjudicators were Messrs. Dan and D. C. Davies. On the same day at Festiniog, Merioneth, nine choirs made their appearance, the pieces for competition being chiefly Welsh. Four male-voice choirs competed on the chief subject at Chester, on Boxing Day, the first prize being awarded to Llangollen, and the second to Crewe; while Runcorn and Crewe divided honours in Sullivan's "O gladsome Light"—the late Duke of Westminster's annual prize. Mr. D. Emlyn Evans adjudicated at both these Eisteddfodau.

On New Year's Day three choirs entered for the £35 at Llandudno (adjudicators, Mr. J. T. Rees and Mr. J. Dryhurst Roberts), Brynbowydd (Festiniog) United Choir proving victors. At the Dolgelly Eisteddfod, held on the same day, the committee made a new and commendable departure in selecting Gounod's "Gallia" as the chief choral test, although only one choir—viz., Machynlleth—responded, and was pronounced to be well worthy of the £40 prize by Mr. Joseph Bennett, the adjudicator. Of the three male-voice choirs which essayed "The Lily" (Mendelssohn) and a Welsh composition, that of Ceinws, hailing from the same neighbourhood, was considered best. The Wnion (Dolgelly) Choir was placed first out of the five competing in the second mixed voice contest; and the Nantlle Ladies received high praise for their rendering of two Welsh airs arranged for female choirs. At the evening concert Cowen's "St. John's Eve" was performed by the Idris Choral Society and orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. O. O. Roberts. The soloists engaged were Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Lizzie Teivy Davies, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, and Mr. Ivor Foster; Mr. W. L. Barrett being solo flautist.

The Imperial concert, organised by the British Empire League, to be given in the Royal Albert Hall, on the 7th inst., bids fair to be a veritable feast of good things musical. It is in aid of a fund for the benefit of widows and orphans of Her Majesty's Colonial forces in South Africa. Unlike the majority of concerts of that kind, it will be really musical as well as patriotic. There will be a choir of 500 or 600 voices, including the ladies' choir of the Royal Academy of Music. Madame Albani and Mr. Edward Lloyd have expressed their willingness to sing, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie will conduct. The Prince and Princess of Wales have signified their intention of honouring the concert with their presence. The practical interest of Colonial well-wishers in so good a cause may be assumed, and the forecast of this concert may be expressed in the words "great success."

Mr. T. E. Spinney, of Sarum St. Edmund's, one of our oldest living Church organists, has recently been presented with a valuable silver-mounted walking stick by the adult members of his choir, in recognition of the unvarying kindness and tact with which he has conducted them for over a quarter of a century. Mr. Spinney, in conjunction with the late Canon Tower, may be remembered as being the prime mover in the formation of the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Association, and in preparation for its first Festival—held at the Parish Church of Sturminster Newton, Dorset, about forty years ago—he trained every singer at his own expense. No one has worked harder in the cause of Church music than Mr. Spinney, and no testimonial has ever been more deservedly bestowed.

The smoking concert given on the 8th ult., at the Queen's Hall, by the Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society, in aid of the sufferers in the present war, was honoured by the presence of the Prince of Wales, and proved a most enjoyable evening. The band, under the able direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne, played an excellent selection with great spirit and notable attention to light and shade, and the choir sang with delightful finish Hatton's part-song "King Witlaf's Drinking Horn," Ernest Newton's humorous part-song "The Frog," and a clever glee entitled "The Lay of the Fancy Fair," by Mr. Munro Davison, the conductor of the choir. Mr. Plunket Greene was the vocalist.

The fourth International concert given by the Cercle des Etrangers at Monte Carlo was devoted to English composers. The programme included Mr. Frederick Cliffe's Symphony in C minor, two of Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Dances in the Olden Style," and Mr. Edward Elgar's "Imperial" March. The concert was, as usual, under the able direction of M. Léon Jehin.

The Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine, in Whitsun week, will be held this year at Aix-la-Chapelle, under the conductorship of Herren Richard Strauss and F. Schwickerath. Amongst the works to be performed are Liszt's oratorio "Christus," Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Haydn's "Seasons," and probably a new work by Richard Strauss.

Performances of "The Japanese Girl" and "Count Carlo," operettas by Dr. C. Vincent, were given, under his conductorship, at the Hampstead Vestry Hall, on the 11th and 12th ult., in aid of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Widows and Orphans Fund, and the Incorporated Society's Orphanage for the children of musicians.

Mr. Stanley Lucas has opened a Music Publishing business with his son, Mr Charles A. Lucas, at 12, Grafton Street, New Bond Street, under the title of Stanley Lucas and Son.

University of London.—The following were the successful candidates in the recent examination for the degree of Bachelor of Music:—Jonathan Charlesworth and John Duffell. The examiners were Dr. C. H. Lloyd and Sir Walter Parratt.

Trinity College (London).—The following College awards have been made:—Pianoforte accompaniment prize, Maud Agnes Winter; Maybrick prize for ballad singing and the silver medal for solo singing, Mabel Cecilia Bishop.

Sir Hubert Parry gave the first of his three lectures on "Neglected by-ways in Music," at the Royal Institution, on the 20th ult. We hope to give next month a summary of Sir Hubert's discourses, upon the completion of their delivery.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Amsterdam.—An interesting concert was given recently, by the a capella Choir, under the conductorship of M. Averkamp, in the Lutheran Church, when a number of works by Sweelinck, Josquin des Près, Palestrina, Lasso, and other old masters, as well as Brahms's Motet (Op. 74), were produced before a deeply impressed audience.

Antwerp.—The very successful first performance took place last month, at the Flemish Theatre, of a new opera, "Quentin Matsys," by Emile Wambach, the libretto (by R. Verhulst) being effective and the music melodious and distinctly popular in its character.

Athens.—Under the active patronage of the Crown Prince George, the Athens Conservatoire has been entirely reconstituted, with M. Nasos as the new director, some noted Belgian artists being appointed to the teaching staff. Important money gifts have also been made by several local music-lovers, and there is every prospect of the Institution having now fairly entered upon a career of artistic usefulness and prosperity.

Berlin.—A new fairy opera, "König Drosselbart," by Gustav Kulenkampf, met with a very favourable reception at its first performance, on December 31, at the Royal Opera, under Dr. Muck's direction. According to the statistical report just published, sixty-two different works have been produced at the Royal Opera during the past year. The highest number of performances was accorded to Wagnerian works—viz., fifty-eight; Lortzing (!) being next with thirty-two, Mozart with twenty-three, Boieldieu with twelve, Auber with eleven, Verdi with ten, and Weber with seven performances.——At the Philharmonic concert of the 8th ult., under Herr Nikisch's direction, Alexander Glazounow's Symphony in C minor was produced for the first time and received with great favour.——The Academical Institution for Church Music celebrated the centenary of its foundation on the 7th ult. by a festival concert, including the performance on the organ of Bach's Toccata in F major, of Mendelssohn's 90th Psalm, and the same composer's "Neujahrslied," for mixed choir. Professor Krause delivered an interesting discourse on the development of sacred music in the nineteenth century.

Budapest.—The Philharmonic concert of December 20 was devoted chiefly to works by Antonin Dvorák, who, in the presence of a most enthusiastic audience, conducted his symphonic poem "Heldenlied," the Violin Concerto in B minor (M. Wihan, of the Bohemian Quartet, playing the solo instrument), and the Carnival Overture. At the concert of the 10th ult. a new Symphony in C sharp minor, by Buttykay, obtained a successful first hearing.

Carlsruhe.—Max Schillings's new comic opera, "Der Pfeifertag," was brought out at the Court Theatre, on December 27, under Herr Mottl's direction, and with Frau Mottl and Herren Gerhäuser and Plank in leading parts. The reception of the work, which is in three acts, was a very favourable one, and at the conclusion of the performance the composer, who was present, was gratified by a number of recalls.

Dresden.—The concert of the Royal Orchestra, last month, included the first performance of the new symphonic poem, "Heldenleben," by Richard Strauss, which produced quite a sensation amongst the audience.

Halle.—A monument is to be erected in this city to Robert Franz, an influential and highly representative committee, including many leading professors of the University, having recently been formed for the purpose.

Leipzig.—A concert devoted exclusively to compositions by Felix Weingartner was given, on the 4th ult., by the Halir Quartet Party, when the programme included a new, and as yet unpublished, String Quartet in F minor, as well as a number of new songs, the latter ably interpreted by Frau Schoder-Gutheil, of Weimar. The new compositions were greatly applauded.

Lucca.—A new Grand Mass, by the well known composer Ferruccio Ferrari, was produced last month, in the Cathedral, with considerable success.

Munich.—Under the direction of the composer, the first performance took place, on the 5th ult., by the Musikalische Akademie, of the "Weihnachts Mysterium," or "Christmas Mystery," by Professor Wolfrum, the musical director of the University of Heidelberg. The work, which is accompanied by a series of living pictures, is a noble one, deeply religious in sentiment, and of a high order musically. The executants were the Royal Choir and Orchestra, the leading solo parts being in the hands of Fräulein Schloss (Mary) and Herr Vogl (Evangelist). The performance created a profound impression.—— The Philharmonic concert of December 25 included two novelties—viz., a Symphony in B flat major, by the talented composer, W. Berger, and a scene from Julius Wolff's "Lurlei," for soprano solo, male choir and orchestra, by the Intendant of the Royal Opera, C. von Perfall, which proved a well-written and effective piece.

Paris.—Gluck's "Orphée" has been revived at the Opéra Comique, with Mdlle. Gerville-Réache in the titular part, and is being played in conjunction with another revival—viz., that of the one-act opera "L'Irato," by Méhul. ——The commission which has been appointed for organising the important musical performances to be given in connection with the forthcoming World-Exhibition includes, amongst other well known French musicians, MM. Massenet, Saint-Saëns, Bourgault-Ducoudray, Bruneau, d'Indy, Dubois, and Guilmant.——A new operetta, "Les Saltimbanques," the music by M. Louis Ganne, has been successfully brought out at the Gaité.

Prague.—Mr. Leonhard Emil Bach's opera "The Lady of Longford" was produced for the first time at the German Theatre, on the 7th ult., and well received. The performance, conducted by Capellmeister Blech, was a very good one, with Fräulein Reich and Herr Davison in the principal parts.

St. Petersburg.—A series of most successful performances of sacred music was given in the last week of December, by the Röthig Quartet for Church music, of Leipzig.——A young Russian composer, A. Davidow, has written a four-act music-drama, the libretto of which, like Zoellner's new operatic work, is founded upon Gerhard Hauptmann's drama, "Die versunkene Glocke." The work was recently produced, with success, in concert form, and has been accepted for production at the Imperial Opera.

Vienna.—A new String Quartet in A major, by Ernst von Dohnányi, was introduced to the Viennese public by the Fitzner Quartet Party, at their concert of the 3rd ult., and received with high favour.——Ignaz Brüll, the well known pianist-composer, has nearly completed the score of a new opera, founded on the "Rübezahl" legend, and entitled "The Lord of the Mountains."

Weimar.—A new one-act opera—or "Bühnenspiel," as the author calls it—entitled "Der Klosterschüler von Mildenfurth," by Carl Kleemann, was brought out at the Hof-Theater, on December 20, and accorded a highly favourable reception. The performance, under Herr Kryzanowski, was an excellent one, and the composer (who is also the author of the poetical and dramatically effective libretto) was enthusiastically applauded by a numerous audience. "Tristan und Isolde" was given without any "cuts" on December 25, when, for the first time since her retirement from the Berlin Opera, Frau Rosa Sucher appeared in the part of the heroine, greatly to the delight of her numerous admirers.

OBITUARY.

The death took place at Greenhill, Sherborne, Dorset, on the 3rd ult., of George Edwin Lyle, aged fifty-seven, for nearly twenty-two years organist and choirmaster of Sherborne Abbey. A native of Sheffield, he was formerly organist of Pitsmoor Church and later of Mold Parish Church, Flintshire. At Sherborne, where he will be greatly missed, Mr. Lyle did excellent work as district choirmaster of the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Association, and many successful festivals have been held under his able direction.

John Knowles Hodges, Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. James's, died on the 17th ult., at 101, Flaxman Road, Camberwell, in his sixty-fourth year. Mr. Hodges, who was formerly an alto lay clerk of Worcester Cathedral and an assistant vicar-choral of St. Paul's Cathedral, retired from active duty in 1892. He was for many years a member of the Choir Benevolent Fund. Mr. Hodges possessed a fine collection of glees.

Carl Millöcker, the famous composer of operettas, died at Baden, near Vienna, on December 31, at the age of fifty-eight. Some of his operettas have enjoyed equal popularity with those of Suppé and Johann Strauss; notably "Gasparone" and "Der Bettelstudent."

Joseph Dupont, the excellent conductor of the Concerts Populaires in Brussels and a professor at the Conservatoire, died in that capital, on December 22, aged sixty-two. He was one of the earliest champions of Wagner's music in Belgium.

Heinrich Ehrlich, the well-known musical author and critic, died at Berlin on December 30. For many years he occupied the post of musical critic on the Berlin Tageblatt. Amongst his published works are "Musical Æsthetics, from Kant to the present time," and "Thirty years of the life of an artist." He was born in Vienna in 1822.

Friedrich Robert Sipp, for many years first violinist in the Gewandhaus orchestra, died at Leipzig, on December 21, aged ninety-four. Amongst his least promising pupils was Richard Wagner.

The death roll of last month and the closing days of December also includes Edmond Depret (on December 24, at Nassogue, Belgium), composer of a Te Deum and other works, and a well known figure in London artistic circles; Eugene Bertrand (on December 30, at Paris), co-director with M. Gaillard, of the Grand Opéra, Paris; Carlo Ducci (on the 13th ult.), the pianoforte teacher of Master Basil Gauntlett; and James Jonathan Monk, a well known musician and writer on musical matters in Liverpool.

A memoir, with portrait, of the late Dr. E. G. Monk will be found on page 96.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A STOPLESS ORGAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—My reminiscences go back to a period considerably older than the forty years assigned to the "cutting" supplied by "An Old Organist." In my very youthful days I distinctly remember reading, but in a versified form, the same story, in which the self-acting organ is described as triumphantly emitting that most profane tune, "Drops of Brandy," whilst being carried out of the church. I am afraid the author of the cutting knew very little about organs of that kind, whether self-acting or set going by means of a handle, or he would not have talked of a single barrel being "pricked" for forty tunes! In my early, and even somewhat later days I have seen barrel-organs, and in fact have "played" on them, but I never came across one having anything like that number of tunes on one cylinder.

A good many years ago the famous Lancashire poet, Edwin Waugh, seems to have taken up the story, but, in adopting it, intensified the humour of it in his own inimitable fashion, by describing how a country carrier, entrusted with the carriage and delivery of a washing machine and a self-acting organ, took them to the wrong houses, the former to the churchwarden's and the latter to where the washer ought to have gone. The mistake, however, was happily remedied in time, and the organ duly placed in the singing-gallery, where it was set going at the proper moment, with the result as in the cutting. I won't attempt to follow Waugh's most humorous description of the efforts made by the occupants of the gallery to stop its musical career, and how it was at last carried out into the churchyard, where it was left "growling" out its remaining strains. Anyone wanting to recreate himself with a good laugh at this depressing crisis can be accommodated by ordering Edwin Waugh's "Barrel Organ," from John Heywood, of Dean's Gate, Manchester.

Of all the older self-acting barrel-organs the Apollonicon, constructed by the late firm of Flight and Robson, of St. Martin's Lane, London, was certainly the most wonderful. An interesting description of this unique instrument was given in the "Harmonicon" for 1831, in which it is described as "a very large chamber organ, furnished both with barrels and keys, and whose sounds may be produced either by the action of machinery alone, or by the hands of a performer. The stops are between forty and fifty, and by their combinations give very perfect imitations of every wind instrument used in a modern orchestra. Two kettle-drums are also enclosed in the case, and struck, when necessary, by a curious contrivance in the machinery. The music to be performed on the Apollonicon, when worked by its machinery, is pinned on three cylinders of about two feet diameter and eight long, each acting on a distinct division of the instrument. The key-boards are five in number, including a pedal-board of two octaves, and are arranged so that the performers sit with their faces to the audience"—the same, in fact, as in some of the modern French organs.

"At the first opening of the Apollonicon, in 1817, the pieces set on its barrels were the overtures to 'Anacreon' and 'Clemenza di Tito.' Since then, new sets of cylinders have been added containing the overtures to 'Prometheus,' the 'Zauberflöte,' 'Figaro,' and 'Idomeneo,' the 'Freischütz,' and 'Oberon.' For several years Mr. Purkiss, who first displayed its powers in 1817, has performed selections on it on Saturdays."

It is a very, very long time since, but I once had the opportunity of listening to one of these performances (the term "recital" had not yet been invented), which was preceded, as I can well remember, by the "Freischütz" Overture on the barrels, and a wonderful effect it produced.

An old Devonshire friend of mine once told me an extremely funny barrel-organ story, but I am afraid I have already taken up too much of your valuable space, so I must perforce conclude.—Faithfully yours,

Samuel Reay.

TUNES FOR BELL CHIMES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—You were kind enough some years ago to insert in your columns a letter from me asking for tunes for a chiming clock. My letter brought me several replies with some useful suggestions. I am again in want of additional tunes, and feel sure that many of your readers could help me in this matter.

The clock has fourteen bells, which afford scope enough for a large number of tunes; but as each bell is furnished with one hammer only the selection is limited. I have most of the tunes ordinarily put to bells, but there must be plenty of others known to your readers. Will they kindly communicate with me?

Perhaps some correspondent could give me information about the tunes played by the carillons in Belgium. In any case I shall esteem it a great kindness to hear from anyone upon the subject.—I am, yours, &c.,

Henry T. Tilley.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Ayr.—The second concert of the Philomel Society was given on the 19th ult., when Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was performed before a large audience. It is one of the aims of this Society to perform a work by a British composer at each concert with complete orchestral accompaniments. This aim, so far, has met with an extraordinary amount of support from the public, the attendance both at this and the first concert being larger than that at others in the town or neighbourhood for many years past. The solo in "Hiawatha" was charmingly sung by Mr. Edward Branscombe, who also contributed two songs to the second part of the programme. Other soloists were Miss F. Lane (harpist) and Mr. James Edgar (violinist). The miscellaneous selection included some sixteenth century madrigals and Eaton Faning's part-song "Moonlight," unaccompanied; but perhaps the most popular numbers were the March and Chorus from "Tannhäuser" and the Soldiers' Chorus from "Faust," accompanied by the orchestra. Dr. W. G. Eveleigh, to whom the Society owes its existence, was the conductor, and Mr. G. Ely was the accompanist.

Bethesda.—Mr. E. D. Lloyd gave his annual concert at Bethesda Chapel, on the 8th ult., when he was assisted by Mrs. Lloyd and Mr. Emlyn Davies (vocalists), Miss Louie James and Mr. W. R. Watson (violin), and Mr. A. Corrison (flute and piccolo). Beethoven's "Egmont" and Schubert's "Rosamunde" Overtures were included in the programme and were played by the instrumentalists named, supplemented by Miss Eames and Mr. Morris (pianoforte) and Mr. Lloyd (organ).

Bristol.—Very successful performances of "Little Bo-Peep," a fairy operetta for children by C. Egerton Lowe, were given at St. Michael's School-rooms, Two Mile Hill, on December 28 and the 1st ult. Great pains had been taken in preparing the work, which was received with much favour, encores being numerous.

Cowes.—An excellent performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was given before H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg, at the Victoria Hall, on the 11th ult., by the Northwood Band and Chorus, numbering together 140. The orchestra (led by Miss Rutland) performed their arduous task with more than efficiency, and the choir seemed particularly happy in their work, especially in the two beautiful unaccompanied choruses. The soloists, Miss Amy Sargent, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Henry Turnpenny, and Mr. Charles Tree, were all admirable. Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" preceded the cantata and was to have been sung before the appearance of the Royal party, but, on learning that the motet was to be included in the programme, Her Royal Highness arrived at the beginning of the concert, in order to hear it. At the conclusion of the cantata, Princess Henry, who is Patroness of the Society, and had selected the cantata for performance on this occasion, expressed her gratification to the conductor, Mr. Frederick Rutland.

Gloucester. — A very successful performance of Elgar's cantata "King Olaf" was given by the Choral Society, on the 23rd ult., in the Shire Hall. It is the commendable design of this Society to perform at least one modern composition each season, and its rendering of this important work was distinctly excellent, the choir singing with precision and confidence and the orchestra (led by Mr. E. G. Woodward) being thoroughly efficient. The solo vocalists were Miss Rosina Hammacott, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. H. Sunman, all of whom were thoroughly satisfactory. The cantata was preceded by Mackenzie's breezy "Britannia" Overture. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer conducted, and deserved hearty commendation for the successful issue of the concert.

Hampton Wick.—Mr. William Ratcliffe, who has recently resigned the post of organist of the Parish Church, was, on the 18th ult., the recipient of a handsome mantel-clock, which was presented to him by the Vicar, churchwardens, and choir of the church "as a mark of regard and esteem," and in recognition of duties satisfactorily performed. Mr. Ratcliffe was also congratulated on his appointment to St. Alban's, Teddington, as successor to Mr. J. Munro Coward.

Hull.—Dr. G. H. Smith gave an interesting lecture on Henry Purcell before the Literary and Philosophical Society, on the 16th ult. After referring generally to the neglect of Purcell's music and to the conditions of musical art in that composer's time, Dr. Smith gave an historical outline of Purcell's opera "Dido and Æneas," which work was subsequently performed by a choir of thirty voices, the solos being sung by Miss Kathleen Mayes, Miss Evans, Mr. Charles Ratcliffe, and Mr. Turnbull. Mr. Kirby accompanied on the pianoforte and Dr. Smith conducted.

Melbourne (Australia).—A special musical service was held on December 5, in St. Paul's Cathedral, when Beethoven's C minor Symphony and Brahms's "German" Requiem were performed under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Wood, the Cathedral organist. A large and capable orchestra had been engaged, and the service was commenced with a praiseworthy rendering of the Symphony. For the Requiem, which followed, the Cathedral choir had been largely augmented, and, throughout the very difficult choruses with which the work abounds, acquitted themselves creditably, giving abundant evidence of careful rehearsal. The baritone solos were sung by Mr. Henry Rofe, of the Cathedral choir, and the soprano solo in No. 5 was excellently sung by four of the Cathedral choristers. The service concluded with Bach's A minor Prelude and Fugue, performed by the assistant Cathedral organist, Mr. R. J. Shanks. Mr. Ernest Wood, who devoted much time and pains to secure an adequate performance of these two masterpieces, must be heartily congratulated on the result of his efforts. This was the second occasion upon which, under his direction, Brahms's Requiem has been given in the Cathedral.

Penzance.—A very successful concert was given in St. John's Hall, on the 5th ult., by the Penzance Choral Society. The work chosen for this occasion was Sir Arthur Sullivan's "The Light of the World." The oratorio was admirably performed by both choir and orchestra, and the solos were efficiently sung by Miss Mason, Miss E. Rowe, Mrs. Cornish, Mrs. C. L. Taylor, Mr. W. Sampson, and Mr. J. Trebilcock. Mr. R. White presided at the organ and Mr. J. H. Nunn conducted with much ability. During an interval in the performance Mr. and Mrs. Nunn were presented by Mr. T. B. Bolitho, M.P., with a cheque for £500, a silver salver, a silver tea and coffee service, also an album containing the names of the subscribers. The presentation was made in recognition of the long and valuable services rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Nunn to the art of music in Cornwall.

Rochester.—Mr. Arthur Somervell's operetta "Princess Zara" was produced on the 13th ult., and repeated on the 15th and 17th ult., at the Victoria Hall, by an amateur company with much success. The libretto is by Mr. Claude Aveling, and both story and music are very bright and pleasing. Much ability was displayed by Miss Sybil Thorndike (Princess), Mr. Capel Berger (Prince Florizel), and Mr. F. Shewell Cooper (King). The performances, given under the direction of Mr. Aveling, showed the result of much care and artistic taste.

Salisbury.—The members of the Cathedral choir, assisted by the Close Ladies' Orchestra, gave a concert on the evening of New Year's Day in the Choristers' School. The programme included the Symphony from Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio (Part 2), Minuet and Trio (Boccherini), and Elgar's Serenade, "Salut d'amour," by the orchestra. The following interesting selection of part-music was sung: "Queen of the valley" (Callcott), "This pleasant month of May" (Beale), "The cloud-cap't towers" (Stevens), "Who shall win my lady fair?" (Pearsall), and "The silver swan" (Gibbons). Violin and violoncello solos were contributed by Miss Carpenter and Mr. J. L. Davis, accompanied by the Precentor, Canon Carpenter, who also conducted. The concert was in every way very successful and it is to be hoped it will become an annual institution.

Wellington (N.Z.).—Mr. Robert Parker, organist of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, gave his twenty-first annual concert in the Choral Hall, on December 14, assisted by the Glee and Madrigal Society and the Wellington Liedertafel, of which he is the conductor. The former sang in admirable style the madrigals, "Fire, fire, my heart," "Matona, lovely maiden," and "When love and beauty" (Sullivan); also a fine selection of modern part-songs, which included Parry's "Phyllis" and Stanford's "Corydon, arise!" The Liedertafel sang Myles B. Foster's fine "Ode to Music" for tenor solo and chorus of male voices. Two talented pupils of the concert-giver, Miss Barber and Miss Janet Ross, played respectively the Romanza and Finale from Mozart's D minor Concerto, and the Rondo from Weber's Sonata in C major. Dr. Kington Fyffe sang with much refinement Purcell's "Knotting Song" and "When I am laid in earth," and Mr. John Prouse gave a splendid rendering of Tschaïkowsky's "Don Juan's Serenade." The concert was an unqualified success.

Weybridge.—A successful concert was given at the Village Hall, on the 11th ult., by Miss Catherine Low. The concert-giver played Chopin's Ballade in A flat, Moszkowski's "Caprice Espagnol," Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise," No. 12, and other pieces, and was assisted in an excellent rendering of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata by Mr. Rohan Clensy. The vocalists were Miss Hester Otway and Lieut.-Colonel Craig.

Wood Green.—The Alexandra Musical Union Select Choir and Orchestra, comprising altogether about forty performers, gave a very creditable performance of "St. Cecilia's Day" (Van Bree), at Bradley Hall, on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. E. J. Deason. The solos were sung by Madame Minnie Jones. The choruses, "Brooks shall murmur" and "Give way now to pleasure," and the choral, "Fragrant odours," were especially well sung, the second being encored.

Worcester.—The pupils of the Misses Grafton, at the Catholic High School, gave a capital performance of Somervell's popular operetta "The Enchanted Palace," on the 3rd ult. The work was well staged and the details had been carefully prepared.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. J. B.—The tune "Angels," or "Angels' Song," by Orlando Gibbons, has both rhythmic and melodic variants. It first appeared, written in two parts, in George Wither's "The Hymnes and Songs of the Church," 1623, where it is set to a paraphrase of Luke 2, 13—"The Song of Angels," hence the name of the tune—in the following form:—

Thus An-gells sung, and thus sing we; To God on high all glo - rie be: Let Him on earth His peace bestowe, and un - to men His fa - vour show.

*In "Hymns Ancient and Modern" (Sir F. Ouseley's arrangement) and "The Church Hymnary" (edited by Sir John Stainer) it appears in the above melodic form; but in the triple version (possibly made by Gibbons himself) the last note of the first line is often the tonic, not the dominant, and the modulation (B natural) to the dominant in line 2 takes place at * in the above example, as in the "Westminster Abbey Hymn Book" (edited by Sir Frederick Bridge) and other collections.*

Metronome.—(1) Grieg's Ballade in G minor (Op. 24) is one of those poetic compositions which it is impossible to put into the straight jacket of metronome "indications." One's own feeling for the music must prompt the various rates of speed. (2) "The Continent" is rather too vague. Cannot you fix upon a country, and then we will endeavour to advise you? (3) The Examinations of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music.

Cardiffian.—See "Old Methodist Music," a lecture by Rev. Allen Rees [Wesleyan Book Room, City Road]; also "Hymns and Tunes of long ago," by W. J. Harvey (Curwen). Apply to Mr. J. T. Lightwood, Hope House, Lytham, who has made a special study of the subject of Wesleyan Methodist Psalmody.

J. S. F.—(1) The work entitled "Proverbs," by Anton (not Johann) André (Op. 32), is to be obtained of Messrs. Novello, price 2s. net, but with German words only. (2) We do not know of any "Life" of Auber in English. See his biography in Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," Vol. I.

R. S.—The tune sung to "It came upon the midnight clear" in Westminster Abbey is an arrangement, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, of Mendelssohn's "Songs without words," No. 1. It is No. 68 (second tune) in the "Westminster Abbey Hymn Book."

Banestra.—"Adagio in E" (Merkel). Adagio, crotchet = 63; Allegro, crotchet = 144, with a natural quickening of the pace, and then a return to the Tempo primo. (2) "Fantasia in E minor" (Silas). Adagio Maestoso, crotchet = 69; Allegro Moderato, crotchet = 96; Fugue, crotchet = 116.

Vibrato.—You should be careful, or you may do your voice serious injury. It may be desirable for you to consult a medical man, and then to go to some really capable singing master, whose specialty is not the vibrato.

Violin.—You should submit your violin to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who, in return for a moderate fee, would give you an expert opinion as to its value, upon which you may safely rely.

M. E. E.—It would be very difficult for you to get sufficient teaching to enable you to maintain yourself in London while pursuing your studies. Beware of doubtful "agencies."

C. E. H.—The accentuation of the passages that you send should fall on the notes under your red marks.

Baritone.—"Organ Fugue in C" (Krebs). Dotted crotchet = 60.

L. B. and Lennox.—Consult the "Musical Directory," which gives the required information.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL ORGAN

NORMAN & BEARD, LTD., refer with pleasure to the following Testimonials relating to the new Organ in Norwich Cathedral:—

Dr. A. L. PEACE, Organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, writes:—

"Allow me to take this opportunity of expressing to you the pleasure afforded me on the recent occasion of the opening of the organ in the Cathedral, Norwich.

"From my previous experience of your work I fully anticipated that your firm would prove quite equal to the demands which a large instrument necessarily makes upon the Builder; but in the present case this anticipation has been more than verified, and it may be affirmed that you have produced an instrument not only worthy of the noble building in which it is placed, but also one of which the City of Norwich has every reason to be proud."

W. STEVENSON HOYTE, Esq., F.R.C.O., Organist and Director of the Choir, All Saints', Margaret Street; Professor of the Organ, Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music, writes:—

"I have no hesitation in pronouncing the magnificent organ lately erected in Norwich Cathedral by Messrs. Norman and Beard, Ltd., one of the finest in the kingdom. The sonority and breadth of the diapasons, coupled with the brilliancy of the reeds, renders the full power of the organ majestic in the extreme; while the beautiful quality of the softer stops, both as solo and in combination, produces a variety of tone colour almost endless and bewildering in their effect.

"The electric action of the Celestial Organ is very prompt, and the ethereal beauty of this unique addition to a large organ produces an effect on the listener never before experienced.

"The tubular-pneumatic action is remarkably good, and the combination pistons very quiet and prompt in effecting the changes of the various registers.

"Altogether the instrument may be considered a triumph of the Organ Builder's art, and quite perfect in every detail."

E. H. LEMARE, Esq., F.R.C.O., Organist of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, writes:—

"I have been going to write to you for some days to congratulate you on the result of your new organ in Norwich Cathedral.

"Regarding some of the criticisms to which my attention has been called concerning the Echo Organ, I consider this is absolutely the most beautiful effect of the whole organ. It not only can be used as an independent organ by itself, but, as I tried to illustrate in my recitals at the opening of the organ, by playing in advance (which of course is necessary owing to the great distance the sound has to travel) with whichever hand you may be using on the Echo Organ, it is possible to use it in combination with the main organ with wonderful effect. I am not one to look upon this organ as a toy and an unnecessary expense after discovering its possibilities, although I can quite imagine people, being unaccustomed to electric organs at such a distance, criticising the expediency of spending so much money three hundred feet away."

C. W. PERKINS, Esq., Organist of the Birmingham Town Hall, writes:—

"Permit me to send you a few lines of congratulation on the highly successful instrument you have erected in Norwich Cathedral.

"It seems to me quite perfect in every respect—tone, mechanism, touch, &c., being absolutely satisfactory.

"The Echo Organ, as you have constructed it, is capable of many new and charming effects."

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822. INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

PATRONS:

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES
AND OTHER MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY.

PRESIDENT—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA, DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, MUS.D., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

F. W. RENAUT, Secretary.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout the United Kingdom and in the Colonies in both Theoretical and Practical Music. The Examinations are of two kinds, "Local Centre" and "School." The Local Centre Examinations are carried out by two Professors chosen almost exclusively from the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music. The School Examinations are conducted by one Examiner.

The Subjects for Examination under Syllabus A and B are comprised in the following list:—

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC.	PIANOFORTE.	DOUBLE BASS.
HARMONY AND GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	ORGAN.	HARP.
COUNTERPOINT.	VIOLIN.	WIND INSTRUMENTS.
	VIOLA.	SINGING.
	VIOLONCELLO.

The Local Centre Examinations are Annual, and will commence this year on March 24. Full particulars will be found in Syllabus A, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

Entries therefor must be received not later than March 1.

The School Examinations are held at three periods: (a) March—April, (b) June—July, (c) October—November. Candidates for these Examinations may be entered either by Heads of Schools or by individual Teachers. In the latter case, neither the Teacher nor the Candidate need necessarily be connected with a School. Full particulars of these Examinations, and also of the General School Examination and Class Singing Examination, will be found in Syllabus B, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

Entries for the March—April period will be received not later than February 3.

The Board gives annually six Exhibitions tenable for two years. These Exhibitions are limited to candidates under 20 years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S

PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Sir HUBERT PARRY writes: "They (the three parts of the above work) seem to be very well devised to help young students to learn the elementary details of scales."

Sir GEORGE MARTIN also writes (in acknowledging the receipt of a copy of work) "that he highly approves of it, as a most useful and helpful book to teachers and singers alike."

Sir WALTER PARRATT writes: "I think your little work is calculated to impart much valuable information, in a pleasant and rememberable form."

The Times says: "For children and young students who wish to learn sight-singing, Mrs. A. L. Mackechnie's 'Sight-Singers' Aid,' of which three books are published by Leonard and Co, is of great service. Her exercises are furnished with rhymes that are easy to remember, on the character of the intervals of the scale, and such points, and the method may be most warmly commended."

*UNA

SIXTH AND SEVENTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Eleventh and Twelfth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

VERSE BY JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"This charming work was composed for the pupils of King Edward VI.'s High School for Girls, Birmingham, and bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

HYMN BEFORE ACTION

SONG FOR A BARITONE VOICE

THE POEM BY

RUDYARD KIPLING

THE MUSIC BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

Price Two Shillings.

Ad libitum Accompaniment for Men's voices, in Four Parts, 4d.

Note.—Though written as a Baritone Song, this hymn is intended to be sung by many men's voices in unison. Except in the second verse (which may well be sung as solo), the pianoforte part is suited to many voices, and, when used as an accompaniment to a single voice, must be subdued as its character will allow.—H. W. D.

CONTAINING

50 DOUBLE CHANTS.

Price Sixpence.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. II., Chant No. 23, by Lord Mornington, which is included on account of its great popularity.

3. CRÉPUSCULE, 1s. 6d.
4. EXTASE, 2s.

"These pieces deserve to become widely known. We have here music that is the evident outcome of the composer's innermost feeling. Its sincerity is as obvious as its charm is penetrating. The Autumn season has inspired Mr. Percy Pitt with many beautiful thoughts. It is a pleasure to come across music so really worthy of the name, and it may be hoped that the 'Harmonies d'Automne' will soon figure on some important concert programme. In the meanwhile we gladly draw the attention of serious amateurs towards these delightful pieces, which can be played over and over again with increasing pleasure."—Morning Post.

MR. HENRY SUNMAN

(BASS)

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals, &c.

"Creation" at Melksham.—"Without attempting in the least to detract from the performance of the other artists, the star of the evening was undoubtedly Mr. H. Sunman, L.R.A.M., who was listened to with the keenest enjoyment, his rich bass voice being heard to advantage in all the parts taken by him."—Wiltshire Chronicle, December 2, 1899.

"Creation" at Burton-on-Trent.—"Mr. Henry Sunman is the possessor of a powerful baritone voice of excellent quality, which was effectively used. The air 'Rolling in foaming billows,' with its realistic accompaniment, was very dramatically rendered, and 'Softly purling' was sung with much feeling. He was also heard to advantage in the air, 'Now Heaven in fullest glory shone.'"—Burton Chronicle, December 7, 1899.

"Creation" at Coalville.—"Mr. Sunman sang in masterly fashion the air 'Rolling in foaming billows,' and was also deservedly applauded for the excellent way in which he gave the solo, 'Now Heaven in fullest glory shone,' and in all his efforts he was very successful."—Burton Guardian, December 9, 1899.

"Messiah" at Paignton.—"Mr. Henry Sunman's best effort was 'The trumpet shall sound,' the bright ringing tones of his upper register coming out with thrilling effect."—Paignton Observer, December 7, 1899.

Clarence Rooms, Brighton.—"Mr. Henry Sunman, a baritone new to Brighton audiences, made a very favourable impression in 'The Bedouin Love Song' and 'The Song of the Bow.' He has a powerful voice, with some particularly good deep notes; and for both of his songs he was enthusiastically applauded."—Brighton Society, December 9, 1899.

"Creation," Coventry.—"Mr. Henry Sunman was also distinctly successful, using his sonorous and powerful voice with great effect."—Coventry Reporter, December 16, 1899.

"Samson" at Madeley.—"Premier honours must be accorded the bass, Mr. H. Sunman, for his delineation of Manoah and Harapha. In every item he sang as a true artist; the air, 'Honour and Arms,' was rendered in a masterly manner, in fact it was the item of the evening, and at the conclusion he met with a storm of applause and cries of 'Encore.' He repeated his fine effort."—Wellington Journal, December 23, 1899.

"St. Paul" at Worcester.—"Mr. Henry Sunman was equally successful in the bass music, for which his full rich voice was peculiarly suited. The air, 'Consume them all,' was given with splendid vigour, and 'Oh God, have mercy,' with perfect feeling. The duet between the tenor and bass, 'Now we are ambassadors,' was one of the best appreciated numbers of the oratorio."—The Worcester Advertiser, January 20, 1900.

"King Olaf" (Elgar) at Gloucester.—"Mr. Sunman's resonant tones, virile declamation, and clear enunciation invested the recitatives allotted to the bass soloist with character, dignity, and convincing power."—Gloucester Journal, January 27, 1900.

"Andromeda" (C. H. H. Lloyd) at Guildford.—"The recitative by the Priest, 'Seek we the temple,' was rendered by Mr. Henry Sunman, the bass soloist, in a superb manner. . . . Mr. Sunman thrilled all with his rendering of the lines commencing 'O dark, O piteous fate!' and 'The lot has fallen!'"—Surrey Advertiser, February 10, 1900.

THE

LONDON ORGAN SCHOOL AND INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC,

22, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W.
Established 1865.
Principal: T. H. Yorke Trotter, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon.

The London Organ School provides a thorough Musical Education in all its branches, either for amateur or professional students. Lessons may be commenced on any date, and students may take a single subject if desired. The School is open till 9 p.m. for those students who cannot attend during the day.

Private Lessons are given in the following subjects:—Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration and Composition; Pianoforte, Organ, Singing, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, Horn, Trumpet and Cornet, Trombone, Harp, Mandoline and Guitar, Zither, Choir Training, Elocution and Stage Deportment, Modern Languages, &c.

The following are some of the Classes:—
HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, COMPOSITION, ORCHESTRATION, and MUSICAL DICTATION (Dr. Yorke Trotter).
QUARTET and ENSEMBLE PLAYING (Mr. Edward O'Brien and Mr. J. Edward Hambleton).
ELOCUTION and DRAMATIC ART (Mr. Charles Fry and Mr. Arthur Fayne).
CHORAL (Mr. Henry Beauchamp).
LADIES' CHORAL (Mr. J. Mewburn Levien).

The Full Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Yorke Trotter, and the String Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Edward O'Brien, meet weekly. There are three 3-manual Practice Organs.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

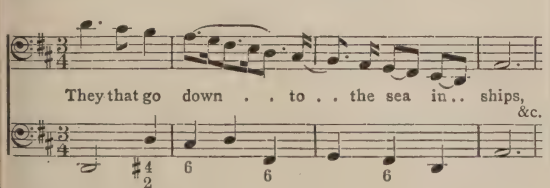
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

MARCH 1, 1900.

Two Extra Supplements are presented gratis with this number. A Portrait of Mr. George Henschel, taken by Taber, San Francisco; and an Anthem, entitled "Awake, awake, with holy rapture sing," by John E. West.

GEORGE HENSCHEL.

IF the authority of the "Creation" may be accepted, the first bass singer was Adam. Following the oratorio line of communication, other old historic worthies who possessed deep-toned voices were Moses, Eli, King Saul, Job, Elijah, and, later on, St. Paul. It would be idle to speculate upon the quality or compass of the voices of those Biblical personages. Coming to more recent times, it may suffice to recall the names of such illustrious basses as Staudigl and Lablache. A very remarkable example of profundity is furnished in one of our own countrymen, the Rev. John Gostling (died July 17, 1773), "a base from Canterbury, Master of Arts," who was sworn in "a gentleman extraordinary" (an extraordinary bass!) of the Chapel Royal, February 25, 1678. This Mr. Gostling was one of the most famous singers of his time by reason of the volume and compass of his bass voice. Evelyn, in his famous Diary, speaks of him as "that stupendous bass, Gostling." Charles the Second became exceedingly partial to his singing, and observed, "You may talk as much as you please of your nightingales, but I have a gosling who excels them all." It was for Gostling that Purcell wrote most of the bass solos in his anthems, of which "They that go down to the sea in ships" is perhaps the most famous. An interesting anecdote, too long to quote here, in connection with the composition of this marine anthem is related by Hawkins in his "History of Music." Here is the opening phrase of Purcell's double D anthem:—



It would be possible to quote several interesting literary references to the word bass, or "base," as the old writers spelt the word up to the time of the present century. Two examples must suffice. Sir Thomas Elyot, author of "The Boke named the Gouvenour," in his "The Castel of Helth" (1534), says: "Let him . . . begyne to synge lowder and lowder, but still in a base voice." Pope, in his "Dunciad" (1728), gives a curious rhyming pronunciation of the word in the lines,

. . . . whose hoarse heroic base
Drowns the loud Clarion of the braying Ass.

But it is time to turn aside from these antiquarian fields and to base our observations upon a distinguished vocalist of our own day—him who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

George Henschel was born at Breslau, February 18, 1850, therefore he has just attained his jubilee. He can claim Polish descent on his father's side, and both his parents were very fond of music. He began his music-makings at the early age of five, when he formed one of a pianoforte class of eight children who played simultaneously upon eight pianofortes, the same piece, of course. "The teacher," recalls Mr. Henschel, "walked from one piano to another, making corrections and giving encouragement. This ensemble playing develops the sense of rhythm in a remarkable way, and proves, among other advantages, the value of the pianoforte as a stepping-stone to orchestral conducting. I am a tremendous devotee to rhythm—rhythm is the soul of music. I consider it to be one of the greatest necessities to be instilled into young people in the earliest stages of their pupilage. I always say that the value of a musical note should be just as religiously kept as that of a £5 note, or else you cheat the composer."

Concurrently with his pianoforte lessons he joined the University Choral Society of Breslau. He had a good soprano voice, and on one occasion he sang the solo in Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" so well that he received a silver thaler by way of reward. In this connection we are much indebted to the veteran Professor Dr. Schaeffer, of Breslau, for the following "recollection." He writes:—

> "When at Michaelmas, 1860, I came to Breslau to assume my duties as the newly appointed director of the Sing-Akademie and as Professor of Music at the Academic Institute for Church-music, I observed in the choral class of the latter a little boy who distinguished himself above his fellow pupils by a charming voice and his absolute surety in reading at sight.
> "The name of that boy was George Henschel. I at once gave him my special attention and allotted to him every soprano solo. In the winter of 1860 he sang the solo in Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer.'
> "After his voice had changed I continued, at the request of young Henschel's father, to be interested in him by giving him lessons in counterpoint. It was, however, no easy task to bind the boy's fancy—then already very vivid—with the fetters of dry rules."

FIRST APPEARANCE, AGED 12.

Young Henschel made his first appearance in public when he was in his thirteenth year. This event took place on October 31, 1862. The place was Meser's Salon, No. 23, Unter der Linden, Berlin, the occasion being a performance for the purpose of exhibiting the talents of the pupils at the Wandelt Institute for Pianoforte-playing in Breslau. From the programme of this public function we find that "No. 3" in the bill of fare was:—

Sonate für Piano und Violine von Mozart, vorgetragen von G. Henschel (Schüler der Anstalt in Breslau) und Herrn Hellmich.

Immediately following was a more formidable task:—

4. Concert in F moll, mit Begleitung des Orchesters, von C. M. v. Weber, vorgetragen von C. Scherbel, A. Stern, R. Scherbel und G. Henschel.

MASTER GEORGE HENSCHEL. AGED SEVEN.

The familiar Concertstück was played by all these four children on four pianofortes simultaneously, in order to demonstrate the method pursued, and the excellent results obtained by Louis Wandelt in his Institute for Pianoforte-playing.

SUDDEN CHANGE OF VOICE.

Mr. Henschel has never stopped singing since he was a child. Unlike most other boys, his voice did not "break." He became "a splendid tenor, with a high C!" But lo, one morning he suddenly discovered that he had a deep bass voice. There was no premonition of the change in his vocal apparatus, which came about when he was fifteen years of age. He made his first appearance in public as a basso profondo at a concert given at Hirschberg on July 28, 1866, when he sang a ballad by Sobirei, entitled "Der todte Soldat." He was then a juvenile bass of some sixteen summers.

LEIPZIG.

In the following year (Easter, 1867) Henschel entered the Conservatorium of Leipzig. His professors were Moscheles (pianoforte), Richter (theory), Goetze (singing), and Papperitz (organ). Mr. and Mrs. Moscheles were exceedingly kind. He hardly missed spending a Sunday under their roof, and "dear old Mrs. Moscheles" was like a mother to him. Young as he was, Henschel soon made his mark. Within a fortnight he sang at two important functions—one to commemorate the death of Moses Mendelssohn, the other solemnity being in memory of Moritz Hauptmann, then (January, 1868) recently deceased. A portly volume of old programmes shows that young Henschel led a busy life—singing and playing in various places, with Ferdinand David (in Beethoven's Pianoforte Quartet, Op. 16), Rubinstein, and others. Moreover, there are records of early compositions of songs with orchestra, &c. He took the part of Hans Sachs in a concert-room performance at Leipzig of "Die Meistersinger" in 1868, the year of its first stage representation (Munich, June 21, 1868, under Hans von Bülow).

EUROPEAN REPUTATION.

After a studentship of three years at Leipzig, Henschel entered the Royal Conservatory, Berlin, where he studied composition under Friedrich Kiel, singing under Adolph Schulze, and the violin under Schiever. For the next few years he steadily made a reputation for himself as a vocalist of high rank. He sang in "The Messiah" (in French) at Brussels on February 9, 1873. At a concert performance of Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris," with Frau Joachim in the title-rôle, he, aged twenty-one, sang the part of Orest, while Herr Mantius, aged seventy-one, took that of Pylades—the difference in the ages of the two singers being just fifty years! This coincidence inspired a local wit to exclaim:

Henschel—Orest
Mantius—Beaux restes!

In 1874 he was fortunate enough to be engaged as a soloist at the Lower Rhine Musical Festival held at Cologne. He sang in a performance of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion (March 23, 1875) under the direction of Brahms. What an interesting occasion that must have been. By the time he was twenty-seven, the Continental reputation of Mr. Henschel was firmly established. It had extended to Russia and to all the art-centres of Europe, including Vienna and the Leipzig Gewandhaus. But England was soon to be conquered and an American bride to be won.

ENGLAND.

Mr. Henschel made his first appearance in England at the Monday Popular Concert of February 19, 1877. He came at the invitation of Mr. Arthur Chappell, to whom he had been recommended by Mrs. Moscheles. His success at once removed all necessity for any further letters of recommendation. He sang the air "Sibillar," from Handel's "Rinaldo," and Schubert's "Der Neugierige" and "Ganymed." The press was unanimous in its appreciation of the new singer. With an unpremeditated appropriateness, the critic of The Musical Times astronomised the new star as "Herr Herschel"! Said our then representative: "Herr Herschel, an artist who comes to us with no mean reputation from Germany, received special marks of approbation from the audience upon his delivery of an air from Handel's 'Rinaldo' and two of Schubert's Lieder."—(The Musical Times, March, 1877.)

When the young vocalist arrived in London, twenty-three years ago, he only intended to stay three weeks. Little did he then think that England would become the country of his adoption. Engagement upon engagement—often three per diem—followed one another in quick succession. The Crystal Palace, Henry Leslie's Choir, the Gentlemen's and Hallé's concerts at Manchester, all vied with each other in securing the services of the new singer. At a Leslie Choir concert Mr. Henschel joined Mr. Santley in the duet "The Lord is a Man of war." On June 7 he gave a morning concert—really a vocal recital—at St. James's Hall, when he sang no less than twenty-four songs of various schools, ranging from Carissimi to Brahms, and including Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, and Franz. A noteworthy feature of the outline programme was that to each song, in addition to the composer's name that of the author of the words was also given. A very commendable proceeding.

FIRST ENGLISH PUPIL.

It is not surprising that Mr. Henschel found his way to Albion's shores in the following year (1878). He sang at the Reid concert, Edinburgh, February 13, 1878, when in the list of the orchestra was the name of "Mr. A. C. Mackenzie," he being the last of the thirteen first fiddlers, though there is no record of the tune "There's nae luck about the house" having been played on that occasion. Henschel's popularity at the "Pops." was well maintained, as he sang at no less than five concerts during the season. He also sang at the Bach Choir concert (under Mr. Otto Goldschmidt's direction) of April 6, 1878, when Schumann's "New Year's Song" (Op. 144) was sung for the first time in England. He was speedily in request as a teacher of singing. His first English pupil was the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne).

FIRST APPEARANCE AT THE PHILHARMONIC AND ITS SEQUEL.

Mr. Henschel's appearance at the Philharmonic Society, on April 30, 1879, was not without a certain resultant romanticism. At this concert a young American soprano, Miss Lillian Bailey, made her first appearance in England. In the second part of the programme she sang with "Herr Henschel" the duo "Caro! Bella" from Handel's "Giulio Cesare." Miss Bailey took singing lessons from her partner in the duet. Two years later, on March 9, 1881, they were married at Boston (U.S.A.), the home of Miss Lillian June Bailey. Since 1884 Mr. and Mrs. Henschel have made England their permanent place of abode, and in 1890 Mr. Henschel became a naturalised Englishman.

MR. AND MRS. HENSCHEL'S VOCAL RECITALS.

Immediately after their marriage (in 1881) Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel began to give those delightful Vocal Recitals with which their names are so pleasantly associated. At first the announcement ran: "Mr. George Henschel's vocal recital, with the assistance of Mrs. George Henschel (Lillian Bailey)"; but at Providence, on April 11, 1881, the familiar designation, "Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel's vocal recital" seems to have been first used.

Before leaving the strictly vocal side of Mr. Henschel's career, reference must be made to the importance he always attaches to the distinct enunciation of the words in his singing interpretations. In this respect he is a model to young vocalists, who too often give forth utterances in a tongue that savours of the "unknown," or that may have had its origin within a short distance of Babel. Mr. Henschel sings in five languages, and has even sung the bass solo part in Beethoven's Choral Symphony in the Russian tongue. He is a master of various styles—he is equally au fait in the singing of ballads, in oratorio, and in interpreting the difficult music of Wagner.

Once only has Mr. Henschel appeared in opera, and that under somewhat curious circumstances. On the 9th of December last his opera "Nubia" was first performed at Dresden. At the second representation, on December 12, the singer cast for the part of Fra Girolamo was taken suddenly ill. The conductor feared that the performance would thereby have to be postponed unless the composer himself would sing the part. As Mr. Henschel had specially written the music of Fra Girolamo for his own voice there was no difficulty in this respect. But he had never before been "made up" for a stage appearance. However, he soon solved the mysteries of the habiliments necessary to a monk, and having donned the white robe, the sandals, and other distinctive paraphernalia of the goodly cleric, he, with only one rehearsal, made a very successful first and only appearance on the stage.

AN ORCHESTRAL CONDUCTOR.

We may now refer to an important feature of Mr. Henschel's career—his experiences as an orchestral conductor. His first work in that important branch of the art was in America, in connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded by Mr. Henry Lee Higginson and conducted by Mr. Henschel for the first three seasons of its existence—from October 22, 1881, to 1884. These important concerts, which are still carried on, were subsequently conducted by Gericke, Nikisch, and Paur.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

In 1886 Mr. Henschel changed the venue of his orchestral conductorship to London, when he founded "The London Symphony Concerts," which were continued for eleven years, 1886-1897. At the time these concerts were inaugurated the opportunities for hearing orchestral music in London were very few compared with those of the present day. Mr. Henschel's scheme therefore supplied a want. It may be interesting to give the programme of the first concert, November 17, 1886 :—

Overture, "Magic Flute" .. .. .. Mozart.
Concerto for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, in C (Op. 56) .. ..Beethoven.
Madame Haas, Mr. Gompertz, and Signor Piatti.
Symphony in D (No. 2) .. .. .. Brahms.
Charfreitags-Zauber ("Parsifal") .. .. Wagner.
Air for Tenor from "Iphigénie en Tauride" Gluck.
Prelude to Act III. of "Troubadour" A. C. Mackenzie.

And here it may be remarked that Mr. Henschel by no means ignored the claims of English composers. A complete list of the works performed during those eleven seasons proves that the composers of Great Britain were well represented in the annual schemes of these excellent concerts.

To return to the first concert and the criticisms thereupon. While one great daily said that the audience was "large," and another that it was "scanty," all the critics expressed themselves in terms of warm appreciation of the new conductor's ability. There was, however, one exception, and that was a notice written by a critic who was a rival conductor—of a kind! This gentleman wrote :—

The truth is, and Mr. Henschel seemingly has yet to realise it, that symphonic works have been, and can only be, given with proper effect by orchestral performers accustomed to play under the conduct of an experienced [!] chief. As a vocalist of the Teutonic order, Mr. Henschel may continue to win the confidence of his German listeners, especially while he substitutes enthusiasm for the purer canons of art; but to maintain public favour for sixteen occasions, under the assumption of giving symphonic works, challenges an amount of criticism which neither past nor present experiences render it safe to rely on.

Notwithstanding this "Echo" of an adverse criticism, he successfully gave not only the sixteen concerts, but a few more besides! During the season of 1895-1896 he gave all Beethoven's Symphonies in addition to a great number of the master's other orchestral and choral works, including the overtures, pianoforte and violin concertos, the "Choral" Fantasia, and the Mass in D. Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, performed on April 1, 1897, was a worthy termination to the Henschel concerts. In 1891 Mr. Henschel had organised a choir to sing the choral works performed at his concerts. It should be added that he was the means of introducing to an English audience Brahms's "Triumphlied" (Op. 55) for eight-part chorus and orchestra, at a concert he conducted in St. James's Hall, December 2, 1879, and, later on, the same composer's Double Concerto for violin and violoncello. He was also the first to make known the Te Deum of Dvorák in England.

THE SCOTTISH ORCHESTRA AND THE QUEEN.

From 1893-1895 Mr. Henschel was the conductor of the Scottish Orchestra in Glasgow. How much his efforts were appreciated in the "land o' cakes" is shown in the following letter sent to him on behalf of the Choral and Orchestral Union on the occasion of his resignation :—

"Glasgow, March 7, 1895.

"Dear Mr. Henschel,—We cannot allow you to leave Glasgow without expressing to you our high appreciation of what you have accomplished as conductor of the Scottish Orchestra. You have been unremitting in your attention to every detail of the work, and most unsparing of yourself in the labour which the perfecting of the performances entailed. You will no doubt find your reward in the high reputation you have won for the orchestra, but our thanks are none the less due to you for it. Regretting that you could not see your way to give us the benefit of your artistic co-operation in the work of the orchestra for a further period,

"We remain, yours very sincerely,
"James Bell, Lord Provost, Chairman of the Choral and Orchestral Union.
"James Summers, President Glasgow Choral Union.
"James A. Allen, Chairman Scottish Orchestra Company (Limited)."

An exceedingly pleasant episode—a unique coda, in fact—of this conductorship North of the Tweed was a "command" performance by the Scottish Orchestra before the Queen at Windsor Castle, on March 1, 1895. With that Queenly-Motherly interest which Her Majesty so kindly manifests towards those who go to Windsor to give her pleasure, she afterwards sent to Mr. Henschel, through Sir Arthur Bigge, a telegram couched in the following terms :—

"The Queen hopes you and Orchestra reached Glasgow safely and that no one suffered from the fatigue of the long journey after performing here."

A large portrait of Her Majesty, bearing the Queen's autograph, the date, and beautifully framed in embossed silver, followed a few days later.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Henschel is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music and of the Society for the Furtherance of Music in Holland. In succession to Madame Jenny Lind Goldschmidt he was a Professor of Singing at the Royal College of Music from Easter, 1886, to Easter, 1888.

COMPOSITIONS.

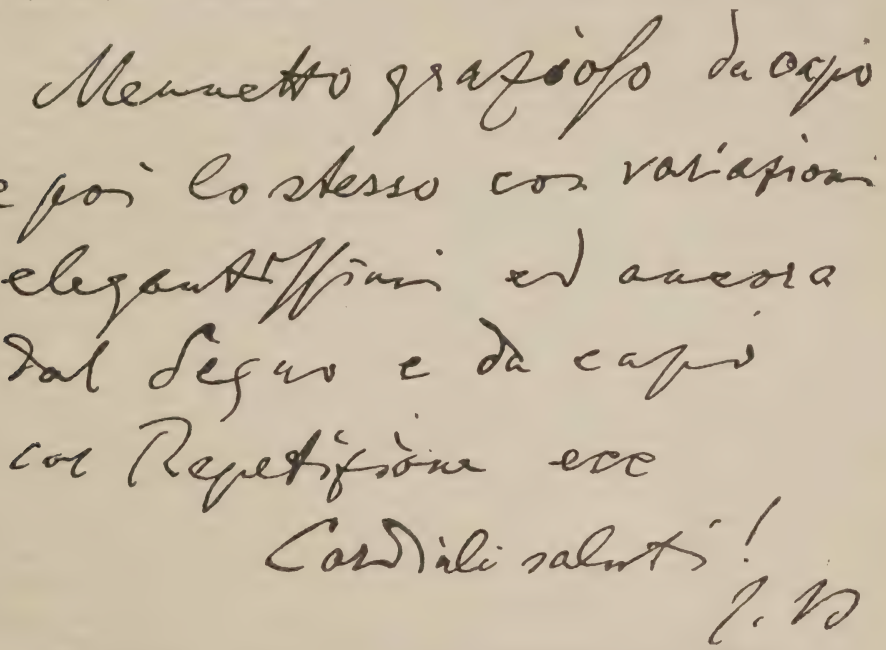
The mere fact that the published compositions of Mr. Henschel have reached to Opus 58, shows that he has not been idle in the creative field of the art. His most important work is the "Stabat Mater," first performed at the Birmingham Musical Festival, October 4, 1894. In the same category may be placed the "Out of darkness" (Psalm cxxx.) for five-part chorus and orchestra (Op. 30) and the Te Deum in C (Op. 52) for soli, chorus, and orchestra. In the purely instrumental forms we find a Zigeuner Serenade for orchestra, a Serenade for string orchestra in canon form (Op. 23), a String Quartet in E flat, Ballad for violin (Op. 39), and the Incidental Music to "Hamlet," written for Mr. Tree's Haymarket revival of Shakespeare's play. In addition to the serious opera "Nubia," already referred to and produced in December last, Mr. Henschel has composed a comic opera to words by W. D. Howells, entitled "A Sea Change, or Love's Stowaway." Special mention should be made of the excellent "Progressive Studies for the Voice," which have been issued in two parts—(1) Studies in sustained singing, and (2) Studies in florid singing. To the above list must be added about 200 songs, duets, &c.

AS A TEACHER.

Mr. Henschel has a very high reputation as a teacher of singing. Three-fourths of his pupils are public singers from America, who come over here to enjoy the benefit of four or five months' coaching from him. When we ask Mr. Henschel to say something about his method, he laughingly replies: "If in the course of the season I have twenty-three or thirty pupils, I have twenty-three or thirty methods." There is a good deal of common-sense in this remark. One thing is quite certain, Mr. Henschel does not belong to the voice-strainer order of the singing teaching community. He is a voice-trainer.

LISZT.

Mr. Henschel has the pleasantest recollections of Liszt, whom he describes as "a very fascinating, amiable, generous man." He specially remembers a Sunday morning at Liszt's house in Weimar. "On that occasion," recalls Mr. Henschel, "Hans von Bülow, Tausig, Rubinstein, and Liszt played one after the other. It was most wonderful to hear in succession those giants in pianoforte playing under conditions that do not exist in the concert-room. Liszt accompanied me in Wotan's Abschied at sight. 'Come and sing it,' said Liszt; and I did." This was in 1868, when Mr. Henschel was eighteen. At that time the pianoforte score had only just appeared.



FAC-SIMILE OF A HUMOROUS POST CARD FROM BRAHMS TO MR. HENSCHEL. POST-MARK, "THUN, 10. viii. 87."

BRAHMS.

No less interesting are Mr. Henschel's reminiscences of Brahms. He travelled with him when he gave concerts on the Rhine, and they spent much time together on the Isle of Rugen. He sang at the last two performances conducted by Brahms in Vienna. Mr. Henschel is about to publish, through Messrs. Macmillan, his recollections of and letters from Brahms, in a volume from the manuscript of which we are permitted to make two extracts—a letter and an anecdote.

The letter was written to Boston, where Mr. Henschel was at that time conducting the Symphony Concerts. It throws an interesting side-light upon Brahms's reluctance to write letters and to rush into print :—

"Vienna, '83.

"Dear Henschel,

"With mortification I thank you at last for so much kind and good news. You really have deserved that one should settle down comfortably to write a comfortable reply; but I beg you once for all to remember that with me the time is yet to come when I shall write the first letter with pleasure. Moreover, it is most aggravating to write to one who has left us so completely, and of whom we could make such excellent use here! . . .

"For your friendly pressure regarding a MS. of music for performance, I must thank you. But it would be the first time I had let such a MS. out of my hands. A new piece of mine I like to hear several times. If then it seems to me—so accidentally—worthy to be printed, it cannot, for any length of time, escape that operation; otherwise I do not give it out of my hands. But we can and shall take care that you have such novelties over there sooner than other people. . . .

"Now, please, give my greetings to yours and—ours; I mean our colleagues. Greet them from my heart and let me have the joy of being allowed to keep in contact with them, though it be only by means of programmes and newspapers.

"Again and beforehand many thanks,

"Heartily yours,

"J. Brahms."

Although Mr. Henschel failed to get the desired composition from Brahms, he was successful in procuring the MS. of the Concerto for violin and violoncello (Op. 102), which was first played in England on February 15, 1888, by Dr. Joachim and Herr Hausmann, under his (Mr. Henschel's) conductorship.

The following incident, related in Mr. Henschel's own words, took place at the Cologne Musical Festival in 1874 :—

"In the evening I found myself sitting with Brahms in a 'Kneipe'—one of those cosy restaurants, redolent of the mixed perfumes of beer, wine, coffee, and food, and so characteristic of Germany—in the company of four or five of the prominent composers of the day, who had come from their different places of abode to attend the festival; all of them bearing well-known names, and having attained to a certain, in some cases even more than local, celebrity.

"The musical proceedings of the day had been the chief topic of conversation, when suddenly one of the 'Herren Kapellmeister,' pointing towards me, exclaimed: 'Now just look at that lucky fellow Henschel! He can sing and compose as well, and we'—describing with his hand a circle which included Brahms—'we can compose only!'

"'And not even that,' came instantly from Brahms, whilst his countenance bore the expression of the most perfect innocence."

Brahms on Metronomic Indications.

Here is an interesting extract from a letter from Brahms to Mr. Henschel on the oft debated question of metronomic indications. Brahms wrote :—

"Your question strikes me as rather indefinite,—whether the metronome marks before the different movements of my Requiem should be strictly adhered to? Why, just as well as those to be found before other music. I am of the opinion that metronome marks go for nothing. As far as I know, all composers have as yet retracted their metronome marks in later years. Those figures which can be found before some of my compositions—good friends have talked them into me; for I myself have never believed that my blood and a mechanical instrument go very well together."

Personalia.

The subject of this biographical sketch lives in a charming house at Kensington. The study is full of interesting things. The well-filled shelves contain complete editions of Beethoven, Bach, Handel, Mozart, Gluck, Schubert, Brahms, and Wagner. A copy of the full score of "Das Rheingold" bears the following inscription in Wagner's own handwriting :—

"All beginning is difficult, therefore let us commence with the 'Rheingold.'

"R. W."

Amongst the signed portraits on the walls are those of Verdi, Hiller, Kiel, Gade, Rubinstein, Max Bruch, Brahms, Tourgenieff, Heyse, and Hamerling.

The Music-Room.

An interesting feature of the house is the fine music-room, built out in the garden beyond the main structure of the house. This finely proportioned apartment was designed by Mr. Henschel. The foundation-stone was laid by his friend, Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, R.A. Above the huge old-fashioned fireplace hangs a large crown, wrought in handsome iron-work. This prominent feature of the room is the original model, designed by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, R.A., for the statue of the Queen at Winchester. A fine lute, of the date 1726, hangs on the panel over the Broadwood grand, built for Mr. Henschel after his own design.

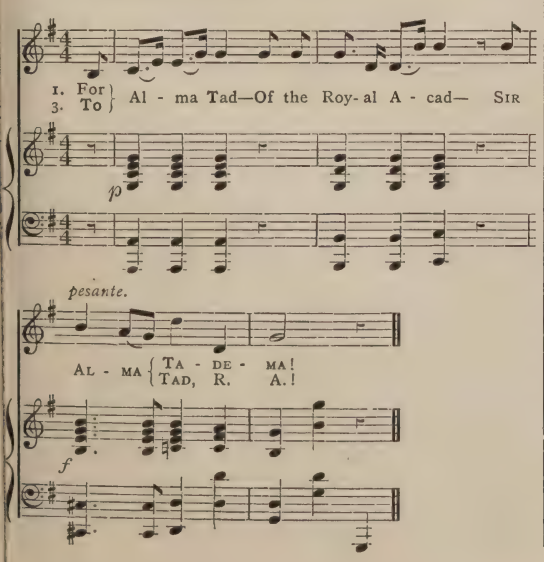
Mr. Henschel is a great lover of art. His most intimate friends are painters. Amongst his precious picture possessions are three by Alma-Tadema, original drawings and paintings by Burne Jones, Sargent, Abbey, Parsons, Boughton, and Lady Tadema; a beautiful Madonna of the Bolognese school, Lenbach's celebrated portrait of Dr. Döllinger, and Lord Leighton's original sketch for his famous "Flaming June," presented to Mr. Henschel by the great painter only four weeks before his death. Mr. Henschel possesses portraits of himself painted by Alma-Tadema, Sargent, Herkomer, and Felix Moscheles, in addition to a bust by Onslow Ford.

The walls of the house are not without specimens of Mr. Henschel's skill. The fire-place in the drawing-room contains examples of his clever draughtsmanship. These are specimens of the tiles for the reception-room of Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema's house, which were executed in Naples, after Mr. Henschel's designs. In this connection it may not be without interest to refer to the banquet given to Sir Lawrence in honour of his knighthood on November 4, 1899. For that occasion, when 176 people had met to felicitate the popular Royal Academician upon a distinction so richly merited, Mr. J. Comyns Carr wrote a song, "Carmen Tademare," which Mr. Henschel set to music. Here is the third verse, followed by the music of the refrain, which was slightly altered to meet the verbal exigencies of each stanza :—

For he's dubbed R.A., and some bad men say
That no damning praise were fainter!
Yet scour the length of our land to-day
And ye'll find no worthier painter!
Then let us all as sober men,
Since the chance falls only now and then,
Put one more glass away,—
To Alma Tad——
Of the Royal Acad——
Sir Alma Tad, R.A.



OLD GLASS.

Mr. Henschel is the happy possessor of a very fine collection of old glass of all styles, periods, and nationalities, some of the choicest specimens of which he shows with natural pride. The collecting of glass has been a hobby with him for many years, and his frequent Continental journeys have facilitated the picking up of some unique specimens of the glass-blower's handiwork. Here is a goblet which stands two feet high, and which has probably served the purpose of some ceremonial beverage receptacle. A remarkably fine tumbler has in relief figures of the Twelve Apostles.

SCOTLAND.

Another of Mr. Henschel's hobbies is Scotland. For several years past Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, with their only child, "a daughter of sweet eighteen," have passed their holiday near the village of Alvie, two miles from Aviemore Junction, Inverness-shire. So enamoured is he of "the land of the mountain and the flood" that he is now building a house of his own in the Highland parish. For the past seven years he has played the organ in the Parish Kirk of Alvie, and he points with appreciative interest to two water colours of views in the neighbourhood presented to him and his wife by the villagers. "I love Scotland," says Mr. Henschel. He utters the words with such an enthusiastic emphasis on the verb that it would scarcely cause surprise to see him clad in a kilt, to learn that he had founded a McHenschel clan, or that he had even written a concerto for the bagpipes!

"WHAT IS ART?"

Count Tolstoy asks this and also answers himself, in a little book which adopts the question as its title. I am not entirely satisfied with the little book, and now intend to examine what I find therein set down. Note, however, that it is not my purpose to go with Tolstoy over the entire range of his subject, to consider his principles in relation to architecture, painting, and other forms of creative effort which have, or are supposed to have, some relation to art. The result of any such comprehensive review must needs be another little book, and there are books enow, God wot. No; I shall limit myself to the department of music, but even to deal with that clearly and properly it is needful to examine the theory of art upon which the eminent Russian author bases his superstructure. Let me then, first of all, look into that matter.

Tolstoy opens his argument by pointing out that crowds of men and women, and immense sums of money are devoted to the service of art. In this undisputed fact ordinary persons discern something for which to be thankful.

Tolstoy does not. Read what he says on the point:—

"Hundreds of thousands of people devote their lives from childhood to learning to twirl their legs rapidly (dancers), or to touch notes and strings very rapidly (musicians), or to draw with paint and represent what they see (artists), or to turn every phrase inside out and find a rhyme to every word. And these people, often very kind and clever, and capable of all sorts of useful labour, grow savage over their specialised and stupefying occupations, and become one-sided and self-complacent specialists, dull to all the serious phenomena of life, and skilful at rapidly twisting their legs, their tongues, and their fingers."

But we are bidden to believe that this "stunting of human life" is not the worst, and, by way of illustration, Tolstoy relates how he once attended an operatic rehearsal, at which the conductor, unable to get a certain passage correctly rendered, called the performers "asses," "fools," "idiots," and "swine." So, he reasons, "all this nasty folly" (meaning the opera) is prepared, not with kindly merriment, but with anger and brutal cruelty. Is art important enough to justify such sacrifices for its sake? This the author now proceeds to consider. But the very nature of art, he declares, is an undecided question even among those devoted to it. The critics do not agree; the artists mutually exclude and destroy themselves; the various schools of poetry disown each other, and the mages disown all. So it is among novelists, actors, painters, and musicians. The more need, on this account, for light and leading. But our author must first use the well-worn device of putting up straw-stuffed effigies for the pleasure of knocking them down. He begins with Mr. Ordinary Man, who, when asked "What is art?" replies, "Art is architecture, sculpture, painting, music, and poetry in all its forms." This effigy is hurled over at once, and Mr. Ordinary Educated Man stands in its place. He is made to say that "Art is such activity as produces beauty." Against this definition Tolstoy puts his best lance in rest. "What is this beauty? How is it defined? What is it?" He argues the matter at the outset, not so much to give us a clear and simple definition as to show that though a good thing must be beautiful, that which is beautiful is not necessarily good. Art presupposes the good; the beautiful is not essential to it; indeed, the idea of beauty in art "confuses the whole matter." A statement so opposed to general belief naturally astonishes, and perhaps I had better put the case in the author's own words:—

"To the question, What is this art, to which is offered up the labour of millions, the very lives of men, and even morality itself? we have extracted replies from the existing æsthetics, which all amount to this: that the aim of art is beauty, that beauty is recognised by the enjoyment it gives, and that artistic enjoyment is a good and important thing because it is enjoyment. In a word, that enjoyment is good because it is enjoyment. Thus, what is considered the definition of art, is no definition at all, but only a shuffle to justify existing art. Therefore, however strange it may seem to say so, in spite of the mountains of books written about art, no exact definition of art has been constructed. And the reason of this is that the conception of art has been based on the conception of beauty."

To proclaim the severance of beauty (that which pleases) from the essential nature of art is to sound the trumpet of revolution. But I will not stop to contest the points in which Tolstoy's negative and destructive statements appear to me dubious or manifestly incorrect. The positive and constructive lie ahead, and to them I hasten.

Tolstoy approaches the definition stage of his argument distinctly as a humanitarian. Many others have done the same, without first disturbing orthodox faith; believing that all art has an ennobling and civilising influence. But the Russian author pushes the humanitarian feeling to wholly unprecedented lengths. He declares, for example: "In order to define art, it is necessary, first of all, to cease to consider it as a means of pleasure, and to consider it as one of the conditions of human life. Viewing it in this way, we cannot fail to observe that art is one of the means of intercourse between man and man. Every work of art causes the receiver to enter into a certain kind of relationship both with him who produced, or is producing the art, and with all those who simultaneously, previously, or subsequently receive the same artistic impression." Taking these words simply, reading nothing into them, they must be accepted as true. There is a further statement: "Art begins when one person, with the object of joining another or others to himself in one and the same feeling, expresses that feeling by certain external indications." This sounds well, but let us guard against error

Tolstoy states generally that "Art begins when one person, with the object of joining another, or others, to himself in one and the same feeling," &c. Undoubtedly, art may so begin, but does our author mean that it begins only thus? And are we to regard as art that only which originated in the manner set forth? These questions are much more important than they may at first sight appear, for, as will be seen in due course, the aim of Tolstoy is to confine art within the limits of ethics, and to give it an exclusively ethical mission. As regards Music, with which, here, I am alone concerned, nothing is more certain than that many of its finest and noblest examples were, in origin, absolutely independent of a desire to "infect" anybody. The Count seems to be aware of this, and "backs down" somewhat from his original standpoint, saying, "And it is also art if a man feels or imagines to himself feelings of delight, gladness, sorrow, despair, courage, or despondency, and the transition from one to another of these feelings, and expresses these feelings by sounds, so that the hearers are infected by them, and experience them as they were experienced by the composer." How are we to reconcile the two statements? In the one case, Tolstoy argues that art begins only when the object of the artist is to convey his own feeling to others. In the second place, that is also art which attains the end of infection although such a result is not in the mind of the artist. If I have fairly stated our author's ideas, there is obviously something to reconcile; but from the general tenor of his argument it may fairly be assumed that the first of the two statements—i.e., that which insists upon a conscious design to "infect," is the true expression of his thought. Assuming the validity of this argument, what follows? Surely that all music composed under a creative impulse, which demanded gratification and contemplated nothing beyond, is not art! I need scarcely argue the existence of a creative impulse. Have we not repeatedly seen it—more especially in the case of Schubert—achieving work after work which the composer had no hope of ever bringing before the public, and by means of which he could neither benefit himself nor others? These are instances of "unconscious necessity," to borrow a term from Richard Wagner. Music is not exclusively the child of calculation. It often sings as the birds sing, and no more than they can keep silence.

I am interested to find Tolstoy admitting that art includes not only the expression of a man's actual feeling, but also that of imagined emotion. He was bound to do so, or leave little art to be argued about. But even here I find statements that do not exactly dovetail. Having said, "And it is also art if a man feels or imagines to himself feelings," &c., our author declares, with all the emphasis of italics, as follows: "To evoke in oneself a feeling one has once experienced, and having evoked it in oneself, then, by means of movements, lines, colours, sounds, or forms expressed in words, so as to transmit that feeling that others may experience the same feeling—this is the activity of art." I wonder if the confusion set up in my mind by Count Tolstoy's conflicting statements is due to an infection transmitted by a confusion in himself? Here we have it, first, that it is art if a man imagines feelings and communicates them; second, that the feelings must have been "once experienced." Which is to be the basis of art—imagination or recollection? Apparently, recollection, for, in another italicised passage, we are told that the artist hands on to others "the feelings he has lived through."

It is to be observed, further, that our author bases all art, and therefore all the art of music, upon emotion, and upon that kind of emotion which seeks to reproduce itself in others. It follows that musical works which are emotional neither in origin nor effect cannot be examples of art. This at once extinguishes the claim of all compositions which exploit the technical resources of music, as, for example, the fugues of Bach and Handel (with some exceptions), such overtures as that to "The Messiah," and an untold number of other works, produced prior to the beginning of romanticism in music, as we now understand it. In many of these cases, to say the least, there is no question of emotional origin, expression, or purpose. They are exercises in the forms of music; they are purely abstract in their nature, and touch nothing outside themselves. We value them according to the measure of skill and knowledge that enters into their workmanship, and they occupy in the intellectual and, so to speak, manipulative phases of music a position analogous to that of the emotional masterpieces of our own day in their domain, yet, according to Tolstoy, such compositions do not satisfy the conditions of art, and are, therefore, not art. Following up this conclusion, to what category of existing things must we assign Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor, or Handel's music in the "Amen" chorus, which is no more essentially expressive of "Amen" than it is of any other Hebrew ejaculation?

To sum up the position of the argument as far as it has gone, Count Tolstoy declares:—

I. That Art and what we generally understand as Beauty are not necessarily connected.

II. That not Beauty, but the Good is the end of Art.

III. That Art (artistic activity?) begins when a man seeks to inspire in another the feelings, real or imaginary, which he has himself felt or fancied.

Nos. I. and II. will be more fully considered later, but to No. III. it has already been objected that in music there is often no such purpose as "infection," and that much great music is connected with emotion neither in origin, character, nor purpose. All such works Tolstoy's theory "rules out." Joseph Bennett.

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

By Edwin H. Lemare.

In recording the result of my own practical experience in playing organ accompaniments, I can only hope that it may be in some way helpful to all who are interested in this subject. To accompany the service in a dignified and reverential manner is a matter of supreme importance. It is difficult, in a short article, to do full justice to such an extensive subject. I will, therefore, give a few hints for the benefit of those organists who may perhaps have few opportunities of hearing really good church services, and, on the other hand, have not had the advantage of a thorough training in organ playing and accompanying a choral service. It is surprising, when one comes to think of it, that there are few who succeed, at any rate when accompanying the church service, in making their accompaniments interesting in themselves, apart from the far higher duty of trying to illustrate and deepen the meaning of the words by an accompaniment which should be both sympathetic and in good taste, without being unduly dramatic.

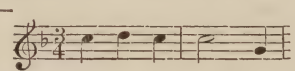
Take the Psalms, for example. In how many churches is it possible to hear a single word sung by the choir? and even if the words are pronounced distinctly and pointed properly, the organ is frequently played so loudly as to overpower the voices. One becomes conscious that the organist is under the impression that this is the right occasion for him to make a personal display, instead of keeping the organ in the background, and making it an accompaniment to the choir. The organ should accompany the choir; it is not the function of the choir to accompany the organ.

I am quite aware that in many churches the keyboard is placed in such a position—viz., with so much of the organ projecting over the player that it is impossible for the organist to know the effect he is producing, or whether the balance of choir and organ is such as he would like if he were a listener in the church; but in such cases the difficulty might be avoided by taking every opportunity of hearing another player at the keys, say at the weekly full rehearsal. He would then be able to find out the relative power of each stop and the most effective combinations to use when he himself accompanies the choir. This is a point of the utmost importance. Every organist should study carefully not only the general effect of his instrument, but the power of each individual stop as it is heard in the church.

Now, let us suppose we are "Seated one day at the organ" and quietly considering, from the organist's point of view, one or two matters which seem to be the most essential qualifications of a good church organist. We will first of all discuss the voluntary.

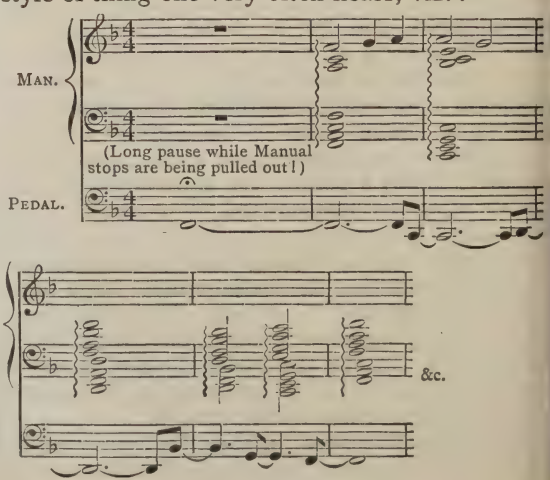
The common fault one finds with the majority of improvised voluntaries is their utter aimlessness and want of systematic treatment. They remind one of the schoolboy's well-known essay on the horse: "The horse is a noble animal, and so is the cow. My father once had three cows," &c. For instance, one may hear an organist start his voluntary, say in the key of C, and, before he has treated you to a very few bars, he finds himself in the key of D. He then takes you off to F, followed by B flat, and, by the time the choir have finished their preliminary devotions, he has settled down in the key of E flat! If organists who meander about like this would first of all drill themselves into the ordinary sixteen-bar metre, and bear in mind the first phrase throughout, they could, with practice, improvise a piece in much better form; moreover, they would gradually develop a consciousness of form which will come out in their more elaborate efforts.

The best form of exercise is to take a sheet of music paper and rule out sixteen bars, and say four extra bars for a tonic pedal at the end. Mark over the eighth bar "Modulate into dominant"; at the twelfth bar, "Pass through subdominant"; at the sixteenth bar, "Return to tonic"; and then add "Tonic pedal, four bars." Supposing we take this phrase as an example:—



According to this plan it could be worked out something like the following:—

How much better this would be than the style of thing one very often hears, viz.:—



The pedals coming first, the chords being spread, and, worst of all, the doubling of the thirds in the bass, are no exaggeration of such inflictions. Space will not permit me to say more on the subject of improvising at present, but I should like to lay stress on the following, viz. :—

(1) Practise in four-part harmony.

(2) Make your first phrase recur again and again in the various parts.

(3) Stick to sixteen-bar phrases for some time until you begin to acquire the feeling for the natural form.

(4) Don't double your thirds, or notes that require resolution.

In making suggestions for accompanying a church service, so much, of course, depends on the choir. I mean whether they have been properly drilled to sing independently of the organ, or whether they rely on the organ to keep them in tune and give them the various leads, &c. I will presume that your choir has been carefully trained by yourself, and it is quite immaterial to them whether the blower goes to sleep, or the new curate sings all the responses half a semitone sharp! Let us take the Psalms, which are in some respects the most difficult part of the service to accompany. If it is necessary to play the chant over, do so on a soft organ, say the Choir, with soft 8 and 4-ft. stops, and without pedals.

One is liable to use too much 16-ft. work in accompanying voices. Personally, I hardly ever use 16-ft. stops on the manuals when accompanying the Psalms. The effect is as bad as doubling all your parts, and reminds one of being in the congregation and sitting next to someone who sings the melody an octave, and very often two octaves too low! Make the choir give the expression to the words, and let your accompaniment be simply a help and support.

If you play a solo on a separate row of keys, choose the tenor part if it is interesting in itself. One can, of course, make the outline different from that of the voices, and thus give a very good effect. Vary your accompaniment as regards registering and change of manuals as frequently as the different sentiment of the words seems to require; but do not be grotesque or unduly dramatic. When all modern organs have the Choir enclosed in a separate swell-box and both the Choir and Swell controlled by balanced pedals, endless varieties will be opened up in the way of accompanying; moreover, in playing organ solos, it will then be possible to put as much expression into the accompaniment as into the solo played on another row of keys.

Avoid as much as possible any rallentandi, except, perhaps, after the Gloria of the last Psalm; they are quite unnecessary in the course of the Psalms and do not in any way add to the effect. If you find that your choir-boys are beginning to sing flat, do not try to pull them up by using more organ; but choose a stop of the Claribel or open Flute quality, and play the melody as a solo in the treble part. More organ encourages them to sing louder, but not necessarily in tune. If, on the other hand, your choir are beginning to sharpen in pitch, immediately soften your accompaniment and add 16-ft. stops. I usually find this has the effect of making everyone sing more softly and consequently better in tune. Make your accompaniment as legato as possible and do not take your hands off the keys at the asterisks in the Psalter. This practice, I fear, is by no means uncommon; it is only justifiable when there is a slight misunderstanding on the part of the choir in regard to the pointing.

The following suggestions might also be worth considering:—

(1) Do not use too much pedal, or 16-ft. stops on the manuals.

(2) If you have a 32-ft. stop don't get too fond of it!

(3) Be very careful in filling up your parts, and look well after your thirds and sevenths.

(4) Do not play in more than five parts on the Great Diapasons, as the tone is too ponderous to allow of this.

(5) Remember the remarks concerning the spreading of chords already alluded to.

(7) Let the choir have a verse here and there to themselves. An obbligato on some solo stop, while the ordinary accompaniment is thus temporarily suspended, may be added with good effect.

(8) Do not always have your "Swell to Great" coupler out. Give your Great Diapasons a chance by themselves.

(9) Do not use your Swell Oboe when playing in chords. The character of tone is not suitable, unless it happens to be a very "round" and softly voiced stop, in which case one might use it occasionally in this way.

(10) Use the different families of tone in your organ, sometimes unmixed. For instance: (i.) 16, 8 and 4-ft. Gedacts, or closed wood quality; (ii.) 8 and 4-ft. Gambas, or string-toned stops; (iii.) Reeds alone; (iv.) Diapasons alone, and so on.

There is much more to be said regarding the accompaniment to the Psalms, but as this greatly depends upon the way in which the choir has been trained, I must leave it until I have an opportunity of discussing the matter of Choir Training, which I hope to do in these columns later on. Next month we will consider the accompaniment to the Creed, and playing Anthems, &c., from the ordinary pianoforte arrangement.

* This bad habit has become very general owing to the Swell pedal being placed at the extreme right-hand end of the pedal board, where it is impossible to work it with the left foot. Also, with the usual "pump-handle" arrangement, one must keep one's right foot on it if one wants any gradation of tone between the closed Swell and the open box. Anything more clumsy and inartistic than this old-fashioned arrangement cannot be imagined.

ENGLISH MUSIC IN DRESDEN.

With a view of my keeping perfectly en rapport, more especially as to vocal music, in one of the most musical centres in Germany, I recently spent some weeks in Dresden, a city I have visited on former occasions, and in which I have had the happiness of becoming acquainted with many congenial spirits. Among the first pleasures of this, my recent visit, was to hear Sir Hubert Parry's remarkably fine Trio in E minor, which, wherever it is performed, invariably meets with the warmest admiration and sympathy. Such was the appreciation it received on this occasion that it is to be performed again, and by the Dresden Philharmonic Society.

Dresden, as everyone knows, is richly possessed of many architectural as well as other art beauties, the chief of which is its wealth of museums and picture galleries. Here is to be found the world-renowned picture of "La Notte" (the Holy Night), by Correggio, which, with its opening heavens and descent of angels towards the Holy Family, attains to the sublimity of Handel's "Hallelujah," and is of itself sufficient to make priceless the great picture gallery of Dresden.

The art of music finds the most numerous adherents in Dresden; but while classical and chamber concerts have their many admirers, the universal taste is opera, of which the répertoire, so far as my information goes, is almost unlimited. Hofrath von Schuch, the conductor, is a man, so to speak, born to his work; and whatever the opera—be it the most classical or the most popular—his rendering of it is as if all his life he had had no other to conduct. It matters not whether it be "Siegfried" or "Fra Diavolo," the utmost perfection is invariably secured. His broad views, his precision, his general picturesqueness—which may be regarded as some of his most striking traits—all combine to justify the opinion that the opera over which he presides is about the most perfect in Germany. I understand that he has been asked by Grau to go to America to conduct the opera. We certainly ought to have him in London; and I endorse the opinion of many in the wish that we may welcome him at Covent Garden. Apropos of royal recognition of his merits, it may be mentioned that a year or two since he had the pleasure of receiving from the King of Saxony His Majesty's portrait set in a frame of twenty bank notes, each of the value of a thousand marks.

It would be a great mistake to assume that all the greatest German vocal artists visit this country. Nor is it needful to give the names of the several fine singers attached to the opera. But my pen seems to force me to write the name of Fräulein Therese Malten, a prima donna whose every impersonation is a musical and dramatic perfection. (Happily when I left Dresden she was well on the road to recovery after a very serious illness.) Nor should I be doing another great artist justice were I not to say that the Hans Sachs of Herr Scheidemantel is among the most complete representations of that character I have ever witnessed. In fact, I consider this artist unique in his versatility, and I trust that we may have his presence in London this season and hear him in some of his other famous rôles. It can hardly be out of place in speaking of Herr Scheidemantel to make reference to his villa, which is quite the old German type of residence, everything being in thorough keeping; it is entirely of a character to suit a genial worthy like Hans Sachs. With regard to the artists in general at the Dresden Opera House, I must content myself with saying that every embodiment I witnessed seemed to be a conception carefully thought out and developed.

I turn now to speak of the Conservatorium, which, in a word, is what might be expected in such a city as Dresden. It is in a very flourishing condition. The head of the establishment is Herr Krantz, son of the former principal; but Frau Hofrath Krantz still takes a great interest in the work which her late husband did so much to bring to its present state of usefulness. The affairs of the Conservatorium are managed by a committee of musicians of high attainments, including Herr Hofrath Draeseke, regarded as the greatest contrapuntist now living. His personality is such that every musician must regard him with supreme interest. His originality, his general skill, his dramatic force, and his inspiration have been abundantly proved in his opera "Herrat," produced some years since, and in the opera "Gutrune." Interesting symphonies have flowed from his pen, notably the one in F. "Cristus," a trilogy, is a great work, which is now finished, and when it is performed should prove, I do not hesitate to say, an epoch-marking masterpiece. The choral and orchestral classes of the Conservatorium are really excellent, the latter being under the direction of Herr Rappoldi. So strong were my expressions of approval of the choral class on a former occasion, that at my suggestion the Director immediately assented to putting into rehearsal some English works. But, alas! death put a stop to the fulfilment of his promise. However, I have the assurance of his son, the present Director, that if I will send him some English works by our foremost writers of choral compositions, he will not fail to make himself familiar with them for the purpose of their being put into rehearsal.

It is my pleasure to think that in Dresden, at least, there is the "open door." The fact that a young English artist is received on the ground of her own merit, and free from the prejudice of nationality, is in the highest degree satisfactory. Miss Agnes Nicholls, a student of the Royal College of Music, is a case in point. She, at a bound, won the approval of the most enlightened musicians and critics. The Neueste Nachrichten, in a eulogistic paragraph, strongly advised her on no account to leave Dresden without singing at an important concert, being fully assured of the great success she would achieve. The opportunity arose, for an invitation from the Directors of the Conservatorium came to her to sing as a "guest" at the great public concert they were about to give in the "Musenhaus." There can be no doubt that a reception such as Miss Nicholls secured, some of her songs being redemanded with enthusiasm, reflects credit on the Royal College of Music. She sang as encores songs by Ludwig Hartman, gems in themselves which should be made known in England. The criticisms, too, were most favourable, the Dresdner Zeitung finishing by saying that "We shall be delighted to find her name again on the programme," and the Neueste Nachrichten predicted a great future for the charming young artist.

Before concluding, I must mention two incidents. The first was a delightful and interesting sleighing party among the Bohemian mountains. After journeying for some hours our sleigh stopped at a lonely inn, when suddenly our party was attracted by the sound of a violin. On looking up we saw on the mountain side a man resting from his wood-cutting labours and fondly scraping his fiddle. What could he be playing? Was it a Bohemian air? No!—it was a tune from Sullivan's "Mikado!" Among the pine-covered mountains, all white with snow, this music, accompanied by the tinkling of the sleigh bells, had for us an inexpressible charm.

Being near Prague we pushed forward and found ourselves in the historic rooms of the "Blauen Stern." On the same evening we visited the German theatre, where we heard a most interesting performance of "Tannhäuser." One Sunday I had the immeasurable pleasure of a long talk with Antonin Dvorák. His improvement in his mastery of the English language is very great, and he was in jubilant spirits owing to the success with which his last opera had lately been received. He is looking forward with pleasant anticipation to a visit to England this spring, when he is to conduct some new orchestral works at one of the Philharmonic concerts.

The second incident was at the hotel where we stayed in Dresden. A large party of Germans who had espoused the interests of the Boers were dining near us, giving vent to their sentiments in the singing of a Boer hymn or anthem, whereupon Miss Agnes Nicholls was asked to sing "God save the Queen." She acceded to the request and sang, as from her soul, the National Anthem in such a style as to bring the opposing party into our salon, and they were induced to join lustily in the chorus of our anthem. Thus we should like all pro-Boers and Boers to do—and may they very soon do it!

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

There is no variation in regard to the success which attends Mr. Elgar's "Variations." Herein is no "enigma." Wherever and whenever these orchestral dainties are performed they naturally charm the ears of those who listen to them. Under the fostering care of Dr. Richter the work has recently conquered the strongholds of hardware and cotton—Birmingham and Manchester to wit. In both these centres of musical activity the "Variations" and their composer have been received during the past month with genuine appreciation and enthusiasm. As with the London critics ,the initials at the head of each variation seem to have been the initial difficulty of the provincial gentlemen of the press in enigmatising--if the word may be allowed—the conception of the composition. Especially is this the case in regard to that mysterious individual, "Nimrod" (No. 9), who is thus speculated upon by one of the critical fraternity: "No. 9, perhaps, refers to a mighty hunter (Nimrod); but we rejoice to record that no tarantivys are heard, though perhaps Dr. Richter, who was once an orchestral horn-player, even as the composer was a violinist, would have taken especial interest in the feature. The key, however, is E flat, which is in itself suspicious. Mr. Elgar's 'Nimrod' appears to be enjoying a peaceful old age, marked by Handelian aspirations. A pearl in a string of pearls." This is exceedingly imaginative. Supposing, however, that the veteran "Nimrod" is really flesh and blood, and that he is an out and out Wagnerite, what must be the old gentleman's feelings in regard to these deductions? But the question is: Has anyone yet succeeded in hunting "Nimrod" down?

The prospectus of the new series of Symphony Concerts at the Queen's Hall is a document that caused us to rub our eyes. It did not contain a single specimen of the Russian school, but, on the other hand, quite a respectable selection from the works of our native composers! Have our protests against the anti-British policy of the Queen's Hall authorities availed, and are the classics, as well as our own representative composers, to come by their own at last? It is devoutly to be hoped; though we would strongly disapprove of any attempt to ignore the vigorous life and sturdy growth of the great musical forces lying even now more or less undeveloped in those Slavonic races to whom the future—not only in matters musical—will very likely belong. There is a vast difference between Mr. Wood's former infatuation with everything Russian, good, bad, or indifferent, and a reasonable appreciation of the fact that Tschaïkowsky was a genius, and that the "young Russians" do occasionally produce something worthy of our concert-givers' attention.

"Mynheer Vandunck," one of Bishop's popular glees, has a curious history, which, we believe, is not generally known. Here it is, as related by the composer himself in one of his lectures, the autograph manuscript of which is in the possession of Dr. Henry Watson, of Salford, to whose kindness we are indebted for the loan of this treasure of "The Henry Watson Musical Library," Manchester.

"An opera ["The Law of Java"] which I had composed had gone through nearly all its rehearsals, and was within only three or four days of being produced, when the proprietor of the theatre informed me that a young man had applied to him earnestly soliciting an engagement as a singer. Moreover, he particularly requested that he might be allowed to make his first dramatic attempt in this very opera which was about to be presented. The proprietor told him that it was impossible to accede to his request—that the theatre was already overburdened with engagements, and, above all, that there was no opportunity whatever for a place being found for him in the opera. The young man pleaded hard, saying that if it was only a glee in which he could take a part he would be contented, and begging that at least a trial might be made of his abilities if only for one night.

"The proprietor, knowing the teacher of the young man, and having confidence in his report of him, was inclined to relent: but there was no glee in the opera! What was to be done? I was told that if the poet would write the words, and I could compose the music in so very limited a time, that no further objection would be made. In short, the glee was completed, in which, by the way, I had written two bass solos, as I wished to show off the young man's voice to the best advantage in my power, though up to that moment I had neither heard nor seen him.

"On the morning of the performance of the opera, the glee was rehearsed. Immediately I had my doubts, and feared that a great mistake had been made. In fact, in addition to his other defects, the young man's voice was scarcely audible. I hoped it would be better at night. It was worse! I was told the next day that it was very doubtful whether more than twenty persons in the theatre had heard him sing a single note. Of course, he was not allowed to appear again. Nevertheless he entreated to be retained and offered to stay for only a few shillings a week. But the proprietor, who told him that he would be much too dear at any price, was inexorable.

"One word more and my story is done. The glee to which I have referred was 'Mynheer Vandunck.' The young man of whom I have spoken was Mr. Henry Phillips!—who now often laughs at, and heartily enjoys the recollection of his first attempt at singing in the musical drama."

"The Law of Java," the libretto by George Colman, the younger, was first performed at Covent Garden Theatre, May 11, 1822. The original play-bill states: "Never acted. A Play in 3 Acts (interspersed with music), called The Law of Java. The overture and musick composed by Mr. Bishop." The principal lady vocalists were Miss M. Tree and "Kitty" Stephens. "Mynheer Vandunck" was sung at the rising of the curtain, when "Dutch soldiers are discovered seated round a table, and drinking." The names of these three imbibing Hollander warriors are not given in the play-bill; but the alto and tenor singers were Goulden and James Kendrick Pyne, grandfather of the present organist of Manchester Cathedral. A contemporary notice of the first performance of "The Law of Java" reads thus: "The music is unequal. Some of the commencing airs hung rather heavily on the audience; but as the scene advanced the composer seemed to gather fire, which burned in a flame before the close." This metaphor of the critic, naturally developed, would give the impression that "the play, interspersed with music," must have ended in smoke! But perhaps the good man did not want to throw too much cold water upon the work at its initial representation. At all events, the glee "Mynheer Vandunck"—which, by the way, is not even mentioned in the notice—has survived the flames, the play, and Henry Phillips, who was the curious cause of its composition.

"An old subscriber"—it is always interesting to hear from any such—sends us the following "specimen of criticism which," he says, "we are compelled to put up with in this town of Nashville, Tenessee, U.S.A., having 110,000 inhabitants." It forms part of a notice upon a pianoforte recital given by M. Godowsky, and the critic displays his high falutinism thus glamorously:—

The Spanish Rhapsodie of Liszt was bizarre, rhythmic, melodic, lovely, sparkling, ballooning, tip-toeing, and finally "over the garden wall" into a bower of bejewelled, staccato, diamond-pointed revelrie, thirty-second notes, each of equal grace and meteoric splendour, suddenly disappeared into silence. The picture vanished; up rose a small figure; this caught shape of Erda, capable of such artistic prowess seemed not to be conscious of his high descent from the stars. He even appeared to assume that he, too, was one of the ordinary mortals.

Let this be noticed. Well constructed implements for piano playing gave him success. The forearm flexous, metacorpal joints and the lumbricalis muscles were all in proper shape to fulfil their destinies. The five mysteries of the right hand and the five mysteries of the left hand were equally imbued with ready cunning and wonderful skill to interpret the mystical, congenial, well-understood language of the upper regions of paradise. My opinion regarding phrasing and Rubato were well satisfied in the performance of the morning. An uncultivated Rubato is repulsive. A mere attempt to phrase ridiculous, faults not to be mentioned in connection with an artist, except by way of contrast, to warn those pseudo-artistic loafers who, with equal imbecility and self-esteem attempt compositions not made for them.

'Tis true that the above mode of expression cannot be considered idealistic in regard to soberness of style. But notwithstanding its shortcomings, or "tallness" in this respect, it possesses one redeeming feature—it is readable. Can this be said of all that is supposed to pass for musical criticism on this side of the pond?

A contributor to the Neue Zürcher Zeitung, having occasion recently to look over some old volumes of the Allgemeine Polizei Anzeiger (general police news) of Berne, chanced upon a portrait, fairly well executed, underneath which was printed: "Richard Wagner, formerly Capellmeister, political fugitive from Dresden." Another part of the same issue of that interesting journal, under the heading of "Politically dangerous persons," contains the following notice, dated June 16, 1853: "Wagner, Richard, ex-capellmeister of Dresden, one of the most prominent adherents of the revolutionary party, and against whom a 'hue and cry' has been issued on account of his participation in the Dresden revolt of May, 1849, is, according to information received, about to leave Zurich, his present abode, with the intention of re-entering German territory. For the purpose of his apprehension, a portrait is here given of the said Wagner, who, in the event of his carrying out his design, should be arrested and delivered up to the Stadt-Gericht, at Dresden." Students of Wagner's life are acquainted with the terms of the "Steckbrief," or hue-and-cry document here alluded to, which the Saxon Government issued in 1849. But the above notice by the Berne authorities is interesting, as showing the extent to which the movements and supposed intentions of the composer of "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" were being watched even in free, republican Switzerland.

The proposal of the Musical Association to ally itself with the "Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft" is distinctly to be commended, as calculated to encourage artistic intercourse between leading men of different nationalities, a proceeding which can scarcely fail to be mutually beneficial. The immediate advantages to those members of the Association who join the new Society will be that they will receive the monthly and quarterly journal containing papers on the progress of music from reliable sources, with a list of all the important new publications on the art and other privileges pertaining to members of the Society. Papers on English musical doings are to be included in published proceedings of the Society. Mr. Gilbert Webb, at the recent meeting, raised the question concerning whom these communications would be expected from. His enquiry was decidedly pertinent, as those which have already appeared were full of errors. It is to be hoped that Dr. Maclean's proposal that all important communications should be submitted to the English committee of the Musical Association branch will be adopted. Unless, however, a recognised English authority is appointed from Berlin to report on musical doings here and act as editor of the English articles, we confess to misgivings as to our art being adequately represented. The organisation, however, is at present so incomplete that, although planned on a most comprehensive scale, further criticism may well be postponed.

The Handel Festival is announced to be held at the Crystal Palace, as usual, in June. But an important alteration has been decided upon in regard to the days of the week upon which the performances will take place. Hitherto they have been given on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; but it is felt that it will better suit the convenience of the public if the days are changed to Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, and this the directors have decided to do. The dates of the forthcoming Handel Festival will therefore be as follows:—

Grand Full Rehearsal ..	Saturday, June 16.
"Messiah"	Tuesday, June 19.
Selection	Thursday, June 21.
"Israel in Egypt"	Saturday, June 23.

A prize of £20 is offered by an anonymous donor for "the best quintet for violin, viola, violoncello, double bass, and pianoforte." The work must be entirely original and must not have been previously performed in public. Moreover, it "shall not be written as a solo for one or two instruments, a sufficiently important part being given to each." The adjudicators are Mr. Edward German and Mr. Hamish MacCunn, with Sir Alexander Mackenzie as the referee. The manuscripts are to be sent in by January 18, 1901, to Dr. Yorke Trotter, 22, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, who will probably supply the detailed conditions of the competition.

The Philharmonic Society has issued its prospectus for the coming season—the eighty-eighth year of the existence of this old Society. The actual novelties announced are Mr. F. H. Cowen's new Concertstück in B flat for pianoforte and orchestra, to be played by M. Paderewski; an "Ouverture Dramatique" by Mr. Otto Manns; and a new orchestral work, entitled "Miniatures of an every-day comedy," by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, and conducted by the composer. Other distinguishing features will be performances of Mr. Granville Bantock's orchestral scene "Jagannaut," from "Kehama"; Berlioz's symphonic poem "Harold in Italy"; Mr. Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," to be sung by Miss Clara Butt and conducted by the composer; and Mr. Walter Handel Thorley's symphonic poem "Macbeth." Dr. Antonin Dvorák will conduct the first performance of some new orchestral works, and Mr. Edward Lloyd will, alas! make his last appearance at the Society's concerts. Not the least interesting feature of the season will be the performance by Herr Moriz Rosenthal of Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A. Mr. F. H. Cowen, who returns to his old post of conductor, may be sure of a hearty welcome upon his reappearance at the first concert on the 8th inst.

The regulations of the French authorities on the subject of musical performances at the approaching Paris Exhibition have reached the Royal Commission. Their general purport is as follows:—

Musical works and performances of all nations participating in the exhibition will be admissible. Musical societies, both French and foreign, will perform in the grand hall of the Trocadero, and chamber music will be performed in the small hall. Musical societies will organize their concerts at their own expense and at their own risk. Foreign musical societies can only be admitted on the guarantee and recommendation of the Commissioner-General of the nation to which they belong. Applications must reach the Commissariat-Général before April 15. Foreign Commissioners-General are desired to ensure that the music performed by foreign societies is specially representative of the nationality of the performers. The official orchestra can be placed at the disposition of foreign nations who wish to be represented by compositions. There will also be competitions of choral societies (orphéons) and brass and other wind bands. Foreign societies wishing to compete must apply through the Commissioner-General of their country, and their applications must reach the Commissariat-Général in Paris before the 1st inst. The competitions of the choral societies will take place in July, and those of the brass bands in August. The prizes will consist of crowns, palms, and medals.

Westminster is a place not unknown. But can the same be said of New Westminster? Where is it? asks the man in the street. "It is in British Columbia, and is noted for its great salmon-canning establishments." But has New Westminster any claim to musical distinction? It has! There is an excellent choral society in that far-away place, which recently performed Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," under the skilful direction of Mr. A. E. White. In that popular work there is a beautiful tenor solo; but at the New Westminster performance the gentleman to whom the song was assigned was unfortunately too ill to sing it. With that ever resourceful adaptability so characteristic of our Colonial kith and kin, the air was played on the clarinet! Was there ever, under the circumstances, a more justifiable impromptu "Song without words"? We shall be glad to hear of further news of the doings of these musical New Westminsterians.

Subjoined are a few more answers extracted from musical examination papers, which have been kindly furnished by a correspondent:—

Slentando.—In a leaning manner.
Con duolo.—To be performed by two performers. With two parts.
Strepitoso.—Lightly.
L'istesso.—Listless.
Perdendosi.—Gradually louder and faster.
Bass.—From the word "burden" meaning to sustain the upper parts.
Poco Stretto.—Lightly strained and gathered up.
Doppio.—With grace.
E poi.—And heavily.
Subito.—Subdued voice.
Tre corde.—A chord to be divided into three separate notes.

There is no echo organ in the new Willis instrument in the Royal Academy of Music. But a distant echo of the opening function has reached us. During the interval, one of the professor-performers, in vainly endeavouring to discover the whereabouts of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, was heard to exclaim, "Where is the Principal?" "The Principal!" replied an irrepressible ex-student, "the principal is in the great organ, of course." This remark put a stop to any further enquiry, and order was completely restored when Sir Alexander appeared.

Another echo from Tenterden Street has mysteriously found its way (sotto voce molto) into the office of The Musical Times: "That many of the present-day patriotic songs are patri-idiotic!"

The novelties announced to be produced at the Crystal Palace during the second six concerts of the forty-fourth annual series of Saturday concerts, extending from the 24th ult. to the 31st inst., are as follows:—New scena, "Cleopatra" (specially composed for and sung by Miss Clara Butt), by Frances Allitsen; Symphonic poem (after Edgar Allen Poe's poem "The Raven"), by Josef Holbrooke; and Symphony, "Walt Whitman," by William Henry Bell.

Dr. George J. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral, was married, on the 20th ult., to Miss Marion Ruston, daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Ruston, J.P., D.L., formerly M.P. for Lincoln, and of Mrs. Ruston, Monk's Manor, Lincoln. The ceremony, which took place in the Cathedral, was performed by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, assisted by the Dean and the Archdeacon. Sir George Martin, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, who presided at the organ, played Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March, Meyerbeer's "Coronation" March, and the Introduction to the 3rd Act of "Lohengrin." As the bridal procession passed from the Galilee porch along the South transept and entered the Choir, the hymn "O perfect love" was sung to a tune composed for the occasion by the bridegroom. While the register was being signed the choir gave a beautiful rendering of Brahms's "How lovely is Thy dwelling-place," and as the wedding party departed Sir George Martin played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." After the ceremony, Mrs. Ruston held a reception at Monk's Manor, and later in the afternoon the newly married pair left for London, en route for the Riviera, where the honeymoon will be spent. The presents included a silver punch bowl from the Lincoln Musical Society, of which Dr. Bennett is the honorary conductor.

Mr. T. H. Collinson, Organist of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, sends us the following personal recollections of his old master, Dr. Armes, by way of supplement to the biographical article on the Professor which appeared in our last issue. Mr. Collinson writes:—

You have, I fear, been somewhat baffled by the severely modest reserve of your "subject." Allow me to add a few recollections of a master, my relations with whom were—on one side, at any rate—a case of "love at first sight," if such a sentiment may be allowed as appearing between two individuals of the sterner sex. Yes, it was "love at first sight" in the heart of a timid boy of thirteen, who left his home for the first time to become the apprentice of an august master, and found in him a "guide, philosopher, and friend" for life. The timidity just mentioned bids me beware of saying too much as to the doctor's benevolence, for fear of incurring his ire; but those who, like myself, have been helped up the ladder by him can testify to the liberality of a teacher whose aim was to make musicians, not money.

Now for the recollections. Is not this an interesting picture? "So early in the morning," on a summer's day, the writer had the honour of assisting at the dismantling of the fine old Father Smith organ. Sitting at the old keyboard (black naturals and white sharps), my pathetic duty was to press each key in turn while the doctor with careful solicitude removed each pipe after its swan song was sung! As you have mentioned, part of this old organ has since been erected in the chapel of the University. I well remember the fine skilful improvisations of Dr. Armes on the sweet old diapasons, and I can also call to mind his coolness when, as sometimes happened, a "tumbler-coupler" gave out and caused a bad cipher; how, while accompanying the choir with one hand, he managed to take the front-board out with the other, and unscrew the sticking button. His very masterful resource was also displayed on one occasion when the principal would not push in except with "pedal action" (of a sort). His back against the choir organ case, his foot against the offending stop-handle—it went in that time.

The new era of Father Willis comes next. At the Cathedral Restoration Services some 150 picked choristers from various cathedrals assisted in rendering six choral services, the like of which have perhaps been seldom heard anywhere. Of the new organ, only nine stops on the great were ready, the pedal clavier had no pipes (like the choir, swell, and solo), but was coupled to the one manual. On this organo-harmonium, so to speak, the doctor accompanied all the elaborate music to perfection, and kept the choirs in hand without any conductor.

After my time at Durham I learnt of a clever skit published there under the guise of a (spurious) literal translation of Herodotus (Book IX., if I remember aright). In the style of the famous old-world traveller, the "translator" described in quaint and pithy language the spider-like construction of the ancient city of Dunelmus, "the temple on a hill," and the services in the temple. Now I must digress so far as to disclose the fact that Dr. Armes has long been an enthusiastic volunteer (Captain Armes) and a good shot. During the composition of his charming oratorio of "Hezekiah," done under pressure of hard working days, he was up in the morning practising at the rifle ranges. Here comes in our Herodotus translator. "During the service in the temple, a priest presseth the keys of a mighty engine, both while the priests chant and also at other times. This engine goeth by the name of the organ, the player thereof is the organist, the playing when the priests do not chant is called a voluntary, and the Organist is a Volunteer!"

Mr. Watkin Mills has now returned from his recent tour in Canada and the United States, which, according to all accounts, has been an unqualified success. Assisted only by a solo violoncellist, he gave an extensive programme, consisting of nineteen numbers, of which his own share was fifteen songs of various kinds. When five or six encores are added thereto, some idea may be formed of the exacting task he undertook. In fact, during the third week of his tour he sang no less than 103 songs in five consecutive nights! During the rendering of "The Curfew," by Monk Gould, in the Town Hall at Cobourg, a curious incident occurred. The Curfew bell in the tower of that building rang out the key-note of the song (E flat), and, moreover, it came in at the right moment, strictly in time, giving a most realistic effect, which the singer and audience were not slow to recognise. Mr. Watkin Mills found his large Canadian audiences most appreciative and demonstrative. His heart was nightly cheered by the unmistakable evidences of enthusiastic loyalty displayed towards the old country, especially when a song of a national character was rendered. For instance, when he sang "Rule, Britannia," which he repeatedly gave as an encore, the audience rose as one man and joined heart and soul in the refrain, with thrilling and never to be forgotten effect. Of course every concert terminated with "God save the Queen," sung con amore by all. No concert or public meeting is ever concluded in the Dominion without the singing of the National Anthem.

Mr. Thomas Whitney Surette, a distinguished American musician and writer on music, has recorded in Lippincott's Magazine for January some personal impressions of the Worcester Musical Festival held last September. Here are a few extracts from Mr. Surette's interesting and appreciative article.

In regard to the Cathedral, he says:—

Something of the beauty of the "long-drawn aisles and fretted vaults" rings in the music as it echoes through and through those vast spaces and makes them vocal. The majesty of it is well-nigh indescribable, for it is not the sounds alone which fill the soul, but along with them, indissolubly blended, come thoughts, impressions, and feelings which the scene itself inspires.

And then as to the social side of the Festival:—

Many of the people living near the Cathedral kept open house during the Festival, lunch being often laid in a lovely garden, where one could walk about and chat with the other guests. The conductor's door was open to composers, artists, and newspaper men, and around his hospitable board one met many of the celebrities: Brema, perhaps the favourite among the artists; Parker, whose popularity seems not to have been entirely due to his music, successful as that was; Madame Albani, Sir Hubert Parry, Coleridge-Taylor, Joseph Bennett, one of the original anti-Wagnerians, the "skid to the English musical coach," as he calls himself, white-haired and kindly; and Edgar [Elgar], the free lance among English composers, a man of great talent.

The chief novelty of the Festival is thus referred to:—

Thursday morning brought one of the largest audiences of the Festival to hear the American work, Horatio Parker's "Hora Novissima." The composer conducted, and it is a credit to his skill that the performance was, perhaps, the best of the Festival. But that was partly due, also, to the fact that the chorus liked to sing the music, and thoroughly understood what the composer wanted. . . . Sir Hubert Parry told me they were all glad to have such a splendid composition from America performed at an English Festival.

Mr. Surette concludes his very readable article thus:—

So on Saturday the gentle old city resumed her quietness, not without a sigh, and settled down to another three years of peaceful solitude . . . while in all directions trains were bearing the visitors away, in two cases at least not without a pang of regret, and with delightful memories of English hospitality and friendship.

Professor Niecks continues with unabated zeal to provide for the educational equipment of the musical students committed to his charge at the University of Edinburgh. One of his recent "five historical concerts" (which have so satisfactorily replaced the annual Reid concert of former days) given during the session was devoted to the works of Purcell. Here is the programme, which was efficiently interpreted by a body of performers under the direction of Mr. J. A. Moonie:—

1. Te Deum in D.
2. "The Golden Sonata," for two violins, bass, and pianoforte, played by Messrs. Dambmann, J. Middleton, W. Beaumont, and A. Scott Jupp.
3. "In these delightful pleasant groves" (chorus).
4. "Nymphs and Shepherds," song from "The Libertine." Sung by Miss Stuart Reid.
5. "Thy hand, Belinda," and "When I am laid in earth," recit. and air from "Dido and Æneas." Sung by Mr. Robert Burnett.
6. "Come unto these yellow sands" and "Full fathom five," solos and choruses from "The Tempest."
7. "Britons, strike home," tenor solo and chorus from "Bonduca."
8. Three Scenes from "King Arthur."

A Schumann pianoforte recital by that admirable artist and pupil of Madame Schumann, Miss Fanny Davies, was given on the 13th ult., when a comprehensive selection from the works of the composer was skilfully performed. This concert took place on the birthday of General Reid, "founder of the Chair of Music in the University of Edinburgh," and therefore a minuet and march of his composition were played upon the organ by Mr. A. Scott Jupp. Thus the memory of the munificent founder of the Musical Professorship at Edinburgh University is kept green notwithstanding the fact that he came into the world 173 years ago.

Mr. Samuel Reay, of Newark-on-Trent, in a letter commenting upon the biographical sketch of Dr. Armes in our last issue, refers to the fact that he was one of the six selected candidates for the organistship of Durham Cathedral when Dr. Armes was appointed in 1862. We may state that this information was discovered by us amongst the Durham newspapers of the time, when making the necessary research for the article, but we purposely refrained from giving publicity to the names of those unsuccessful candidates who are still living. In regard to the competition itself, Mr. Reay, by way of correcting some of the statements, says:—

"Dr. Dykes did not propound a subject for a four-part, or any other sort of fugue, but merely a melody of a few bars on which the candidates were desired to extemporise.

"Three of the competitors I am sorry to say have since died; but I can speak authoritatively for myself and another of the selected six, and say that neither of us played the 'Hallelujah' chorus, nor did we in any other way seek to influence the Dean's 'dear old maiden sisters,' of whose existence, till Dr. Armes mentioned it, I was profoundly ignorant.

"I may just add that the anthems on the day of my probation were Handel's 'The trumpet shall sound' and Greene's 'God is our hope and strength.' My principal organ piece was Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G."

Mr. Walter Macfarren is giving at the Royal Academy of Music, on Wednesday afternoons (3.15 p.m.), during March, a course of lectures on the subject of "Mozart and his pianoforte works."

Mr. George Riseley has formed at Bristol a "Male-Voice Choir for the performance of works composed for male voices with orchestral accompaniment." The membership will be limited to 300 voices. "I shall personally train the choir," says Mr. Riseley, "and I hope to make the concerts (of which there will be two in each season) a special feature in the musical life of the city." As the works to be performed at the first concert include Mendelssohn's "Antigone," Brahms's "Rhapsodie" (for solo alto and male-voice choir), and Gernsheim's "Salamis," the Society has made a good start. We wish it all success.

Dr. Hans Richter and his wife, née Szitanyi, celebrated, on January 28, their "Silver Wedding." The celebration of the happy event was, however, strictly confined to the family circle of the distinguished conductor.

The Editor having, through the kindness of the Mendelssohn family, been favoured with copies of letters from Thomas Attwood to Mendelssohn, is desirous of tracing the whereabouts of any letters written by Mendelssohn to Attwood. He would also be glad to receive any fresh biographical information concerning Thomas Attwood, the English pupil of Mozart.

Mr. Alfred Gibson will form the subject of the biographical sketch in our next issue.

SPEECH IN SONG.

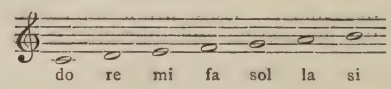
Universal language is a dream which has fascinated poets and thinkers of all ages and of all nations, but which seems to-day as far from realisation as ever. Many systems have been proposed, each more ingenious and more easily acquired than its predecessor, but all alike have failed to rouse more than a passing curiosity. The long series of failures have at least served to make it clear that what is wanted is not a new language, the artificial product of a single mind, but an organic growth springing from existing means of inter-communication. Gesture, for instance, already plays an important part in our intercourse with savages, and might ere this have supplied the want of a universal language, were it not that the resources of gesture-language are limited, and found to be inadequate to the expression of any but the simplest ideas.

Latin at one time bade fair to become the universal language, at least of literature; but the use of Latin, as of any other strange tongue, involved the sacrifice of that full freedom of expression which can alone be enjoyed in the language of birth, and the uncompromising persistence of national types of thought and character in time drove it from the field.

There remains music, the language of the emotions. Human emotions, like human gestures, are much the same all the world over, and the elements of music, the language which expresses them, are widely if not universally understood. It must be confessed that music has never yet succeeded in expressing a judgment, much less a concept, and even purely imitative or programme music is constantly liable to misinterpretation without the aid of a key. But may it not be possible by means of a system of conventional interpretation to employ music as a universal language of the intellect as well as of the emotions?

This was the problem which a Frenchman of the present century, M. Jean François Sudre, set himself to solve, and which he claimed to have solved successfully. M. Sudre was born in 1787, and at an early age conceived the idea of a universal musical language. In 1823 his scheme was sufficiently advanced to admit of public séances, at which practical demonstrations of the system were given. These aroused general curiosity, and the learned societies of France did not hesitate to express their warm approval. In 1835 we find M. Sudre in England, giving demonstrations before the King and Queen and "the Princess Victoria," and the next few years were spent by him in travelling abroad and spreading the knowledge of his invention. But progress was slow and disheartening. It was not till 1855 that substantial encouragement was forthcoming in the shape of an award of 10,000 francs at the Paris Universal Exhibition of that year, and in 1862 M. Sudre died, leaving his work still in manuscript. His widow nevertheless carried on the propaganda with undaunted vigour, and in 1866 published to the world the complete system under the title of "Langue Musicale Universelle, au moyen de laquelle (après seulement trois mois d'étude) tous les différents peuples de la terre, les aveugles, les sourds et les muets, peuvent se comprendre réciproquement."

This musical language is constructed from the seven notes of the diatonic scale—



employed either singly or in groups of two, three, four, or five. The single notes and groups of two or three represent particles, pronouns, and words in common use. The groups of four notes are arranged in classes according to their initial sound. Thus the "clef de sol," which includes all four-note groups beginning on the note g, is used exclusively for the terminology of the fine arts and sciences; the "clef de la" is consecrated to industry and commerce, and so on. The dictionaries, both music-speech and speech-music, which occupy the bulk of the book, seem to range over the whole gamut of human wants, from "beef steak"— to "constitutional government"—

In turning over the pages a familiar musical phrase now and again catches the eye. In the "clef de sol," for instance, we find the opening notes of St. Ann's tune—with the singularly appropriate meaning of "organ, harmonium, organist," but—with its ecclesiastical associations, as the termination of the Preces in our Litany, would hardly suggest to the uninitiated an "aide-de-camp."

By way of assisting memory a musical phrase with an assigned meaning is often inverted to express its opposite. Thus sol, la, si, means "ascend," si, la, sol,

"descend"; do, mi, sol, "God," sol, mi, do, "Satan." But even with such helps as these the effort required to retain and readily distinguish some thousands of musical phrases with the meanings arbitrarily attached to them would be prodigious. Nor is this the only drawback to the system. Many of the phrases are exceedingly difficult of intonation. Even Dr. McNaught would admit that to call upon a child to intone—every time he wanted a glass of "lemonade" would be little short of cruelty, and those not gifted with a sense of absolute pitch would be justly alarmed to find that while—signifies "to sneeze," the same phrase transposed a tone higher means "manure," and a tone higher still "a whale." No! for all M. Sudre's lifelong labours the problem of universal language is still unsolved, and the "Langue Musicale Universelle" has but added one more to the curiosities of literature.

J. F. R. Stainer.

PROFESSOR NIECKS ON MUSICAL EDUCATION AND CULTURE.

A meeting of Edinburgh music teachers was held in the Scottish capital on January 31, with a view to the formation of a society for the promotion of musical education and culture. On that occasion Professor Niecks, who occupies the Chair of the Reid Professorship in the University of Edinburgh, delivered the following address explanatory of the justification, scope, and aims of the proposed new organisation.

"Many of you, on reading the circular inviting you to this meeting, may have exclaimed: 'What, another society?' And it must be confessed that the existing societies are already far too numerous—too numerous for our available time, too numerous for our bodily and spiritual comfort, and too numerous for our purse. This being so, would-be-founders of a new society ought to be able to advance strong reasons in justification of their scheme.

"Well, have we such justifying reasons in the present case? I answer unhesitatingly and firmly: 'Yes.' The objects of the projected society are undeniably excellent, and in the highest degree desirable; and there is no existing society known to me that supplies or is likely to supply in future the things aimed at. It has been asked: 'Why do you not go for what is wanted to the Incorporated Society of Musicians?' Do not imagine that that Society has been overlooked."

After referring to the fact that the Incorporated Society of Musicians was a purely professional organisation, excluding students preparing for the profession, and that it could not be expected to devote the necessary time, or to furnish the requisite opportunities for lectures and discussions on the art and science of teaching music, Professor Niecks proceeded:—

"Having explained why a new society is proposed, I must turn to the more difficult task of explaining what the objects of the society are to be, and in what ways they can be attained. The task is difficult, because there may be widely different views about the objects to be chosen and the ways to be pursued. It is difficult also because the work and methods of the society must largely depend on the character and number of its members.

"It is intended to admit as members not only professional musicians, but also students of music preparing for the profession. Now don't be shocked at what I am going to say next. This society is to be a mutual improvement society. I have been most solemnly warned and most impressively appealed to not to mention the word 'improvement,' especially with the qualifying adjective 'mutual.' 'If you use that word, you will frighten away everybody.' Now, improvement may be a very unpopular word, but it is a most useful, excellent, and necessary thing. In fact, I reckon him as dead and shelved who no longer wants to be taught and improved. Well, then, let us form ourselves into a mutual improvement society, each of us contributing his or her quota to the general fund of knowledge. There is none so experienced and learned that he cannot gain by the experience and learning of his fellows. And even the most inexperienced and unlearned can widen and clear the knowledge of the most venerable sage, if by nothing else, at least by questions. There is nothing so educative as being asked questions. Questions often draw our attention to problems previously overlooked, shirked, or otherwise neglected by us, and not infrequently draw our attention to spots and fields of ignorance in us of which we had not been aware.

"One of the chief benefits derivable from such a society seems to me to be the opening of our eyes to the vast extent and the immense complexity of what is implied in the study and teaching of music—an extent and complexity in the face of which even the most accomplished must feel children and ignoramuses. Do not overlook that the teacher stands in need of a wider and more many-sided knowledge than the executant, and that his responsibility is far greater. The most terrible fact about us teachers is that we are never trained for the profession of teaching: what we learn of it we learn from our pupils, who really ought to be paid by us, and not we by them. The great majority of teachers never learn their business, and the best learn it only imperfectly. There are innumerable members of our fraternity who imagine that the whole duty of a music-master consists in teaching his pupils to play pieces and sing songs as a bird-trainer teaches finches and canaries. But that is not teaching music at all. Others think only of finger exercises, scales, and technique generally. But that is only the mechanical substratum of the executive side, a small part of the art, if we take into account the texture, structure, beauty, and expression of music, and the cultivation of the ear, mind, and heart of the learner. Again, it is very common that a teacher has but one method and one repertory for all pupils, ignoring the infinite variety of their physical, psychical, and moral dispositions. The disastrous results may easily be imagined. Of course teachers are not all of them so bad as that; but, owing to the difficulties of their calling, owing to the extent and the many-sidedness of the knowledge required, not one of them can boast that he is complete and perfect, fully armed from head to foot.

"Now, ought we not to endeavour to improve this state of matters? It goes without saying that a society like the one projected cannot take the place of a training school—it cannot give systematic courses of lectures and demonstrations in technique, harmony, counterpoint, form, acoustics, history, æsthetics, ethics, and psychology. But it can do many things worth doing—it can suggest new ideas, open undreamt-of vistas, lighten up many dark corners in our minds, and, above all, invite us to further study and renewed efforts.

"Now, let me indicate somewhat more particularly a few of the things that can be done—and can be done by the reading of original papers, by accounts, summaries, translations, and criticisms of other people's writings and speeches, by analyses and demonstrations, by discussions, and by questions. One of the many possible subjects, a subject of immense scope, and practically inexhaustible, is the exposition of methods of teaching music, either music as a whole, or certain departments of it, or certain details in these departments. This subject may be considered from various points of view—from the technical, physiological, æsthetical, ethical, and psychological. The æsthetical and ethical points of view are of the greatest importance, as they relate to the influence of the art on our sense of the beautiful, and on our moral sense. Note the astounding range of the subject, from five-finger exercises to the moral sense. Very useful would be papers setting forth what music has been written for instruments and for voices, and grouping it according to classes (genres) and grades of difficulty; and enumerations and descriptions of books on music generally, and on teaching particularly. Discrimination of the styles of composers is another important and interesting subject. Nor should history and biography be forgotten—they are valuable tools of the model teacher.

"I think I have said enough to show that there is a sufficiency of material for the society, and I hope I have also said enough to induce you to join the society. I invite you, I urge you to join it. I ask you to do so for your own sake, for your fellows' sake, for your pupils' sake, for your art's sake—for all these will benefit by your taking part in the work of the 'Society for the Promotion of Musical Education and Culture.'"*

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

"THE PLACE AND POWER OF MUSIC IN WORSHIP."

The Rev. W. S. Herbert Wylie, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, preached an eloquent sermon on the above subject at the recent annual "Service of Praise" of the Association of North London Choirs (Presbyterian). In the course of his admirable discourse, Mr. Wylie said:—

"The heart is touched and the emotions appealed to by music as they can be in no other way. Music not only pleases the ear—that is its lowest function—it also calms the mind, and, better still, it inspires the soul. . . . Sometimes in our deepest sorrows—sorrows that lie too deep for words to soothe—we have heard some music which was to us heaven-born and heaven-sent, and a new calm and peace stole over us and possessed our hearts and minds. And so it is with spiritual things in our worship. The influence of our common song, the message of an anthem, the effect of an instrumental voluntary, may be to deepen devotion, create new aspirations, strengthen courage, and promote the growth of grace.

"I plead for a larger consideration of this most important feature of our praise service, a function and effect too often misunderstood or altogether overlooked. It is to me the sole explanation of or justification for the rendering of anthems by the choir and solos by individuals and voluntaries by the organists in our congregational worship. These are not performances for mere purposes of display. They are not given in order to tickle the ear or respond to a craving for novelties or sensation. They stand on the highest of all platforms—they are sermons in sound. And they ought to be the most effective of all sermons, for they appeal in a unique way to mind and heart, to soul and spirit, conveying impressions and wielding an influence above and beyond the power of words alone to exercise. If, remembering this, we are reverent hearers, believing that these exercises may bear a message of God to our souls, and seeking to open our minds and hearts to receive that message fully, then the service of praise will be to us in all its parts what it ought to be—not only the means of expressing our deepest feelings toward God, but also of conveying God's blessing to us—a true ministry of song and a means of grace to heart and life."

Such pulpit utterances in appreciation of the influences of the divine art are in the highest degree commendable and satisfactory; moreover, are they not capable of general application, irrespective of creed or sect?

A LETTER FROM SIR GEORGE GROVE IN 1849.

The turning over of the pages of old musical periodicals is a pleasant fireside occupation which is often attended with interesting discoveries. One such is the following letter which appeared in a publication entitled The Parish Choir, or Church Music Book, published by "The Society for promoting Church Music," between 1846 and 1851:—

"Prose Hymns for chanting.

"To the Editor of the Parish Choir.

"Anglesey, September 12, 1849.

"Sir,—Your correspondent, 'Cantor,' in the August number of the Parish Choir, which has only very lately reached me, does not appear aware that an attempt was some years ago made by Mr. Alford, the Vicar of Wymeswold, Leicestershire, to supply the want which he notices.

"Mr. Alford's book is called 'Prose Hymns [chiefly from Scripture and pointed] for Chanting,' and is published by Rivingtons. The hymns or canticles are, in my opinion, most successfully selected from the Old Testament, the Apocrypha, and the New Testament. If 'Cantor' has not seen it, he should lose no time in getting it, and I think it will well repay him. At Wymeswold church it is regularly used.

"I am, Sir, yours obediently,

"George Grove."

There is no need to speculate upon the identity of the writer of this note—his name is too well known for any such conjecture. But it may be assumed that this is an early contribution by Sir George Grove to a musical journal. At that time (1849) he was a young engineer on the resident staff of Robert Stephenson, engaged upon the construction of the Britannia Tubular Bridge across the Menai Straits. The "Mr. Alford, vicar of Wymeswold, Leicestershire," subsequently became the great Dean of that name, and the author of one of the most popular of hymns, "Come, ye thankful people, come." An extract from Dean Alford's Preface to his little book, "Prose Hymns . . . for chanting," published in 1844, when chanting, except in regard to the Canticles, was somewhat of a rarity in parish churches, is of sufficient interest to be quoted:—

The following Hymns have been selected and partly composed in the belief that church-singing will be much improved by the more plentiful introduction of chants, as distinguished from metrical tunes. It is to chanting that we must look for the accomplishment of that which has been so much desired among us, and so seldom obtained,—true congregational singing. And this has been verified by the experience of all Clergymen who have in earnest and with pains cultivated chanting in their churches.

* The new organisation has since been designated "The Edinburgh Musical Education Society."

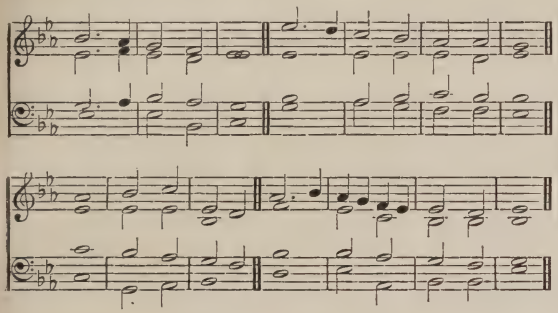
LORD MORNINGTON'S CHANT.

Mr. John S. Bumpus, in his interesting paper on "Irish Church Composers," read last month before the Musical Association, gave the following as the original form of Lord Mornington's well-known Double Chant in E flat. Moreover, it is the traditional form which has been in use in the Dublin Cathedrals since the death of the composer. The alteration of the melody (as it appears in most English collections) seems to have been prompted by reason of its resemblance to a chant by Dr. Crotch, not a very satisfactory justification for such an impudent piece of tinkering. Here is the Mornington Chant in its pristine condition:—



SPECIAL SERVICES, ETC.

The "special orchestral services" held at Brixton Church on the first Sunday afternoon of every month, when the vicar gives an address, continue to be much appreciated, and are attended by a congregation averaging 2,000 people. On the 4th ult. special interest was centred in an overture, entitled "Harvest-tide," by the organist of the church, Mr. Douglas Redman, which was played by the full professional orchestra engaged for these services. Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Benedictus for violin and orchestra was also performed. From the financial coign of vantage, the support given by the great congregation is in inverse proportion to its numerical attainment—in fact, at one service no less than 500 persons did not contribute at all! "But," writes Mr. Redman, "we all owe a great debt of gratitude to the broad-minded policy of our two churchwardens, Messrs. F. G. Dray and Alfred Edwards, for they are good enough to supply the necessary funds for the carrying on of these services, in addition to their many other calls and heavy responsibilities." While wishing these services all success, we venture to hope that the short oratorio, or Church cantata, may from time to time be included in the scheme. Such works not only tend to edification, but their natural home is the Church.

At the Dedication Festival of St. Agnes, Kennington Park, the communion service was Hummel in B flat, which was sung to the accompaniment of strings, flute, trumpet, drums, and organ. Mr. Baden Powell's "Salve Festa Dies" was sung in procession by three cantors and choir. Mr. McMurdie was at the organ and Mr. Cyril G. Church, organist of the church, conducted.——The anniversary of the Restoration of St. Saviour's Collegiate Church, Southwark, on the 13th ult., was worthily celebrated by a performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," which was well rendered by the choir of the church, the organ being supplemented by brass instruments and drums. Dr. Madeley Richardson was at the organ and Mr. A. E. Williams conducted. ——At a special musical service given in Luton Parish Church, on the 13th ult., Sir Hubert Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens" and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" were sung by the chorus and orchestra of the Luton Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Fred. Gostelow. Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Benedictus for violin was also played.

Byrd's five-part Mass, from the edition prepared by Mr. R. R. Terry and Mr. Barclay Squire, will be sung at the Brompton Oratory at High Mass every Sunday (except Mid-Lent Sunday) in Lent.——Bach's Passion Music (according to St. Matthew), omitting some of the earlier numbers, will be sung at the Temple Church on the first Sunday in Lent (4th inst.) and again on Passion Sunday (April 1), at 3 p.m.

Gratifying evidence is to hand in regard to the large use made of music by English composers during last Christmastide by the churches in New York. The names of Stainer, Barnby, Garrett, Elvey, Hopkins, Martin, Stanford, Ouseley, Myles Foster, Sullivan, and West figure largely in a resumé of Christmas service-lists compiled for, and which appeared in, a New York journal. Equally satisfactory is it to find, from programmes received, that Mr. Clarence Eddy, the distinguished American organist, includes works by English composers in his various recital programmes. Recently, in California, at San Francisco and Los Angeles, Mr. Eddy played pieces by Mr. W. S. Hoyte, Mr. William Faulkes, Mr. W. Wolstenholme, Mr. E. H. Lemare, and Mr. Alfred Hollins.

ORGAN RECITALS, ETC.

The first of the two specimen programmes (Concert-room and Church) for this month is that given on the 3rd ult. (Mendelssohn's birthday), in the Town Hall, Manchester, by Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist of the Cathedral and to the Corporation of Manchester, and Professor of the Organ at the Royal College of Music (Manchester). Mr. Pyne's performances, which are given every Saturday evening, attract large audiences; some of the listeners come from a distance of thirty or forty miles from Manchester and bring with them copies of the music performed.

1. Prelude and Fugue in C minor .. .. .. Mendelssohn.
2. "Evening Prayer" .. .. Henry Smart.
3. Organ Concerto in F (No. 5) .. .. Handel.
4. Impromptu Elegy in G minor .. .. J. Kendrick Pyne.
5. Grand Toccata and Fugue in D minor .. .. J. S. Bach.
6. Andante with Variations from the Septet .. Beethoven.
7. Choral Song and Fugue ... . S. S. Wesley.

A commendable feature of the scheme is the inclusion of the names of Henry Smart and S. S. Wesley. It is interesting to note, by the way, how frequently Wesley's Choral Song and Fugue is played at organ recitals in various parts of the country. We venture to reprint two of the annotations supplied by Mr. Pyne to his excellent programme. The first refers to the Bach Toccata and Fugue:—

There are two Toccatas and Fugues in D minor, by the Leipzig Cantor. The first (of smaller dimensions than the one to be performed to-night) is extremely popular and frequently played; but, in the opinion of the performer, it is one of the least interesting of all this master's works, being very florid, and one might almost say flippant. The contrast between this and the one before us is indeed remarkable. The whole composition is suggestive of the Dorian Mode, and is conceived in Bach's most impressive style. The Toccata (the word being derived from "Tucket," a species of trumpet) is grandiose in treatment, abounds in brilliant passages with "echo" effects, and is most concertante in result; but delightful as this prelude is, it pales before the majesty of the fugue. In this the highest point of erudition and profundity has been reached. No wonder that in an article commenting upon a recent Bach Festival in London the Dorian Toccata and Fugue was designated as being Bach's finest work for the organ.

Mr. Pyne thus comments upon the Choral Song and Fugue composed by his old master, Dr. S. S. Wesley:—

Following the example of the older masters, who constructed their counterpoint on familiar melodies, this composer has founded the subject of this Fugue on the well-known theme, "Tell it out among the heathen," an anthem by Travers. The subject is elaborated as only this writer for the "king of instruments" could; the ending, with its wonderful harmonies, progressions, and great brilliancy, forming a unique specimen of organ composition.

Is not the information concerning the "Tucket" in the Bach annotation a little wanting in accuracy? The "Tucket" is a trumpet-call, or fanfare, not a species of trumpet. Shakespeare uses the word in this sense in Henry V., Act iv. sc. 2, when The Constable of France says:—

Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonuance, and the note to mount.

The word is undoubtedly derived from the Italian Toccata, which being interpreted means "a touch, a touching" (vide Florio, "A Worlde of Wordes," 1598).

The subjoined selection, given, on the 7th ult., by Mr. T. H. Collinson, in the Cathedral Church of St. Mary, Edinburgh, of which he is the organist, will serve for the specimen "Church" recital programme:—

1. Toccata and Fugue in D minor .. .. Bach.
2. Sonata (No. 6) .. .. Mendelssohn.
3. Fanfare in D .. .. Lemmens.
4. Two Preludes in F sharp minor and G (from Six Short Pieces) .. .. Ouseley.
5. March Funèbre et Chant Séraphique .. .. Guilmant.
6. Largo Cantabile in G, from Symphony in D .. .. Haydn.
7. Andante in D .. .. Gambini.
8. Méditation sur une Prélude de J. S. Bach .. Gounod.
(Played on the manuals with the "double touch.")
9. Air, "Why do the Nations" ("The Messiah") .. .. Handel.

A SMALL, BUT USEFUL THREE-MANUAL ORGAN.

The following is the specification of the recently completed organ in St. George's Presbyterian Church, Brondesbury, London, built by Messrs. Henry Willis and Sons:—

GREAT (5 stops).

Open Diapason ..	8 feet	Fifteenth	2 feet
Claribel Flute ..	8 ,,	Trumpet	8 ,,
Principal	4 ,,

SWELL (9 stops).

Lieblich Bourdon ..	16 feet	Principal	4 feet
Open Diapason ..	8 ,,	Mixture	3 ranks

COUPLERS.

Great to pedals.	Swell to Great.
Swell to pedals.	Swell to Choir.
Choir to pedals.

The scheme is that of a comparatively small organ, capable of producing great variety of effects; at the same time it is one that satisfies many requirements that might be considered the prerogative of a larger instrument.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, at his fifty-fifth recital, given on the 3rd ult., at St. Margaret's, Westminster, played, for the first time, a Concert Rondo (MS.) by Mr. Alfred Hollins.

The 200th weekly organ recital upon the fine Walker instrument in St. Matthew's Church, Northampton, has furnished Mr. Charles J. King with an opportunity of making a digest of the pieces that have been played by himself and other organists, including Sir George Martin, Dr. Keeton, Mr. E. H. Lemare, and Mr. H. C. Perrin. Of the 144 composers drawn upon for these 200 recitals, the first five stand in the following order:—Bach, 85; Handel, 79; Guilmant, 74; Mendelssohn, 71; and Smart, 50.

There have come to hand programmes of organ recitals given during the past month by the following amongst other organists:—

Mr. T. I. Watts, Parish Church, Walsall (who played Wesley's "two varied airs"—the Holsworthy Church Bells and that in F sharp minor); Mr. John E. Campbell, Hollinwood Parish Church; Dr. C. W. Pearce, St. George's Presbyterian Church, Brondesbury (organ re-opening upon completion, when he played the Adagio and Finale from Dr. E. J. Hopkins's Sonata); Mr. F. Midgley, in conjunction with Mr. Gottlieb Feuerberg (violin), St. John's Episcopal Church, Perth; Mr. W. Wolstenholme (who performed his new Fantasia in E, written for Mr. E. H. Lemare), Leamington Road Baptist Church, Blackburn; Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. Bede's Church, Liverpool (when all the five pieces were the compositions of local organists—surely a novelty); Mr. Henry M. Turton, Christ Church, Armley (who played a Fugue in C minor by J. M. W. Young, the late organist of Lincoln Cathedral); Mr. Thomas J. Crawford, St. Paul's, Camden Square; Mr. W. G. Peake, Parish Church, Driffield (who played Stewart's Concert Fantasia); Mr. W. A. Roberts, St. Paul's, Princes Park, Liverpool (whose scheme included Mr. John E. West's "Passacaglia"); Mr. Arthur Dunman, St. Matthew's, Kenosha, Wis., where Mr. Reginald Hunt is doing excellent work as choirmaster; Mr. A. E. Thorne, Christ Church, Newgate Street; Mr. Walter Hoyle, organist of St. Michael's, Coventry, at Winchester Cathedral (who played Chipp's Austrian Hymn varied); Mr. W. F. Forsyth, United Presbyterian Church, Millport; Mr. F. A. Gaccon, St. Woolos' Parish Church, Newport, Mon. (who played Hollins's Overture in C minor); and Dr. Archibald W. Wilson, St. Asaph Cathedral, with choral renderings by the Cathedral choir, when the programme included Elgar's "Imperial" March and T. Attwood Walmisley's anthem "Hear, O Thou Shepherd of Israel."

Organ recitals will be given on the new organ at the Church House on Saturdays, the 3rd, 17th, and 24th inst., at 4 p.m., by Sir Frederick Bridge, organist of Westminster Abbey and Gresham Professor of Music; Dr. G. F. Huntley, organist of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, and Mr. Edwin Lemare, organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, respectively. Tickets of admission can be obtained by sending a stamped addressed envelope to the Secretary of the Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

The annual meeting of the Choir Benevolent Fund Society was held on the 6th ult., at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, when the report presented by the committee mentioned that there had been no less than six deaths amongst the members during the previous twelve months, a thing unprecedented in the Society's history. Only one offertory from a Cathedral had been sent to the fund—viz., from Worcester, where the Society has far more supporters than in any other city.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. W. B. Brierley, West Kirby Parish Church.
Mr. S. J. Preston, Carshalton Parish Church.
Mr. Alfred Worth, Parish Church, St. Tudy, Cornwall.
Mr. George S. Evans, Parish Church, Leigh, Kent.
Mr. W. Noel Busby, St. John's Church, Walton, near Warrington.
Mr. J. H. Lilley, Parish Church, Petworth.
Mr. H. B. Walker, St. Barnabas, Leicester.

REVIEWS.

Saint Cecilia's Hall in the Niddry Wynd. By David Fraser Harris.

[Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier.]

Dr. Harris, the author of this book, which has for its sub-title "a chapter in the history of the music of the past in Edinburgh," gives much evidence of painstaking research in the compilation thereof. St. Cecilia's Hall, now a warehouse, was built in 1762 on the model of the opera house at Parma. It was a concert hall of oval shape, and its interior was so constructed that those who attended the music-makings held there could walk and talk in the centre of the room during the interval. It was in this room that the fashionable concerts of Edinburgh were given from 1762 to 1802. The performers seem to have been for the most part foreigners, some of whom settled as teachers in the Scottish capital. Two such were the pair, Signor and Signora Puppo. One of the full-page illustrations in the book (from the fine collection of Mr. Robert A. Marr) is that of the fiddler Puppo, who is designated "Signor Puppy, first catgut scraper." This gentleman was credited with saying smart things, of which the following has been preserved: "Boccherini is the wife of Haydn." Dr. Harris has much to say about the music performed in the old concert-room, and gives biographical notices of the various composers represented at the concerts. The Scotch people are, or were, notoriously fond of funerals, and thus it is not altogether surprising to find a reference to a "Funeral concert," one of several given by the Edinburgh Musical Society. We learn from Arnot's "History of Edinburgh" (1779) that "an occasional concert is sometimes given upon the death of a governor or director. This is conducted in the manner of a concerto spirituale. The pieces are of sacred music, the symphonies accompanied with the full organ, French horns, clarinets, and kettle-drums. Upon these occasions the audience is in deep mourning, which, added to the pathetic solemnity of the music, has a noble and striking effect upon the mind."

In this entertaining and instructive way does Dr. Harris fill his pages. The mass of information that he has therein gathered together furnishes, inter alia, an interesting historical contribution to the social life of the "hupper suckles" in Edinburgh during the last forty years of the eighteenth century. There are many lovers of "auld Reekie" who will peruse this admirably compiled volume on the musical doings of the picturesque city with the greatest possible pleasure and satisfaction. The value of the book is much enhanced by its illustrations, of which there are nearly thirty. These include views of the old concert hall, and several portraits, fac-similes, &c. There is a very characteristic and curious pedestrian presentation of George Thomson, so well-known in connection with Beethoven, Haydn, and other great composers. The portly figure of Thomson is depicted, with his hand behind his back, carrying a very bulging gingham umbrella, and striding along the streets of Edinburgh. We notice, by way of friendly correction, that Dr. Harris has mixed up the two Cramers (p. 96). It was William Cramer, not his son, J. B. Cramer (of pianoforte studies fame), who was "great as a violinist and great as a conductor both at concert, opera, and oratorio."

Five Caprices. For Pianoforte solo. By Roland Revell. Books I. and II.

Five Pianoforte Pieces. Op. 4. By Heinrich Schenker.

[Breitkopf and Härtel.]

These five Caprices are very playable and interesting. They are short, moderate in their demands on executive ability, and written with manifest knowledge of what is effective on the pianoforte.

The five "Pieces" by Schenker are more difficult than the Caprices, but they would repay the extra practice they might require. They would form excellent studies for development of independence between the hands, a feature of pianoforte playing which does not always receive the attention it deserves.

O come, let us sing. Composed by Myles B. Foster.
Ten thousand times ten thousand. Ferris Tozer.
This is the day. Edwin H. Lemare.
I am He that liveth. Thomas Adams.
Praise the Lord, ye servants. Bruce Steane.
Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing. Rev. E. Vine Hall.
Thanks be to God. Oliver King.

(Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 569, 620, 621, 623—625, and 627.) [Novello and Company, Limited.]

All the above anthems are specially appropriate for Eastertide and merit the attention of choirmasters.

Those in search of an anthem containing a bass solo of some importance may be warmly recommended Mr. Foster's composition. The solo extends over two pages, is easy to read, and grateful to sing. It is approached and followed by a brightly-written chorus in four parts, and the Finale is worked up in a stirring manner.

Mr. Ferris Tozer has taken Dean Alford's popular hymn, "Ten thousand times ten thousand," and set it to music of a stirring character. An effective point is made at the words, "What rush of Alleluias," and the energy of the opening chorus is well contrasted by the subsequent baritone solo, "Oh, then what raptured greetings." The concluding portion is also admirably designed.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare's Church music is well known to the majority of organists, and his anthem, "This is the day," is a good example of his style. It requires a choir which can take up points of imitation with firmness, but otherwise the music is easy to read, and, owing to its flowing character and variety, is decidedly interesting. There is a central section which it is intended should be rendered by picked voices, but it might also be sung full.

There is a breadth and dignity in the music of "I am He that liveth" that most happily echoes the spirit of the text, and we are inclined to think this anthem one of the best which Mr. Thomas Adams has written. The work is well within the means of average church choirs, and, intelligently rendered, would be most impressive.

"Praise the Lord, ye servants," by Mr. Bruce Steane, was composed for the choir of the "Church of the Saviour, Philadelphia," but the music is not so exactingly ornate as might be expected. A special feature is a soprano solo, the melody of which is repeated, unaccompanied, in four vocal parts. The opening and closing portions contain some spirited writing.

The Rev. E. Vine Hall's anthem, "Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing," is simple in construction and character, but the words of the hymn, No. 521 from "Hymns Ancient and Modern," are allied with music that accentuates their significance. The section for tenors and basses in unison affords very effective contrast to the contextual matter, and the conclusion, led up to by passages for soprano solo piano, answered by the full choir forte, is exceptionally impressive.

"Thanks be to God," by Mr. Oliver King, is a "full anthem" written in bold and flowing style, and containing several simple contrapuntal passages, which are calculated to interest a fairly trained choir. The organ accompaniment possesses some independence, but also admirably sustains the voice parts, and throughout the hand of an experienced musician is discernible.

Romance in G. For Violin and Pianoforte. By Emile Sauret. Op. 54.
Waltz and Gavotte. For Pianoforte solo. By Maude Valérie White.
Morceau Gracieuse. For Pianoforte solo. By Natalie Janotha. [Metzler and Co.]

M. Sauret's "Romance" demands a skilled violinist to do it justice, but its difficulties are not excessive, and, being always effective, will consequently repay any extra practice they may necessitate.

The "Waltz and Gavotte" are from Miss Maude White's incidental music to the poems "Little pictures of school life." Both pieces are extremely simple, but they are very pleasing and not devoid of musical interest.

Miss Janotha's "Morceau Gracieuse" is a bright little piece that justifies its being entitled "gracieuse." It is by no means difficult, although, deftly rendered, some of the passages are brilliant in effect.

Bread of the world, in mercy broken. By John E. West.
Turn Thee again, O Lord, and Mercy and truth are met together. Adapted and arranged by Arthur Sullivan.
(Novello's Short Anthems. Nos. 98—100.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. West has taken some well-known lines by Bishop Heber and allied them to music that reverently echoes their solemn character. Some of the dissonances are extreme, but their use has manifestly been prompted by a keen desire to intensify the meaning of the words rather than to secure mere musical effects. The music imperatively demands careful singing and absolutely true intonation; but the chromatic chords are so cleverly approached that the part-writing presents little difficulty.

The services of the Russian Church contain much impressive music, and in the anthems "Turn Thee again, O Lord," and "Mercy and truth are met together" excellent use has been made by Sir Arthur Sullivan of melodies derived from this source. In both anthems simplicity is united with solemnity, and, sung by a well balanced choir, the effects would be most impressive. In "Turn Thee again, O Lord," the tenor part is divided and occasionally the basses are doubled to secure richness of tone, but in "Mercy and truth are met together" the only doubling of importance is in the soprano part, and that only for a few bars.

The Frog. Humorous Part-song. Words by Frederic E. Weatherley. Music by Ernest Newton.
A Hymn to Cupid. Words by Herrick. Music by George C. Martin.
Come, sweet Lass. A Madrigalian Part-song. Words from "The Compleat Academy of Complements, 1685." Music by G. F. Huntley.
Midnight. Words by George Sackville, 1608. Music by Edward Sachs.
(The Orpheus. New Series. Nos. 314—317.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

"The Frog" tells a merry tale with a moral to strains as sprightly as they are humorous. The music is laid out for first and second tenors and basses. Sir George Martin's "Hymn to Cupid" requires first and second altos, first and second tenors, baritones and basses. The music is commanding in expression and, if rendered with firmness and spirit and with due attention to the indicated light and shade and changes of tempo, the song would prove interesting and stirring.

This setting of "Come, sweet Lass," happily reflects the naïve gaiety of the seventeenth century words, and the four-part writing, for alto, first and second tenors, and bass, will present no difficulties to male vocalists of average abilities. "Midnight" is a four-part song for first and second tenors and first and second basses, and it will be found grateful to sing. Dr. Huntley has provided an effective contrast to the opening and closing portions by a middle section of a more lively character.

Adstant Angelorum Chori (Thomas à Kempis). Motet for Chorus a Cappella. By Horatio W. Parker. Op. 45.
[New York: G. Schirmer.]

The performance of "Hora Novissima" at the Worcester Musical Festival last autumn drew the attention of the musical public to the fact that on the other side of the Atlantic, as well as on this, there are earnest musicians who have composed excellent music, and who in the future may yet further distinguish themselves. Professor Parker's "Hora Novissima" by no means represented the composer's latest stage of development; but in the Motet now under notice we have a work which gained the prize at the New York Musical Art Society's competition of 1898. On comparing the two works, we find the same handwriting, if we may thus speak of the music, but greater terseness of style, more dignity, and the boldness in matters relating to harmony, which comes of experience. The opening lines of Thomas à Kempis's quaint hymn are set to solid, dignified strains sung by first and second chorus combined; at the words "Tympanizant, citharizant," they, however, divide, the one answering the other in free imitation. The realistic touch at the words "Volant alis" will not escape notice; it is a slight and, we may add, a natural one. In the "Sanctus" phrase there is breadth, and the entrance of the tenors and basses in imitation, before the sopranos and altos have completed their phrase, produces a fine effect of continuity.

The lines commencing "Concors vox est omnium" are set to a fugato, during which there is an extended stretto between soprano and tenor. "O quam præclara regio" is set in four parts, with only four voices to each part. The music is most expressive. The opening bars in syncopation reveal a Brahmsism of which Professor Parker has already made use in his "Hora Novissima." The division of the voices into eight parts, and their spreading out into extended compass in either direction at the words "Lux et pax in cunctis finibus," and in softest tones, is exceedingly impressive, or rather would be, if the music were adequately rendered. In this portion of the Motet there are some interesting harmonies. The "Et volant alis," with the two choirs singing fff and in eight real parts, presents an imposing close.

Andante in C. For the Organ. By S. S. Wesley.
Allegro con Grazio. By P. Tschaikowsky. (Arranged for the Organ by Charles Macpherson.)
Postlude in G. By Francis Edward Gladstone.
Interlude in E flat. By Th. Dubois.
Organ Pedal Technique, Part II. (Novello's Music Primers, No. 47A.) By B. W. Horner.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The first piece in our list—the Andante by S. S. Wesley—needs no eulogy. Its character is distinctly cathedralesque and is suggestive of the "long-drawn aisle and fretted vault." The harmonic progressions are typical of S. S. Wesley's genius—often unexpected, but never crude or overstrained, and always fascinating in their natural beauty. Mr. John E. West has, with a reverent hand, done all that is necessary in editing Wesley's music.

Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, is to be congratulated upon his capital arrangement for the organ of the famous five-four movement from Tschaïkowsky's "Pathétique" Symphony. The music is well laid out for the hands and feet, the suggested registration is excellent, and altogether the transcription gives evidence of having been made by a man who knows his business and does it.

Any work from the pen of Dr. Gladstone is sure to be musicianly, and his recent Postlude for the organ wholly fulfils that designation. Starting with a bold diatonic unison phrase, the movement proceeds in an energetic manner till a solemn-chord diapason subject is reached. To this succeeds a fugal episode which is followed by the return of the main theme. But Dr. Gladstone soon dismisses the minor key, and in an exceedingly bright and vigorous passage in G major he brings this well written work to a fitting conclusion. Organists will be glad to make the acquaintance of this Postlude by a composer who knows how to write effectively for the instrument.

The distinguished French organist, M. Dubois, in his "Interlude," has written an attractive slow movement. Beginning with an oboe solo, accompanied by syncopated chords, there subsequently ensues a second theme in the left hand with a semiquaver accompaniment above. The development of this material, which has the merit of being melodious, gives evidence of the practised hand, whether regarded from the point of view of the composer or the skilful performer.

Mr. Burnham W. Horner has amplified his former primer on "Organ Pedal Technique" by the issue of about 150 new studies as Part II. of the previous useful publication. The mere fact that they "contain more advanced mechanical work than those embodied in the former series" should ensure them a welcome by those who wish to improve their pedalling and to be thoroughly equipped in that important department of organ playing.

Farewell to the Highlands. Song. With Violoncello obbligato. Poetry by Burns. Composed by Lady Kemball.
[Chappell and Co.]

Lady Kemball has set Burns's well-known lines in an appropriately simple manner. The melody is thoroughly in sympathy with the spirit of the words and will be found grateful to sing, and the violoncello part adds to the effectiveness of the song.

"IRISH CHURCH COMPOSERS."

The above is the title of a paper (Part I.) read before the Musical Association, on the 13th ult., by Mr. John S. Bumpus, than whom no one is better qualified to discourse upon the subject, he having made it one of special study. Mr. Bumpus's paper was so rich in historical detail and so full of incident that it is quite impossible to give a summary that would be in any degree adequate to its exhaustive treatment. The text will, as usual, appear in full in the annual Proceedings, wherein it will be read with interest by those members who were unable to be present.

In speaking of the traditions of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, Mr. Bumpus gave the following account of a curious and ancient custom:—

"On the third day previous to the close of each Law Term, which occurred four times a year, the choir proceeded to the Court of Exchequer, to do 'Homage' to the King before the Barons in open Court, in order to secure their estates and privileges. On these occasions prayers were read, and an anthem was sung by the choir standing on the Green Cloth, after which they received a certificate that entitled them to all their revenues. Four of the chorister boys and the two clerical Vicars used to attend, escorted by the verger of Christ Church. There might have been an important case going on, and Counsel making a fine speech; but without saying 'with your leave' or 'by your leave,' the boys would step on to the Green Cloth and begin the anthem, after which the Vicar read the State Prayers down to the 'Grace.' The anthems used to vary. In later years, Mendelssohn's Motet, 'Surrexit Pastor,' adapted by Professor Walmisley to the words 'O Lord, Thou hast searched me out,' used to be sung. Mr. John Horan, the present organist of Christ Church, tells me that, as a chorister in that Cathedral in 1842, he frequently took part in this quaint custom, which came to an end with the Disestablishment of the Irish Church, in 1869."

The lecturer had much to say upon the organists and vicars choral of the two Dublin Cathedrals and Trinity College Chapel in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, including Bateson, Jewitt, Rogers, the Roseingraves, Woodward, Shenton, and others. Lord Mornington, first Professor of Music in the University of Dublin (1764-1774), and father of the great Duke of Wellington, was incidentally referred to. The Hon. Daines Barrington asserted that he was able to play the organ, the violin, and the harpsichord almost by instinct when he had barely reached his fifth year! As a celebrated composer of glees, Lord Mornington was, and is, well known. And has he not been immortalized by Thackeray in the lines?—

> Most musical of Lords,
> Playing madrigals and glees
> Upon the harpsichords.

Sir John Stevenson, upon whom Mr. Bumpus has written a very interesting monograph, naturally received a full measure of biographical attention. The knighthood of Stevenson was the first instance of the kind in the musical annals of Great Britain and Ireland. This honour was conferred upon him by the then Lord Lieutenant of Dublin (Lord Hardwick), on April 27, 1803. The first musician to receive the accolade at the hands of an English Sovereign was Sir Henry Bishop, in 1842, who was knighted by Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Stevenson's honourable distinction aroused some envy. One lampoonist gave vent to his feelings in the lines:—

> We all of us know there's a knight of the shire,
> But who ever heard of a knight of the choir?

Amongst the various treasures exhibited by Mr. Bumpus from his fine library were Clifford's "Divine Services and Anthems" (black letter), 1664, one of the earliest books of words of anthems; the autograph score of Croft's Service in E flat, dated "March 19, $\frac{1718}{1718}$"; the complete church compositions of Dr. Benjamin Rogers in the autograph of Dr. Philip Hayes; a portrait of Sir John Stevenson; and a view of the Music Hall in Fishamble Street, Dublin, where Handel's "Messiah" was first performed in the year 1742. The concluding section of Mr. Bumpus's admirable paper will be looked forward to at the meeting of the Association to be held on the 13th inst.

BATTISON HAYNES.

It is with much regret that we place on record the death of this gifted musician, which took place on the 4th ult., at the early age of forty.

Walter Battison Haynes first saw the light at Kempsey, near Worcester, within sight of Malvern Hills, on November 21, 1859. Thus by only a few hours he just missed being born on the Feast of Musicians, St. Cecilia's Day. He received his general education at Hanley Castle Grammar School. But his first instruction in music was imparted to him by his uncle, Mr. William Haynes, well known as the organist of Malvern Priory Church from 1850 to 1893, to whose kindness we are indebted for many of the following fresh biographical particulars concerning his lamented nephew.

Young Haynes became a chorister in the Priory Church, Malvern, where he frequently deputised for his uncle at the organ. Mr. William Haynes, who really fathered the boy, placed him under the tuition of Mr. Franklin Taylor for the pianoforte, and Professor Prout for harmony, at the School for the Higher Development of Pianoforte-playing, of which Mr. Oscar Beringer was the founder and principal. In May, 1878, his ever-kind uncle sent him to the Conservatorium at Leipzig, where, amongst other professors, he studied under Dr. Carl Reinecke and Dr. S. Jadassohn. His pupilage career at Leipzig was very brilliant. He played in public, at the Conservatorium concerts, Beethoven's C major Concerto (1879), Moscheles's in E major (1880), Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante (1881), and the same composer's D minor Concerto, all, of course, for pianoforte. Moreover, he by no means allowed his creative faculty to remain idle. He composed at Leipzig a sonata for violin and pianoforte, a concert-overture, a pianoforte trio, a symphony in B flat, a prelude and fugue for two pianofortes (published), an organ sonata in D minor (published), and some songs, which were also published. He was awarded the Mozart Scholarship as being one of the "most excellent pupils in the Conservatorium" (extract from Report), and on leaving the Institution, where he had worked so well for four years, he obtained the highest certificate given to a pupil, this gratifying document being signed by six professors and four directors.

After living near Boulogne for six months in order to improve his French—and he used occasionally to play the organ in Boulogne Cathedral—Mr. Haynes came to London and obtained (in 1884) the post of organist of St. Philip's Church, Upper Sydenham. The year 1890 was an important one in the life of the young musician, as at Michaelmas he obtained the appointment of Professor of Harmony and Composition at the Royal Academy of Music. In the following year (1891) he became organist and director of the choir of the Chapel Royal, Savoy. Both of these important offices he held at the time of his death. For some time he was director of music at the Borough Polytechnic. A Freemason and an Associate of the Philharmonic Society, he was also a member of the several clubs having musical associations, including the Junior Constitutional Club, the Arts Club, and German Athenæum.

In addition to the works already mentioned, Mr. Haynes composed the following: two cantatas for female voices, entitled "Fairies' Isle" and "A Sea Dream"; an Idyll for violin and orchestra; Twelve Sketches for violin (also arranged for violoncello) and pianoforte; three dances, in canon form throughout, for violin; some organ pieces, including an Introduction and Variations on a Ground Bass; a Gavotte ("Westwood") for full and small orchestra (also arranged for pianoforte solo); services, anthems, hymn-tunes, &c.; six vocal duets and six two-part songs; a book of nine Elizabethan Lyrics (songs), dedicated to Sir Alexander Mackenzie; and various other songs, including "The Ould Plaid Shawl" and the arrangement of that very popular ditty "Off to Philadelphia." He also arranged for pianoforte Mr. Henschel's "Hamlet" music, and wrote additional accompaniments to the Chandos anthem, "Come, let us sing," for the 1891 Handel Festival.

In regard to the encouragement Mr. Battison Haynes received in the publication of his works, his veteran uncle, in his letter to us, says: "I had the pleasure, in 1883, to introduce my nephew to the late Mr. Henry Littleton, whom I had known for many years. Mr. Littleton treated him with marked kindness, and he owed a good deal of his early success to that gentleman. He was also on the most friendly terms—maintained, I believe, up to the time of his (my nephew's) death—with Mr. Alfred Littleton, from whom he also received much kindness for many years." Another staunch and valued friend was Sir Alexander Mackenzie, of whom Mr. Haynes always spoke in terms of warm and appreciative gratitude for his constant kindness. Mr. Haynes transcribed the following of Sir Alexander's works:—"The Troubadour," Violin Concerto, "La Belle Dame sans merci," "Britannia" Overture, and several other orchestral compositions.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.)

The chief characteristics of the compositions of Battison Haynes are their melodic charm, their graceful ease, and their finished daintiness. Each one bears the artistic touch of a master-hand. Mr. Haynes never over-reached himself. It is of course impossible to say what he might have done had his life not been so prematurely cut off. But he had the good sense not to court the "vaulting ambition which o'erleaps itself," the seeking of which too often leaves a composer in an "undone" plight. As an example of his delicate craftsmanship his "Elizabethan Lyrics" may be instanced, of which "Now is my Chloris" (No. 4) has all the merits of refined beauty and unaffected simplicity.

It is perhaps not too much to say that it seems almost impossible to fill the place of Battison Haynes at the Royal Academy of Music, which Institution, in the words of Mr. Renaut, the secretary, "has to mourn a heavy loss in his untimely death." He was immensely popular at Tenterden Street, where he was one of the ablest professors of harmony and composition, and so eagerly was his teaching sought after that his classes were always full. His most distinguished pupils at the Academy were Mr. Charles Macpherson and Mr. Harry Farjeon.

The remains of Mr. Haynes were laid to rest in Malvern Cemetery, on the 8th ult. On the same day a commemorative service was held at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, conducted by the chaplain, the Rev. Paul Wyatt, when Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, and an old pupil of the deceased, officiated at the organ. Amongst those present were Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, several brother professors from Tenterden Street, Mr. Alfred Littleton, and many other friends of the departed musician. In the course of a short and touching address the chaplain dwelt upon the remarkably amiable character of the deceased, and referred to the fact that he never as organist obtruded his work or himself in any way. His extemporizations were a marked feature of the services, and in them he would often reflect the sentiment of the day, even including the sermon.

The art of music becomes poorer by the removal of such a disciple as Battison Haynes. A man of kindly nature and sympathetic disposition, he will be greatly missed by a large circle of pupils and friends.

MR. ROBERT NEWMAN'S SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

How does the public appreciate the change of policy at Queen's Hall? The answer was given by the very large audiences that flocked to the first two concerts and expressed their satisfaction with the new order of things in enthusiastic applause. So far, so good. Let us hope that Messrs. Newman and Wood will have no occasion to regret their right about face. The public will show them that the announcement of an English work does not frighten them away if only the rest of the programme be made attractive. They have on many previous occasions proved their willingness to give the heartiest welcome to our native composers' best works.

The first concert, on January 27, opened with Sir Arthur Sullivan's impressive "In Memoriam" Overture, which seemed to suit Mr. Wood and his orchestra exactly; the result was an admirable performance. Mozart's "Linz" Symphony, the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, and Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture completed the purely orchestral selection, and were beautifully played by the splendid orchestra. Miss Kirkby Lunn was heard in songs by Wagner ("Schmerzen" and "Träume") and Schumann ("Stirb, Lieb' und Freud'!") and that marvellous violinist, M. Eugène Ysaye, scored triumphant successes in Saint-Saëns's Third Concerto (Op. 61) and Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" (Op. 21). These works may not be great masterpieces—in fact, much of Lalo's effusion is but sorry music-making; but they gave the great Flemish violinist ample opportunities for displaying his phenomenal technique, his luscious tone, his melting cantilene. He had a great reception, and after Lalo's work played as an encore Beethoven's Romance in G.

At the second concert, on the 10th ult., the Wagner novelty, "Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage" (Prelude to Act III.)—to which we were the first to draw attention in an article entitled "A Wagner Novelty," which appeared in our issue for October, 1898, p. 661—was performed for the first time in England. After its favourable reception by press and public alike we venture to prophesy that it will in future take the place—at least, in concert programmes—of the later, mutilated version, which is played in the opera, and appears in all recent editions of the vocal and full scores. For it must now appear evident to all that this later version is but a torso, a symphonic poem with a programme whose head, the very point or moral, has been cruelly torn away from its body. For the turning-point—in more senses than one—in "Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage" is the terrible curse pronounced upon him by the Pope, and this, for which Wagner has found one of his most powerfully dramatic Leitmotiven, is not even hinted at in the mutilated version, whereas a great deal is made of it in the original. In fact, the words of the Pope, given here to three trumpets in unison, and followed, after a short but mighty crescendo, by the curse theme, uttered by the full power of brass and strings, form a climax of almost terrifying force. The piece was played with all requisite dramatic expression, and in the various reiterations of the hymn-like theme in 6-4 time the strings and wood-wind attained a delicacy, and the brass in their turn a sonority and roundness of tone quite exceptional. Truly noble performances were given of Brahms's "Tragic" and Schumann's "Manfred" overtures, two of the very few works that can be named in the same breath with Beethoven's and Wagner's masterpieces of the same class. Beethoven's C minor Symphony always spells triumph with Mr. Wood, and this was no exception. It was superbly played. Professor Stanford's Prelude to "Œdipus Rex" came too late in an absurdly long programme to make its proper effect, which was a pity. It is one of the Professor's most impressive and original creations, and deserves more frequent hearings. Mr. Georg Liebling played his own "Concerto Eroico" (Op. 22), a work whose "programme" raises expectation of grandeur and strength which are not realised. It is by no means devoid of melodic interest or musicianly workmanship, but the largeness of utterance and pathos demanded by the programme (Napoleon's career) are not forthcoming. The best part is the charming Andantino, where the composer's lyric gift is conspicuously displayed. The least satisfactory part is the pompous Coda of the Finale, which suffers from diffuseness and ineffective, though noisy orchestration. We would strongly advise the composer to at least re-score this portion of his work. Miss Lillian Blauvelt sang airs by Rossini and Meyerbeer quite beautifully.

THE IMPERIAL CONCERT.

The concert organised by the British Empire League and given at the Royal Albert Hall, on the 7th ult., was an event of distinct musical and patriotic importance. It was in aid of those belonging to our brave Colonial troops who are suffering by reason of their self-sacrificing participation in the present war. The chief features of a most admirably arranged programme were Sir Arthur Sullivan's stately "Imperial March," Sir Alexander Mackenzie's breezy "Britannia" overture, and the same composer's imposing "Procession of the Colonies"—a chain of choruses from his "Jubilee Ode"; Sir Hubert Parry's spirited chorus "But when our country's cause," from his "St. Cecilia's Day" (conducted by the composer), and the final march-chorus "It comes from the misty ages," from Edward Elgar's "Banner of St. George."

In addition to the foregoing we should mention Dr. Eaton Faning's patriotic "Obedient to the Call," a song which, while being manly in sentiment, avoids that boasting spirit which too often and too disagreeably obtrudes itself in compositions of this class. Mr. Watkin Mills gave a fine interpretation of the song (conducted by the composer), and also contributed Dr. Boyce's "Heart of oak," which he sang from the original edition of this typically English ditty.

The concert had the additional advantage of the assistance of Madame Albani and Mr. Edward Lloyd. The Canadian prima donna sang Weber's "Softly sighs" ("Der Freischütz") with all her old charm of voice, and gave as an encore Sir Alexander Mackenzie's charming setting of Tennyson's "What does little birdie say?" with orchestral accompaniment. Nothing could be more appropriate than the songs selected by Mr. Edward Lloyd, especially when they were sung as only he can sing them—"Lend me your aid" and "Let me like a soldier fall."

By no means the least important feature of this brilliant music-making was the singing of the chorus of some 800 voices, which included the children of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. James's, and nearly 150 students of the Royal Academy of Music, in addition to a number of volunteers from various Metropolitan choral societies. In fact, the singing of the choir on this occasion was most brilliant, probably by reason of the large preponderance of soprano voices, which rang through the vast building with thrilling effect. The costumes of the ladies of the chorus were charming and at the same time patriotic, the fair singers being attired in white dresses and wearing red, white, and blue sashes. The choralists were well supported by an orchestra of about 120 performers.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell gave an effective recitation of E. de Fonblanque's "Women of Britain," Mr. Wilhelm Ganz played the pianoforte accompaniments, and Mr. W. G. Alcock and Mr. J. M. Coward rendered valuable assistance at the organ. The various Colonies were represented by the following vocalists:—Mdlle. Virginie Chéron, Madame Rosa Bird, Miss Nora Dane, Mr. Reginald White, Mr. Charles Loder, and Mr. Avon Saxon. Too much praise cannot be given to Sir Alexander Mackenzie for the resourceful, able, and successful manner in which he conducted and brought to a successful issue a meritorious concert—one, indeed, that reflected great credit on all concerned.

MESSRS. GREENE AND BORWICK'S RECITAL.

It speaks well for the intelligent appreciation of the public in matters musical that St. James's Hall was so well filled on the 9th ult., when Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave one of their excellent recitals. Both these gentlemen are thorough artists, and thus their singing and playing are greatly conducive to the cultivation of good taste. The most important work on the programme was Mr. Arthur Somervell's cycle of twelve songs, from Tennyson's "Maud." To undertake to ally this poem with music indicates considerable self-confidence, but it must be admitted that the results have justified the experiment. The songs are unequal in merit, but the spirit of the subject seems to have animated the composer, and several of the settings, especially those of tragic character, accentuate the intensity of the lines. It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Greene infused a true artistic spirit into their dramatic import; his interpretation, indeed, was a fine example of the union of lyrical and declamatory singing. Subsequently Mr. Greene sang a selection of folk-songs, the ingenuousness and simple gaiety of which he was equally successful in interpreting. Mr. Borwick is always happy in his renderings of music originally written for the harpsichord, and a selection of pieces by Bach, Handel, Leonardo Leo, Scarlatti, and Daquin was given with delightful crispness and sympathy with the spirit of past centuries.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

The three chief amateur orchestral societies have eschewed novelties at their recent Subscription concerts at the Queen's Hall; but they each presented interesting programmes, and executed them in a manner that testified to the presence of much earnest endeavour and ability.

The "Royal Amateurs," on January 31, selected Beethoven's Seventh Symphony in A, Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, and Massenet's well-named suite, "Scènes Pittoresques," for their chief works, all of which were interpreted with a precision and spirit that reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. Ernest Ford.

On the 7th ult. the Stock Exchange Societies brought forward Tschaïkowsky's Fourth Symphony in F minor, but committed the artistic sin of omitting the first movement, an omission that ruined the balance of the work. Miss Marion White, a young English pianist, showed intelligence and technical facility in Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, and the singing of the choir was most enjoyable. The choral pieces were Palestrina's "When flow'ry meadows" and "To-night" (C. M. von Weber), "Let maids be false" (Sir George C. Martin), and "The Arrow and the Song" (G. A. Macfarren). Mr. Arthur W. Payne and Mr. Munro Davison conducted, as usual.

The Strolling Players, on the 15th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Norfolk Megone, presented a programme that was far too long, but which contained Dvorák's Fifth Symphony, "From the New World," Bizet's suite "Roma," and the Overture to Lalo's opera "Le Roi d'Ys," all of which, with several smaller pieces, were meritoriously rendered.

THE REVIVAL OF THE MASQUE.

From a musical point of view, the most interesting feature of the entertainment on the 13th ult., at Her Majesty's Theatre, organised in aid of the Soldiers' Widows and Orphans Fund, was the music by Mr. Hamish MacCunn for Mr. Louis N. Parker's "Masque of War and Peace." Mr. MacCunn's dramatic perception and experience enabled him to perceive what was required on this occasion and to secure appropriate and effective expression. Such adept use of old English ditties has been made, and the songs are set in so direct and thoroughly English a manner, that with a little remodelling his work might be converted into a cantata which would doubtless prove acceptable to amateur choral societies. The three dances we shall hope to hear in the concert-room, where they could scarcely fail to prove an attractive feature at an orchestral concert.

Sir Arthur Sullivan's march, written for the patriotic picture "Great Britain, Her Colonies and Dependencies," is an instructive example of how skilful scoring can make interesting music based on commonplace themes, the treatment in combination of the ordinary orchestra and massed brass bands on the stage being remarkably effective.

Mr. Raymond Roze also showed perception of orchestral effects in his incidental music to the series of living pictures entitled "A Dream of Fair Women." The music was conducted by its respective composers.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Present day students of the organ at the Royal Academy of Music enjoy advantages which can scarcely fail to further them in their studies. Judging by the organ recital in the Queen's Hall, on the 12th ult., these advantages are being made good use of by the pupils. Ernest Read's renderings of Bach's Trio in D minor and Schumann's Fugue on the name of the great Leipzig master, showed admirable appreciation of the genus of the organ combined with considerable technical facility; and Ida A. Pemberton's performance of the first movement from Rheinberger's Sonata in F minor was notable for effective registering and neatness of execution. Walter S. Vale distinguished himself by his rendering of the Andante and Finale from Dr. Basil Harwood's well-written Sonata in C sharp minor (Op. 5). Other promising executants were Nellie Weaser (Henry Smart Scholar), Mabel Colyer, and Thomas H. Weatherly. Pleasant relief was afforded by the praiseworthy violin playing of E. Spencer Dyke and the meritorious singing of Eric Dudley, Alice Read, Christine Warner, Ada L. Forrest, and Annie L. Levens; the two last-named rendering duets by Rubinstein with commendable taste and finish.

Mr. E. F. Jacques delivered his fourth and last lecture on "The Music of the Middle Ages" on January 31. This dealt with the Minnesingers, Troubadours, Trouvères, Meistersingers, Minstrels, Jongleurs, &c., and their origin and customs. Specimens of the songs of several of the most noted troubadours were sung by one of the students, Mr. M. Rumsey, who, with Mr. W. E. Beazley, subsequently illustrated the hymnology of the mediæval period by several of the most famous hymn-tunes written between the eighth and thirteenth centuries. Six students—four female and two male voices—then sang the celebrated English thirteenth century round, "Sumer is icumen in," the merits of which Mr. Jacques pointed out, and emphasized by instituting comparisons between the round and contemporary compositions by foreign musicians. In those days, he said, it was certain that English composers were about a hundred and fifty years in advance of their Continental brethren. The early stages of organ music were next sketched, the illustrations being played by Mr. Beazley on the fine new organ. They comprised a piece by Conrad Paumann (1410-1473) and one of the earliest fugues written for a keyboard instrument—a fine specimen from the collection of organ pieces by Arnold Schlick, printed at Mayence in 1512.

The Royal Academy of Music announces three important scholarships for competition:—

The Sterndale Bennett Scholarship, founded by subscription, 1872, as a testimonial to Sir William Sterndale Bennett, Principal of the Academy from 1866 to 1875. This scholarship is for male candidates, in any branch of music, who must be British-born subjects, between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one years. Candidates must pass an examination in general education previous to entering the musical competition. The successful candidate is entitled to two years' free instruction in the Academy.

The Parepa-Rosa Scholarship, founded by Carl Rosa, 1874, in memory of his wife, Euphrosyne Parepa-Rosa (1836-1874), soprano singer. This scholarship is for female vocalists between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two years, who must be British-born subjects who are not, nor ever have been, students in the Royal Academy of Music. The successful candidate is entitled to two years' free instruction in the Academy.

The Sainton Scholarship, founded by subscription, 1891, in memory of Prosper Sainton, Professor of the Violin at the Royal Academy of Music, 1845-1890. This scholarship is awarded for promise in violin-playing. It is open to British-born subjects of either sex, under the age of eighteen years. No candidate will be eligible to compete in the musical examination who shall have failed to pass a preliminary literary examination or is unable to produce such evidence of his or her literary qualifications as the committee shall consider sufficient. The successful candidate will be entitled to the benefit of the scholarship funds for three years, which time, in cases of exceptional talent, may be extended to four years, at the discretion of the Committee of Management. The income of the scholarship is about £23 per annum. Full particulars of these scholarships may be obtained upon application to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street.

LONDON AND SUBURBAN CONCERTS.

Herr Rosenthal gave a pianoforte recital, on the 8th ult., which attracted a large audience to St. James's Hall, and was distinguished by the performance of Schumann's "Kreisleriana" in its entirety. It has been well said that into these eight fantasias "Schumann has thrown the whole wealth of his poetic imagination" and the duality of his temperament is very discernible in them. Intellectually, Herr Rosenthal's interpretations were very fine; they were full of subtlety and keenness of perception, yet notwithstanding this, the romance and tenderness of the music were missed. It was a scientifically analytical, more than a heartfelt reading, and so it failed to give entire satisfaction. Much the same criticism may be applied to his rendering of Chopin's Sonata in B minor (Op. 58) and the Scherzo in B flat minor; both were magnificently played from a purely technical standpoint, but one was led to admire the execution more than the sentiment. Still, even coldness is preferable to excess of emotionalism and the sentimental idiosyncrasies in which some great pianists indulge.

An interesting concert was given by the South London Choral Association at the South London Institute, Camberwell, on the 14th ult. The choral works were Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's popular cantata "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The difficulties of the last-named work were surmounted by both band and chorus (numbering 200 performers) in a praiseworthy manner. Mr. Sadleur Browne gave an intelligent reading of the beautiful tenor solo. In Beethoven's work the soloists were Madame Legassicke Leadbitter and Mr. Ivor Foster, both of whom were satisfactory. Mr. T. E. Gatehouse gave a fine rendering of the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. Madame Leadbitter sang "From mighty Kings"; Mr. Sadleur Browne, "I'll sing thee songs of Araby"; and Mr. Ivor Foster, three of Stanford's excellent "Cavalier Songs" (with male chorus), which he gave in a befittingly bold and vigorous manner. Mr. L. C. Venables conducted with his usual care and skill.

Mr. John Dunn, who gave an orchestral concert on the 20th ult., at the Queen's Hall, can scarcely fail to increase his reputation by his musicianly and brilliant playing on that occasion. Mr. Dunn was particularly successful in the beautiful slow movement of Beethoven's Concerto, which he interpreted with the dreamy tenderness that it demands. He is also to be commended for including in his programme Tschaikowsky's Concerto in D (Op. 35), which, performed at the Queen's Hall on December 18 last, has been almost entirely neglected by London concert-givers. It is a most satisfactory example of the Russian composer's genius, and, moreover, is clear in construction, engaging in character, and full of life. Mr. Hamish MacCunn skilfully conducted an efficient orchestra, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie directed an excellent performance of his breezy "Britannia" Overture.

Geo. Henschel

Miss Lucie Hillier gave a Chamber concert of an agreeable character on the 2nd ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. Her pianoforte solos by Grieg, Jensen-Niemann, and Emil Sjögren were not of an important nature; but they were rendered with fancy, delicacy, and refinement, and, assisted by Mr. Henry Such, she gave excellent interpretations of Rubinstein's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G (Op. 13) and a Sonata for the same instruments in G minor (Op. 57), by Mr. Otto Malling. The last-named work had not previously been heard in London. It is unpretentious, and comprises three movements, the first two of which are the best; and the music was graceful, dainty, and pleasing. Mr. Arthur Walenn sang some new songs by Mr. F. Korbay, of which the most effective was that entitled "So rushes my soul."

The Ivimey Chamber concerts at Surbiton were resumed, after the usual Christmas interval, on January 27, when Haydn's Quartet in D and Schütt's Trio in C minor (Op. 27) were the chief features of the programme. Mr. Ivimey, who made his re-appearance after his long illness as leader of the quartet, gave as a solo Wieniawski's "Legende" with skill and effect. The programme of the concert on the 10th ult. was chiefly vocal, and included Brahms's "Liebeslieder," Miss Lehmann's song cycle "In a Persian Garden," and six of the "Schottische Lieder" arranged by Beethoven (the accompaniments played by Messrs. J. W. and J. Ivimey and Arthur Blagrove). The vocalists were Miss Percival Allen, Miss Grainger Kerr, Mr. S. Masters, and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

The West Hampstead Choral and Orchestral Society gave a successful concert, on the 22nd ult., at the Hampstead Conservatoire, when the programme included Mendelssohn's "Loreley," "Their bodies are buried in peace," from Handel's Funeral Anthem, and the part-songs, "Moonlight" (Eaton Faning), "Phillis" (Parry), and "Hail, golden morn" (Sydenham), the latter and "Loreley" especially being very effectively sung by the choir, under the able direction of Mr. E. G. Croager. Songs were rendered by Miss Katie Thomas (who also sang the solo part in "Loreley") and Mr. Gervas Cooper, and interesting variety was imparted by Mr. Charles Fry's recitation of "King Robert of Sicily," with Mr. John E. West's music, the Chant of the Monks being sung by the male voices of the choir, and the organ accompaniment being played with much skill by Mr. E. G. Croager, who also played some pianoforte solos.

The London Sunday School Choir and Orchestra gave their annual concert in the Albert Hall, on the 17th ult., with successful results. There was a good selection of choral pieces, and their performance by the thousand voices, under Mr. William Whiteman, earned hearty commendation. The attack was firm, on the whole, and in the more massive pieces neither strength nor expression was lacking. The rendering of the chorale "To God on High" ("St. Paul"), J. H. Maunder's anthem "Sing to the Lord of Harvest," Dr. Warwick Jordan's "Come unto Me," and "Be not afraid" ("Elijah") showed careful preparation and watchfulness of the conductor. The orchestra contributed several pieces, and vocal solos were given by Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Esther Franklin, and Mr. Andrew Black.

The Victoria Madrigal Society, at St. Martin's Town Hall, on the 15th ult., adhered to its laudable purpose of offering ancient as well as modern unaccompanied part-music. Of the former there were several charming specimens, including Wilbye's "Sweet honey-sucking bees" and Croce's "Cynthia, thy song." Under the direction of Dr. G. Stanley Murray, these delights were rendered with spirit, combined with the utmost regard for light and shade. Sir Frederick Bridge's masterly madrigal "Weep no more," Hecht's "Charge of the Light Brigade," and Pearsall's "Sir Patrick Spens" were also ably performed. Interspersed were songs by Miss Winifred Marwood and Mr. Montague Borwell, and pianoforte pieces played by Herr G. Liebling.

The Bow and Bromley Institute Choir gave an interesting concert on the 10th ult. The programme included "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" (S. Coleridge-Taylor), the tenor solo in which was most admirably sung by Mr. Henry Beaumont; Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, admirably played by Miss Elsie Horne, of the Royal Academy of Music; the choral ballad "Phaudrig Crohoore" (C. Villiers Stanford), and "Blest Pair of Sirens" (Parry). Miss Gwynne Kimpton was orchestral leader. Mr. H. E. Ellingford was at the organ and Dr. W. G. McNaught conducted.

An interesting concert and gymnastic display was held by the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Exeter Hall, on the 20th ult. The choir sang with spirit and effect "And the glory of the Lord," "The cloud-cap't tow'rs," and "Where the bee sucks." Miss Amelia Campbell contributed songs, a duet for two pianofortes by Herz was played by Miss Mabel Davis and Miss Emily Lucas, and some patriotic songs were also included in the programme.

The Beckenham Choral Society performed Haydn's "Creation," on January 30, with Miss Teresa Blamy, Mr. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Arthur Walenn as soloists. The choir sang excellently throughout, especially in the choruses "Awake the harp," "The Heavens are telling," "Achieved is the glorious work," and "Sing the Lord." The orchestra was efficient. Miss Evelyn Burrows presided at the pianoforte and Mr. G. J. Hall ably conducted.

The chief feature of Miss Clara Blumenthal's concert on the 5th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, was the performance of Edward Schütt's pleasing and musicianly Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 27), in which she was ably assisted by Mr. Richard Gompertz and Mr. Maurice Koopman. The concert-giver subsequently played several solos by Schumann, Brahms, and Chopin with notable intelligence and command of the keyboard. Mr. Hugo Heinz sang.

Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips gave their third Chamber concert this season on the 7th ult., at Steinway Hall, when the programme was opened with Dr. Ernest Walker's well-written Sonata for violin and pianoforte in A minor (Op. 8). Miss Barns's subsequent solos were rendered with her customary deftness and refinement, and Mr. Charles Phillips sang expressively Brahms's "Four Serious Songs."

Miss Johanna Heymann gave the second of her two recitals at Steinway Hall, on the 20th ult., when the chief works on her programme were Beethoven's Sonata in E minor (Op. 90) and a selection of familiar compositions by Chopin, which were well interpreted, her touch and execution being crisp and clear.

On the 20th ult., at Philbeach Hall, the Kensington Amateur Harmonic Society performed the second part of Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" and Elgar's cantata "The Banner of St. George," under the direction of Mr. Cyril Miller.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

A concert in aid of the Orphan Fund of the Ulster Institute of Journalists was given in the Ulster Hall, on January 26. The programme consisted of songs sung by Mrs. Fininghan, Madame Wilson Osman, Messrs. Dean, Mitton, and Harcourt; solos on the violin by Herr Korber, on the pianoforte by Dr. Lawrence Walker, and on the flute by Mr. T. H. Ogilvie. A full orchestra, conducted by Dr. Fred. Koeller, played Wagner's "Kaiser Marsch," Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and a Spanish Valse.

The third Subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 9th ult., the programme being miscellaneous and the principal performer, M. Emile Sauret, whose perfect violin playing was a treat to all lovers of music and probably surpassed any performance on that instrument ever heard in Belfast; for, strange as it may seem, neither Joachim, nor Sarasate, nor Ysaye have ever visited this city. M. Sauret's solo pieces were Vieuxtemps's Concerto in A minor, two compositions of his own, and Wieniawski's "Airs Russes." Miss Marie Bellas sang admirably in Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm and also in several songs. Mr. Herbert Walenn charmed the audience with several violoncello solos, and took part with M. Sauret and Mr. Stanley Hawley (the accompanist of the evening) in Beethoven's Trio (Op. 11). The concert as a whole was a distinct success.

Dr. Lawrence Walker's third Subscription concert was given on January 25, Herr Theodore Werner being the violinist, and his pieces being selected from composers of the nineteenth century—Cesar Franck, Vieuxtemps, Spohr, Paganini, and Wieniawski. Dr. Walker played pieces by Brahms, Chopin, and Liszt. Miss Daisy Creary was the vocalist.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Mr. Halford's sixth orchestral concert took place in the Town Hall, on January 30. The works presented were Beethoven's Overture "Prometheus," the First Symphony of Brahms, and the "Tannhäuser" Overture. All were finely played, and in the symphony the orchestra showed a marked advance. M. Alexander Siloti gave a superb rendering of the solo part in Tschaïkowsky's Pianoforte Concerto (Op. 23). The seventh concert was held on the 13th ult., when Weber's "Der Freischütz" and Massenet's "Phèdre" Overtures and Dvorák's symphony "From the New World" were given. The novelty of the concert was an orchestral ballade, "The Cenci," by a talented Birmingham musician, Mr. J. D. Davis. The work is not programme music, but an "impression" of the gruesome story. There are themes representing Count Cenci, Beatrice, and Lucretia. The whole is well written, effectively scored, and impressive, the gloomy atmosphere of the drama being faithfully realised. The performance was good, and the composer received a call at the close. Miss Agnes Witting made a favourable impression as vocalist.

The City Choral Society gave its second concert in the Town Hall, on the 1st ult. The programme was attractive, consisting of the oratorio "Noël," by Saint-Saëns, Horatio Parker's "The Kobolds," a selection from "Carmen," and Beethoven's "Battle Symphony" (Op. 91). With the exception of the "Carmen" music, everything was new here. The performance of the whole, under Mr. F. W. Beard's direction, was very creditable to the young Society. The principal vocalists were Miss Kate Bensberg, Miss Alice Lakin, Miss Kirkby Lunn, Mr. R. Cunningham, and Mr. John Ridding.

The fourth of the Harrison concerts took place in the Town Hall, on the 5th ult. The vocalists were Miss Clara Butt, Miss Haidée and Miss Blanche de Solla, Messrs. Kennerley Rumford, Gregory Hast, and Barry Lindon. Instrumental pieces were contributed by Mdlle. Ilona Eibenschütz (pianoforte) and Miss Gertrude Collins (violin), Mr. F. A. Sewell acting as accompanist.

On the 7th ult. the second of the Hallé concerts, under Dr. Richter, was held in the Town Hall. The programme comprised Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme, heard here for the first time, and another novelty, Svendsen's legend "Zorahayda." Elgar's work created a veritable furore, and the composer was twice called to the platform after the performance. A magnificent rendering of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony concluded a very fine concert.

Mr. Max Mossel's third drawing-room concert was given on the 15th ult. The programme included a violin sonata by Van Kor Kuiler. A Dutchman himself, Mr. Mossel keeps Dutch music well to the fore. Mr. Frederick Dawson was the pianist. Madame Blanche Marchesi, the vocalist, was unable to appear through illness.

On Saturday, the 3rd ult., Mr. Turner brought his season of opera to a close, when a crowded house witnessed the sixth performance of "Satanella." The same evening, at the Town Hall, the Midland Musical Society gave a concert-recital of Gounod's "Faust." On the following Saturday, the 10th ult., the Besses-o'-th'-Barns brass band gave two concerts in the Town Hall with much success.

The Festival Choral Society, on the 22nd ult., introduced to Birmingham the Hanley Festival novelty, Coleridge-Taylor's "The Death of Minnehaha," which was preceded by "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," and followed by a Handelian selection. The principal vocalists were Miss Ella Russell, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Trevose Daniel. Dr. Heap conducted. But I must defer notice of this concert till next month.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The second concert for the season of Miss Mary Lock's chamber concerts was held on the 2nd ult., in the smaller Victoria Room. The executants were Mr. Johan Duys (first violin), Mr. W. Schöttler (second violin), Mr. A. Wetten (viola), Mr. Percy Lewis (violoncello), and Miss Lock (pianoforte). The works rendered included Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 97) and Dvorák's Quartet in F (Op. 96), which were excellently interpreted. Miss Ada Phillips was the vocalist and Miss Elsie Bennett was the accompanist.

The Society of Instrumentalists gave a concert at the Victoria Rooms, on the 7th ult., in aid of the Lord Mayor of Bristol's Transvaal War Fund, Mr. George Riseley conducting. The band, consisting of 100 performers, mostly amateurs, creditably interpreted Haydn's Symphony in D and other compositions, amongst which were the suite "Le Roi s'amuse," by Delibes, and a valse by Tschaïkowsky, neither of which had been before heard in Bristol. There were songs by Miss Estella Linden, Miss Edith Leslie, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. F. Harford.

An important undertaking was inaugurated on the 10th ult., when the Riseley Male-voice Choir met for rehearsal, at the Museum Lecture Hall. Mr. George Riseley has formed the choir for the purpose of giving works composed for male voices with accompaniment. About 120 gentlemen had enrolled their names and ninety of these were present, amongst them many young voices that will prove most acceptable. The manner in which the members read the music at sight gives promise of excellent concerts next season. The compositions rehearsed included Mendelssohn's "Antigone," Gernsheim's "Salamis," Schubert's "The night is cloudless," and the Soldiers' chorus from Gounod's "Faust."

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society has given two performances since January. At the first, a Matinée at the Theatre Royal, Herr Bast played most admirably Saint-Saëns's difficult and effective Violoncello Concerto. The other novelty was Dvorák's Overture "In der Natur." Brahms's Second Symphony was repeated, and a thoroughly satisfactory performance of the first movement was the result. The Adagio still, however, seems to elude the grasp of the band. The programme also included Beethoven's "Egmont" and Tschaïkowsky's effective and popular suite "Casse Noisette." In the last Mr. C. W. Wilson played the celesta in the "Danse de la Fée Dragée" and evoked an emphatic encore.

The second concert was given on the 14th ult. The special attraction of the evening was, undoubtedly, Mr. Ernest Schelling, who played Chopin's F minor Pianoforte Concerto. Mr. Schelling's performances supply all the requisites of an artistic treat, and pleased as much in the romantic interpretation of a Chopin Nocturne and a Barcarolle by Rubinstein as in the difficult passages of Liszt's Sixth Rhapsodie. Saint-Saëns's "Rouet d'Omphale" was remarkably well played by the band, and the scheme included Beethoven's Second Symphony. Signor Esposito conducted, as usual.

Excellent unaccompanied choral singing was given by the Dublin Glee Singers (conductor, Mr. J. Seymour), who have won several distinctions at the Feis Ceoil. Perhaps the best pieces were Wesley's "O sing unto my roundelay" and Mr. Seymour's part-song "The bells of Shandon," a really delightful composition, in both of which the fresh and beautiful quality of the voices was particularly telling.

The following are the results of the composers' competitions in the Feis Ceoil:—

Cantata: The Rev. Dr. W. A. Houston-Collisson. Overture: Robert Dwyer. Arrangement of Irish airs for military band: Herr Henry Bast. String quartet: Herbert H. Harty. Anthem: The Rev. Dr. G. W. Torrance. Unaccompanied part-song: Carl G. Hardebeck. Violin and pianoforte duet: Herbert H. Harty. Song: Mrs. A. A. Needham. Song (Irish words): Mrs. Needham. Pianoforte solo: Herr Henry Bast. Organ solo: No award. Arrangement of Irish air as part-song: Mrs. Needham. Arrangement of Irish air as song: Mrs. Needham and the Rev. Dr. W. A. H. Collisson. Hymn tune: The Rev. Dr. G. W. Torrance.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Conducted by Dr. Horace Hill and led by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre, the Norwich Philharmonic Society gave its ninety-eighth concert on the 15th ult. The symphonies performed were Kalliwoda's (No. 1, in F minor) and Spohr's (No. 2, in D minor), both being full of melodious passages, well deserved a hearing. Beethoven's "Fidelio" Overture was also included in the programme. These works received, on the whole, a very creditable rendering by the band. Two movements from Beethoven's Trio in B flat for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, played by Mr. W. Gemmer, Mr. G. Clarke, and Mrs. Gemmer, and a selection from Weber's Clarinet Quintet, in which the solo part was played by Mr. E. Lake, were also included in the programme. Miss Lansdell and Miss Adela Tunbridge, both local débutantes, were the vocalists.

Mr. Frederick Dawson gave a pianoforte recital in Noverre's Room, Norwich, on the 2nd ult., which was thinly attended. No English composer figured in the programme, and it was generally felt that less muscular power would have improved an otherwise fine performance.

Macfarren's cantata "May Day" formed the principal piece in the programme of a concert given on the 1st ult., by the Reepham Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Hornigold, who secured a creditable performance.

The Ipswich Choral Society signalised the opening of its season of 1900, on the 7th ult., by a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," conducted by Mr. Bunnell Burton, whose devotion to the cause of music has done much to raise the status of the art in Ipswich. The chorus was fairly balanced and did its work with commendable zeal, while the local band, assisted by several London professionals and led by Mr. Charles Cooke, gave an excellent rendering of the accompaniments. The celebrated love song, "Onaway! awake, beloved!" was sung by Mr. Philip Brozel. The second half of the concert embraced Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," the Dervishes' chorus from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," and other vocal and instrumental numbers.

Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm were the chief selections in the North Walsham Amateur Musical Society's concert, on the 21st ult. Miss Mildred Rix, Miss Edith Nutter, Mr. Murray Rumsey, and Mr. E. Freeman sang the solo parts, while a small string band with pianoforte and harmonium were responsible for the accompaniments. The chorus consisted of local amateurs, whose work showed how painstaking had been Dr. Horace Hill, who conducted with his usual tact.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

It is difficult to speak in terms which will not seem exaggerated of Mr. Moonie's Choir concert, on the 9th ult., when the Music Hall was filled to overflowing with a sympathetic audience. This young choir has certain advantages over older established choral societies in its personnel and personality, which would be as invidious to dwell upon as they are immediately obvious to the critical hearer. The soprano voices are delightfully fresh, the tenors seem to have more grip than is usual, and the chorus generally sounded as fresh at the end of the concert as at the beginning. The works chosen were the "Creation," which received a heart-stirring rendering, and Coleridge-Taylor's picturesque setting of "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." A most capable orchestra, recruited from local sources, showed that a good conductor need not go far afield for his players, and administered a severe reproof to the prevailing and most harmful tendency to avoid that which is local. The soloists were Miss Lancaster and Messrs. Green and Atherton Smith.

Messrs. Paterson's thirteenth annual series of orchestral concerts was brought to a successful conclusion on the 14th ult., when Mr. Paterson was able to submit to his patrons an encouraging report. The violin playing of Herr Carl Halir (Beethoven's Concerto at the eighth concert) and of M. Ysaye (Lalo's Concerto, 14th ult.) remain outstanding memories of the season. Both artists were accorded great ovations and both played extracts from Bach as encores. Other soloists during the latter part of the season who should be mentioned are Madame Marchesi, Mr. Andrew Black ("Wotan's Abschied"), and M. Maurice Sons, all of whom were received with great favour. The eighth season of the Scottish Orchestra in Edinburgh was brought to a close with a very unsuccessful performance of the C minor Symphony.

Mr. Denhof's fourth Chamber concert (7th ult.), in the Music Hall, was distinguished by the appearance of the Kruse Quartet (Beethoven's Quartet and Schumann's Quintet). Miss Gordon Pillans sang with much acceptance. Mr. Walenn's violoncello solos were most enjoyable.

At the fourth of Professor Niecks's University lectures (13th ult.) Miss Fanny Davies gave a Schumann recital, the programme of which included the "Carnival," "Kreisleriana," and Fantasia in C. At the previous concert a selected body of singers from Mr. Moonie's Choir gave a most interesting selection from Purcell's works.

About fifty members have already been enrolled in the "Edinburgh Musical Education Society," and there was a good attendance, on the 12th ult., to hear the President, Professor Niecks, deliver the first address. His subject was "Ethics in music, a neglected factor in the teaching of music." The paper at the second fortnightly meeting was contributed by Mr. Franklin Peterson, his theme being "The use of homely illustration in teaching the young."

The Edinburgh Bach Society held its third meeting on the 21st ult. The programme included the duet from the B minor Mass, "Italian" Concerto, sonatas for violin and pianoforte, &c. Professor Sir Frederick Bridge has accepted the invitation to join the list of honorary members.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The month of February has been marked in Glasgow by an event of considerable musical importance—namely, the production by the Choral and Orchestral Union, for the first time in Great Britain, of César Franck's "The Beatitudes." Each of the Beatitudes is treated in a separate part, and solo parts are created for the Voice of Christ, the Angel of Pardon, the Angel of Death, Satan, the Virgin, &c. Between these and the chorus and a quintet the work is divided in conventional style. Necessarily somewhat lugubrious, the treatment is always exceedingly sympathetic; the chorus is handled with knowledge of its capacity, while the powers of the choristers are not underestimated by the composer, and the orchestral accompaniment betrays a master-hand. Characteristic motives are used to some extent, but naturally the oratorio has little of the dramatic in it. Considering the novelty and difficulty of the work, its performance on the 6th ult. reflected great credit on the Glasgow Choral Union. The Scottish Orchestra's accompaniments left a good deal to be desired; but the cast of soloists, which included Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. David Hughes, and members of the Union, was entirely satisfactory.

At other classical concerts in Glasgow, Herr Carl Halir and M. Ysaye, the eminent violinists, have appeared.

Herr Halir, who had not before been heard here, made a deep impression by the classical reserve of his style in the Beethoven Concerto. M. Ysaye played the second Bach Concerto and Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole. The most notable works performed by the Scottish Orchestra, under Mr. Bruch, have been Dvorák's Symphony (No. 3) in F and Brahms's No. 4, while Mr. Elgar's Variations have not only been repeated, but have become exceedingly popular.

Very creditable readings of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and "The Death of Minnehaha" were given by the Greenock Choral Union on the 15th ult., Mr. Hoeck conducting.

The series of Classical and Popular concerts promoted by the Choral and Orchestral Union of Glasgow was brought to a close, on the 17th ult., with the usual "plebiscite programme" concert. It is worthy of note that Schubert's "Unfinished," which has for many years been the choice of the voters, has this year been displaced in favour of Tschaïkowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique," the votes being: "Pathétique," 631; "Unfinished," 422; Dvorák's "New World" Symphony came next with 285.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Liverpool Orchestral Society at its concert given under Mr. A. E. Rodewald's direction, on the 17th ult., presented Goetz's Symphony in F and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha" Overture. The Society, which comprises some 600 members, has done much for the appreciation of orchestral music. Much is also being done as regards improving the popular taste for good music by the Sunday Society, whose orchestra and chorus, under the direction of Mr. W. I. Argent, undertake some very onerous work. On the 11th ult. the programme of the concert at St. George's Hall comprised the Overture and Spinning Wheel chorus from "The Flying Dutchman" and the March and Battle Hymn from "Rienzi." The performance of the selections, both orchestral and choral, was most commendable. Miss Evelyn de Lara and Mr. E. Trowbridge were the solo vocalists.

The additional opportunities for hearing chamber music afforded by Mr. Theo. Lawson's concerts have been fully taken advantage of. At the concert on January 30 two very acceptable selections were Haydn's Quartet in D major (Op. 76, No. 5) and Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor (Op. 151). The players were Mr. Adolph Brodsky, Mr. Rawdon Briggs, Mr. S. Speelman, and Mr. Carl Fuchs. Mr. Steudner Welsing contributed a luminous rendering of Chopin's Sonata in B minor (Op. 58). Mr. Ernest Schiever's series of Chamber concerts was continued at the College of Music on the 10th ult., when an exceptionally interesting programme included Schumann's Quartet (Op. 41), and the celebrated Pianoforte Quartet in A, by Brahms (Op. 26). Mr. Steudner Welsing was the pianist. The pleasure of this admirable concert was increased by the appearance of Miss Mary Hillhouse, a very accomplished vocalist.

A concert took place at the Liverpool College, Shaw Street, on the 12th ult., which merits attention from the ability displayed by a chorus of 150 boys in rendering part-songs, and from the fact that the orchestra performed Gounod's overture "Mirella" and two movements from Mozart's Symphony in E flat. The choir and orchestra were directed by Mr. W. Jowett, the music-master, by whom they have been trained.

Although the cultivation of music on the Cheshire side of the Mersey is apparently somewhat uphill work at present, the societies in Birkenhead and Wallasey display considerable perseverance. On the 17th ult. the Wallasey Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. J. F. Swift, rendered Mr. J. M. Smieton's dramatic cantata "King Arthur." The principals were Miss May Edwards and Messrs. T. Barlow and J. Harvey Gibson. The choruses for female voices, a leading feature of the cantata, were very well sung. The Liscard Orchestral Society gave an orchestral concert on the 13th ult.

To Dr. Richter's concert on the same date it is not necessary to refer further than to the fact that the programme included Mr. Elgar's "Variations," first performed at the New Brighton Tower concerts in July last, which proved to be a very welcome feature.

The Philharmonic concert, on the 6th ult., was chiefly devoted to Wagner. For the revival of Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," at the Philharmonic concert, on the 20th ult., Mr. F. H. Cowen merits a tribute of appreciation. It afforded the chorus an opportunity of achieving marked distinction. The principals were Miss Clara Butt, Mr. William Green, and Mr. T. Daniels. Miss Butt distinguished herself in the four selections from Elgar's "Sea Pictures." Much of the attractiveness of the concert was due to the performance, for the first time here, of Mr. Cowen's setting of the "Ode to the Passions," which had a most cordial reception.

Some interest has been caused locally by the appointment of Mr. J. W. Collinson as director of the Morecambe Pier concerts, in succession to Mr. E. de Jong.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Dr. Richter's return was deservedly welcomed by a crowded assembly at the Hallé concert on the 1st ult., and the stimulation of his presence was immediately apparent. In the "Eroica" the incisive crispness of attack of all the brighter themes and the delicacies of expression in the quieter portions were most charmingly illustrative of the varying moods of the composer of that unsurpassed symphony. Nor was the influence of the conductor less evident in the close adherence of the orchestra to the soloist throughout Liszt's First Concerto, splendidly played by Herr Rosenthal, who, later in the evening, aroused the greatest excitement by the wonderful skill with which he conquered all the technical difficulties of the "Masaniello" Tarantella of the same author.

At the succeeding concert, on the 8th ult., the Fourth Symphony of Tschaïkowsky, given here for the third time, exercised all the charm of a new work, so brightly was it rendered. Especially delightful was the Andantino, and very alluring the Scherzo, with its bustle of plucked strings; and although, perhaps, the first Allegro might well bear some curtailment and the Finale some repression of force, yet the peculiarities of the Russian school of orchestration were well shown and the effect was the very reverse of sombre. The "Variations on an Original Theme" (Op. 36), for orchestra, of Edward Elgar, displayed the quick fancy, varied treatment, and brilliant scoring which we now look for in all the larger works of this promising young composer, who, from his seat among the audience, was twice summoned to receive commendation. It would have been better had Miss Palliser chosen a livelier scena than that in which Desdemona gives vent to her melancholy forebodings in Verdi's "Otello"; and she might have drawn from old Scarlatti's vocal works something far more valuable than the "O rendimi il mio core."

Schubert's great Symphony in C was given on the 15th ult., and Mr. Brodsky revelled in the intricacies of the Brahms Violin Concerto he loves so well. Wagner's "Faust" Overture and Svendsen's "Zorahayda" Orchestral Fantasia completed the programme. For the annual presentation of "Elijah," on the 22nd ult., Miss Mabel Berrey was again engaged, as well as Miss Ada Crossley, with Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. Santley.

The fourth of the Harrison Subscription concerts brought a host of vocalists, including Miss Clara Butt, Miss Haidée and Miss Blanche de Solla, with Mr. Kennerley Rumford and Mr. Barry Lindon; between whose ballads were interspersed some clever violin playing by Miss Gertrude Collins, and some very delicate pianoforte playing by Miss Ilona Eibenschütz.

At the Royal College, on the 13th ult., the students, at their open practice, showed the excellence of the work done in the Institution. There was some capital violin and pianoforte playing, notice being imperatively demanded of the really admirable rendering by Miss Webster of the Adagio and Finale of Beethoven's Sonata in B flat, Op. 106.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The second Subscription concert of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, given in the Mechanics' Hall, on the 8th ult., marked a red-letter day in the history of this excellent organisation. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted a band and chorus of 350 members, with results which prove that the musical resources of the city have never before been thoroughly fathomed. The programme was exacting, including Goring Thomas's cantata "Swan and Skylark," followed by the closing scene from "Das Rheingold" and the first act of "Lohengrin." In addition to the foregoing selections, the orchestra played the Funeral March from "Götterdämmerung." The vocal solos were carefully rendered by Madame Lucile Hill, Miss Kirkby Lunn, Madame Jennie Bentley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. W. A. Peterkin; Mr. Courtier-Dutton, unable to attend, was efficiently replaced by Mr. Montagu Borwell. The orchestra, which rendered a good account of itself, was led by Mr. J. Harold Henry, in the temporary absence of Mr. F. Ward, indisposed. The concert was given on festival lines, and reflected the greatest credit both on Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Society over which he so ably presides.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Wood's vocal recital at the Victoria Hall, Nottingham, on the 19th ult., was a decided artistic treat. The songs selected were the best of their kind, the rendering was always artistic, and the accompaniments were perfect. Mr. and Mrs. Wood were assisted by Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. W. H. Squire, whose violoncello solos were most carefully executed and received with enthusiasm.

MUSIC IN THE NORTH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Aberdeen Philharmonic Society gave the third concert of its series on January 16. The soloists were Madame Bertha Moore, Herr Ladislaus Pokorny (violin), and Herr August Reiter (pianoforte). Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm was performed by the choir and orchestra, under the baton of Herr Reiter, in a satisfactory manner, although the balance of the parts in the chorus was not so good as it ought to have been to obtain the most satisfactory results.

The Aberdeen Choral Union brought a successful season to a close on the 8th ult. with the engagement of the Scottish Orchestra. Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, wherein Mr. J. M. Nisbet at the pianoforte artistically filled his part, was done in a rather slipshod way by the choir, there being distinct evidence of want of practice.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Newcastle Chamber Music Society gave its third concert of the season in the Assembly Rooms, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on January 24. The principal feature of the concert was the performance, for the first time in this locality, of Brahms's fine Quintet in B minor for clarinet and strings. Herr Mühlfeld was specially engaged to play the clarinet part—which was written for him—and the other performers were Messrs. Brodsky, Briggs, Speelman, and Carl Fuchs. The programme also included Mozart's String Quartet in F major. Miss Hilda Foster was the vocalist and sang charmingly.

On January 30 the Whitburn Choral Society gave its first concert of the season, performing on the occasion Edward Elgar's cantata "The Banner of St. George," in which the singing of the choir was very creditable. This fine work has one advantage—it requires no soloists. One of its most characteristic features is the Epilogue (March), in which Mr. Elgar is at his best in impressive and exhilarating choral writing. Mr. C. W. Hawley conducted, and Miss Marie Robinson was the solo soprano at a very successful concert.

A very successful performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" was given in St. John's Church, Newcastle, on January 31, by the members of the Gateshead Vocal Society. The soloists were Miss Jenny Brown, Mrs. Adeline Scott, Mr. Edward Morgan, and Mr. R. Scott. Mr. J. E. Hutchinson presided at the organ and Mr. N. Laycock conducted.

The Durham Musical Society, of which Mr. F. Eustace Leatham is the conductor, gave an excellent concert in the Town Hall, Durham, on January 31, when Dr. Armes's cantata "St. John the Evangelist" and Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm were performed, the former under the conductorship of the composer, who was accorded a very flattering reception. Both works were performed in a very creditable manner. The principal artists were Madame Goodall, Miss Alderson, Mr. D. S. Macdonald, and Mr. J. Duncanson.

Handel's "Messiah" was performed in St. Aidan's Church, South Shields, on the 14th ult., under the baton of Mr. A. Docksey, the organist of the church. Mr. W. W. Lax was leader of the orchestra and Mr. T. W. Ritson presided at the organ.

On the 14th ult. an excellent performance of Berlioz's "Faust" was given in the Town Hall, Middlesbrough, by the Middlesbrough Musical Union. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Watkin Mills, an eminently satisfactory trio. Band and chorus were excellent and Mr. N. Kilburn, the conductor of the Society, is to be complimented upon the success of the performance. The Middlesbrough Musical Union is one of the most admirably managed Musical Societies in the North of England and has accomplished really good work in the eighteen years of its existence.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The most interesting event of the past month has been the establishment in the city of a professional orchestra. Although possessing several capable amateur bands, Sheffield has hitherto had to rely on touring parties for its best orchestral music, and consequently, at the recent festival, the entire band was imported. This state of things is now, it is hoped, at an end. At the inaugural concert of the Sheffield Orchestra, held in the Albert Hall, on the 15th ult., the professional instrumentalists of the city and district, well organised and conducted by Dr. Coward, proved themselves competent to perform and interpret high class orchestral music in an adequate and even brilliant manner. Beethoven's Symphony in C minor (No. 5) was more than satisfactorily played, and in such works as Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" Overture, Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody (No. 2), and the ballet music from Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," the performers played with a precision and smoothness that betokened careful rehearsal. The enterprise is one worthy of encouragement. Miss Elsie Horne gave an admirable interpretation of Rubinstein's D minor Pianoforte Concerto and Miss Ethel Wood sang ballads with much acceptance. Mr. Peasegood accompanied.

At Miss Foxon's third Chamber concert, given on the 19th ult., the Brodsky Quartet, Mr. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Frederick Dawson appeared. Mr. S. Liddle was the accompanist.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society gave its first concert of this season, on January 25, in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, when a programme of more than usual interest was performed, including "The Dream of Jubal" (Mackenzie), "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" (Coleridge-Taylor), a scena from Dr. Heap's "Fair Rosamond," and the Overtures "Merry Wives of Windsor" (Nicolai) and "Harold" (Dr. Hiles). The solos were in the capable hands of Madame Ruth Lamb and Mr. Branscombe, and Miss Mary Round gave the important recitations with excellent effect. The Overture "Harold" forms the prelude to an historic opera of that name and contains well worked out and interesting themes. Only the opening theme is used in the opera, as delineating the rugged determination of the hero's character. The composer is to be congratulated on the production of a work well worthy of his reputation. "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was given at the recent Festival. The only issue of the performance is that the work will bear repetition, new beauties being apparent in every page. Mr. Branscombe sang the one solo of the work, "Onaway! awake, beloved," most successfully. Madame Ruth Lamb sang the conductor's song from "Fair Rosamund," "Why tarries late my love." The cantata was written as the result of the first commission given by the North Staffordshire Festival executive and was produced by them ten years ago. Mr. Branscombe contributed, with success, the recitative and air "Wake from thy grave, Giselle," taken from Edward Loder's little known opera "The Midnight Dancers." The choral work throughout was excellent and the orchestra complete and effective. The ability of Dr. Heap as a conductor was never better proved than on this occasion. The only drawback was the small audience, and those who were absent missed one of the best concerts ever given in the Victoria Hall.

In the same place, on January 29, a concert was given in aid of the Mayor's War Fund, by the Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society. The programme included "The Parting Kiss," "Glory and Love," "The Slumber Song," "Rule, Britannia," and all present afterwards joined in singing the National Anthem. The Mayor of Hanley expressed his high appreciation of the kindness of the Society in furthering so good an object, and Mr. James Garner, the conductor, acknowledged the compliment.

The fifth concert of the eleventh season of the Meakin Popular Concerts was given in the Victoria Hall, Hanley, on the 5th ult., when a large audience was present. The chief attraction was the visit of the Meister Glee Singers. Their selection on this occasion was most attractive and was given with the refinement for which they are noted. Madame Osborne Williams was an agreeable soprano. Miss Irene Schaefsburg, the solo pianist, was well received, and Mr. Clinton's clarinet solos were highly appreciated. Mr. Sherratt accompanied throughout.

An evening concert was given in the Agricultural Hall, Wolverhampton, on the 12th ult. The first part of the programme consisted of a praiseworthy performance of A. R. Gaul's cantata "The Holy City." The members of the Wolverhampton Orchestral Society supplied the accompaniments, with Mr. W. J. Bennett at the organ. The solos were well sung by Miss Alice Allen, Miss Nellie Pritchard, Mr. W. Molineaux, and Mr. W. Evans. The concert was under the conductorship of Mr. Ernest Darby.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Cardiff Orchestral Society gave its second concert for the season on the 8th ult., being assisted by Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. John Thomas (Pencerdd Gwalia), all of whom were well received by a crowded audience, re-calls being the order of the evening. The best achievements of the orchestra were the "Der Freischütz" Overture, Liszt's No. 4 Hungarian Rhapsody, and Tschaïkowsky's "Chant sans Paroles"; also the accompaniment to Coleridge-Taylor's "Onaway! awake, beloved," sung irreproachably by Mr. Ben Davies. Mr. J. E. Deacon conducted with his usual care and ability, and Mrs. Novello Davies rendered excellent service at the pianoforte.

A new organ, built by Messrs. P. Conacher and Co., Huddersfield, at a cost of about £520, was opened at the Carmel Welsh Congregational Church, Treherbert, Glamorganshire, on the 14th ult., by Mr. Harry Evans, of Merthyr, who rendered works by Mendelssohn, Rinck, Lemmens, Batiste, and others. The instrument and its manipulation were much appreciated by a crowded congregation. Some vocal solos, &c., were also given, as well as a Welsh anthem and a Mendelssohn chorus by the choir.

The address recently delivered by Principal Reichel, University College of North Wales, Bangor, at the Newtown County Schools (Montgomeryshire), in which he dealt largely with the educational function of music and the utilisation of national music in schools, has been issued as a separate paper. It is to be hoped that its circulation may lead to more attention being paid to music, especially the music of the people, in the elementary as well as the intermediate schools of the Principality.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

LEEDS.

Compared with the records of recent years it cannot be said that the war fever has seriously affected concert-giving in Yorkshire. In Leeds, indeed, it might be asserted with at least literal accuracy that concerts have jostled each other, seeing that, on the 12th ult., two Chamber concerts of exceptional interest, given by Miss Eisele and Mr. Rawdon Briggs respectively, actually clashed, and to some extent neutralized each other's success. The appearance of Mr. Leonard Borwick at the latter, and the performance of a pianoforte and violin sonata by Richard Strauss at the former, are the features that most deserve record. The Messrs. Haddock, most active of local concert-givers, have twice—on January 23 and the 6th ult.—brought forward their recently organised orchestra. On each occasion Tschaïkowsky's "1812" Overture was performed with fair success, taking into consideration the material of the band. On the former date Mr. Verbrugghen played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto most ably, and a musicianly set of Variations by Mr. Willibald Richter, for the singular combination of strings and flute, was introduced. On the latter date Mr. T. Ellis gave a refined but rather tame reading of Beethoven's C minor Concerto for pianoforte. Mr. Edgar Haddock conducted on each occasion very intelligently and carefully. Two more smoking concerts of chamber music, given on January 26 and the 16th ult., by the "Bohemian" Association, must be briefly recorded. Mr. E. Elliott's Quartet Party, which is rapidly acquiring a really finished ensemble, supplied the well-chosen programmes. On the 19th ult. Mr. Elliott gave a Chamber concert on his own account, at which Brahms's superb Sextet in B flat and Tschaïkowsky's brilliant Pianoforte Trio in A minor were performed, the latter for the first time in Leeds, if not in Yorkshire. The event of the month's music has undoubtedly been the Subscription concert on January 31, when the Hallé Orchestra reached what can only be described as its high-water mark, in a superb performance of Tschaïkowsky's Fourth Symphony, in which the vivid and romantic colouring and sudden dynamic changes were reproduced with a force and precision that nothing could surpass. Less startling, but equally great, was the band's performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, but here the soloist, Mr. Henley, though he played with extreme brilliancy, especially in the cadenzas, did not by any means reach the level of interpretation required by the music. Dr. Richter conducted.

BRADFORD.

Under Mr. Cowen's drilling the Bradford Permanent Orchestra has improved both in its playing and its programmes. Since last writing it has given two concerts. On January 27 Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and the "Meistersinger" Overture were most effectively played, and Miss Clara Butt helped materially to make the concert a popular success. On the 17th ult. the Festival Choral Society assisted in an interesting programme, singing Mozart's "Ave Verum," Mendelssohn's "Loreley" Finale, and a chorus from Glinka's "Life for the Czar," while the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert was the chief contribution of the orchestra. Miss Helen Jaxon was the vocalist. On the 9th ult. one of the Subscription concerts furnished an illustration—which, coming so soon after the Leeds concert already mentioned, was all the more striking—of what Dr. Richter has accomplished since he took command of the Hallé Orchestra. He has often given us fine performances of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, but seldom a finer one than on this occasion; while even the familiar "Freischütz" Overture appeared in a fresh and nobler light under his fine interpretation. Mr. Elgar's picturesque and characteristic Variations—or musical portrait gallery, as they might be called—were most brilliantly played, and the concert was altogether exceptionally enjoyable. On the 6th ult. Miss E. A. Atkinson gave a pianoforte recital, assisted by Miss Wehner as vocalist.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

At Dewsbury the local orchestral society, of which Mr. G. H. Hirst is the enthusiastic and able amateur conductor, gave, on the 13th ult., an "Edward German" concert, the interest of which was materially enhanced by the presence of the composer, who conducted his own compositions, of which the programme chiefly consisted. His picturesque symphonic poem "Hamlet" was the central feature of the concert, and was wonderfully well played, considering that a majority of the band were amateurs. This had not before been heard in Yorkshire, nor had the melodious "Harvest" Dance from the Norwich suite, while a series of songs, sung most sympathetically by Miss Hilda and Miss Muriel Foster, were brand new, and heard for absolutely the first time. For the rest, we had more familiar extracts from the "Richard III.," "Henry VIII.," and "As you like it" music, the enumeration of which shows how much Mr. German has owed to Shakespeare for inspiration. The high level of excellence reached by the band in so exacting a programme spoke volumes for Mr. Hirst's work of preparation, and should serve as a wholesome lesson for the neighbouring town of Leeds, where the local orchestra movement has ended in a lamentable fizzle.

At Huddersfield the Subscription concerts, which entertain, if they do not materially elevate, a large mass of subscribers, have pursued their accustomed course. On January 30 Mr. Edgar Haddock took over his new orchestra and gave the "1812" Overture, in which they have so far had a monopoly which we do not particularly desire to see broken up. Mr. Henley played Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto dexterously enough, and Messrs. Ross gave some of their highly finished performances on two pianofortes. Miss Louise Dale was the vocalist. On the 13th ult. the Welsh Ladies' Choir, under Madame Clara Novello Davies' conductorship, with Mr. Fricker as organist and Miss Marie N. Williams as vocalist, furnished a popular programme of the usual type.

York is not phenomenally active in musical matters, but it can boast of a series of thoroughly good Chamber concerts in those given by the York Musical Union. On January 17 Mr. Mühlfeld, with Messrs. Fuchs (violoncello) and Cohn (pianoforte), played Beethoven's early Trio in B flat and Brahms's Clarinet Trio in A minor (Op. 114), the great clarinettist making, it need hardly be said, a strong impression on this his first visit to the city. A local violoncellist, Mr. Jack Groves, gave an enjoyable little concert on the 8th ult., being joined by his sisters, Marion and Elsie (violin) and Katharine (pianoforte), who gave a good account of Dvorák's pleasant "Bagatellen." Miss Grainger Kerr and Mr. Dickon Wilson sang.

There is not much of interest to add to this brief record. The Cleckheaton Orchestral Society gave a concert on the 5th ult., in which the useful and the sweet were discreetly mingled. Mr. C. Stott, in addition to his work as conductor, played Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto neatly and sympathetically, and the first movement of the "Unfinished" Symphony showed to advantage the prowess of the orchestra. A miscellaneous concert by the Hull Vocal Society, on January 30, calls for no more than a formal record.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. George Langley delivered a lecture on "Music as a means of expression," before the Society for the Encouragement of Fine Arts, on January 25. He explained that expression had two meanings. We can say of the writer, "he expresses himself well," and of the reader, "he reads with expression." So in music there is expression from the performer's point of view. With regard to the first of these, the composer's medium of expression was of a threefold nature, and consisted of the three prime elements, rhythm, melody, and harmony. In these and in these alone the composer sets down his ideas. Mr. Langley dealt with each of these elements, illustrating their functions and calling special attention to the importance which Beethoven attached to rhythm as revealed by his annotations to Cramer's Studies. So far as expression lay in the hands of the performer, it consisted merely of two elements—tone and pace. Mr. Langley demonstrated the co-relationship of these two elements with the two complementary divisions of the mind—emotion and intellect. The lecture concluded with a review of the development of music as a means of expression. Here stress was laid upon the great stride Beethoven made in definiteness and force of expression. In illustration of this point Mr. Langley played the first movement of a Sonata in E flat by Haydn and the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor, Op. 31, No. 2. Mr. J. S. Shedlock took the chair at the opening of the lecture, but Mr. E. F. Jacques occupied it for the remainder of the evening. At the close of the discourse Mr. Jacques warmly eulogized Mr. Langley's method of approaching his subject. It was, in his opinion, quite the right way, though he found himself unable altogether to agree with some of the conclusions arrived at. Dr. Phené (president of the Society) and Mr. Philip H. Newman (the hon. secretary and treasurer) also spoke appreciatively of the lecture, and the usual vote of thanks to its deliverer was warmly received.

The first annual festival of the North London Baptist Choirs Association (organised by Mr. H. T. Smets) took place at Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington Road, on the 15th ult. The order of service included a short organ recital by Mr. John Hillier, several hymns, and the following anthems: "Praise the Lord" (Elvey), "O worship the King" (Maunder), "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace" (Lee Williams), "Lift up your heads" (Hopkins), and Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" (the solo by Miss Mary Fuchs). Organ voluntaries were also played by Mr. Arthur Cherry and Mr. Frederic E. Stacy. Mr. G. W. Hardwidge and Mr. G. E. Arundel carried out successfully the duties of conductor and organist.

The Rev. S. J. P. Dunman delivered an interesting and instructive lecture on "Hymns and Hymn Tunes," at Bow Wesleyan Church, on the 7th ult. Various illustrations were rendered at certain points by the choir, and in one or two instances by the lecturer himself.

The promised summary of Sir Hubert Parry's Royal Institution lectures on "Neglected by-ways in music," which the lecturer has specially prepared for The Musical Times, is unavoidably held over till next month.

Dr. Frederick G. Shinn has been appointed Professor of Ear-Training at the Guildhall School of Music.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Berlin.—The Stern'sche Gesang-Verein, at its concert of the 5th ult., rendered a good account of itself in the performance of Bach's "Magnificat" and Beethoven's Choral Fantasia. At the same concert a new work, "Der Nornen Wiegenlied," for chorus and orchestra, by the conductor, Professor F. Gernsheim, a melodious composition and well-written for the voices, was heard for the first time and greatly appreciated.——At the second concert of the season of the Philharmonic Choir, in which Bach was represented by two cantatas and Brahms by the "Song of Destiny," a cantata, "Euphorion" (the words from Goethe's "Faust," second part), for soli, chorus, and orchestra, by the talented young Munich composer, Wilhelm Berger, was produced for the first time and very favourably received. Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave recitals here last month, with considerable success.——Reinhold Becker's new one-act opera, "Ratbold," has been the only novelty recently brought out at the Royal Opera and, though well received, is not likely to maintain itself on the répertoire for any length of time.

Brussels.—The appointment to the directorship of the Théâtre de la Monnaie of M. Maurice Kufferath, the distinguished musical savant and editor of the Guide Musical, and M. Guidé, professor at the Conservatoire, has given general satisfaction in musical circles of this capital. Under the auspices of the new directorate, performances of the entire "Nibelungen" tetralogy are to be given in the coming season, under the conductorship of Herr Mottl, of Carlsruhe, who has also consented to conduct a series of model performances of Mozart's operas.

Cassel.—A special performance took place recently, at the Court Theatre, of Cherubini's opera "The Water Carrier" ("Les deux Journées"), in celebration of the centenary of the first production (on January 16, 1800, at the Feydeau Theatre, in Paris) of that charming work.

Clermont-Ferrand.—A very fine new organ was inaugurated, on the 3rd ult., at the Parochial Church of Saint Genès-les-Carmes, by a recital given by the excellent organist, M. Dallier. The instrument is the work of the well known organ builders, Michel Merkling, of Lyons.

Cologne.—An excellent performance of Handel's "Jubilate," for soli, chorus, orchestra, organ, and cembalo, was given at the sixth Gürzenich concert last month, under Dr. Wüllner's direction.

Florence.—A new Requiem by the Maëstro Giuseppe Ceccherini was performed at the Church of the Annunciation, on the 2nd ult., by a choir of 200 voices, under the direction of Signor Tacchini, producing a very marked impression. The work, which is somewhat modern in style, is written for three solo voices and chorus, with organ and orchestral accompaniment.

Frankfort-on-Main.—The new Passion oratorio by Julius Woyrsch, an important work, in which the composer, while taking Bach for his model, has availed himself with considerable ability of all the resources of the modern orchestra, was produced last month by the Rühl'sche Gesang-Verein, under the composer's direction, and with Mesdames Uzielli and Bratenisch, Herren Burgstaller, Sistermans, and Weilhammer in the solo parts. The performance was an excellent one and produced a very marked impression.

Leipzig.—At the instance of MM. Alexander Siloti and W. Sapellnikoff, a marble bust of Peter Tschaïkowsky, their former teacher in composition, is about to be placed in the foyer of the Gewandhaus. It is the work of the Russian sculptor, Robert Bach, who has also in hand a similar bust of Liszt, which M. Siloti intends likewise to present to the Gewandhaus authorities. Mr. Frederick Lamond has recently given four Beethoven recitals, with enormous success.

Mannheim.—A new symphony bearing the suggestive title of "Youth," by the well-known composer, Waldemar von Baussnern, was recently produced at the fourth Academy concert and greatly appreciated by a numerous audience. The work is divided into four movements, descriptive of youthful aspirations, not devoid of the humorous element, and was generally regarded as a spirited, highly characteristic, and musicianlike production.

Munich.—The Kaim Orchestra, under its second conductor, Herr Sigmund von Hausegger, inaugurated last month a series of concerts, which will be devoted only to modern compositions. Amongst the works which obtained a hearing at the first of these concerts may be instanced Alexander Ritter's characteristic symphonic valse, "Olaf's Reigen"; the second movement of a remarkable symphonic poem, "Das Leben ein Traum," by Frederick Klose; and a highly effective and finely instrumented hymn for tenor solo, organ, and orchestra, by Hermann Bischoff.——An interesting and poetically conceived picture, representing Brahms improvising at the pianoforte, recently published by Obernetter's photographic art establishment, is attracting much attention in musical circles. It is a reproduction of a chalk drawing by W. von Beckerath.

New York.—A colossal bust of Richard Wagner, intended for presentation, as first prize, at the forthcoming great competition of United States Choral Societies, is just now being exhibited at Brooklyn. It is the work of the talented young sculptor, Robert Golde, representing the master at about the age of sixty. It is considered to be an excellent likeness.

Paris.—"Lancelot," a lyrical drama in four acts, the music by Victorin Joncières, was brought out at the Opéra on the 7th ult., with Mdlle. Delna and MM. Vaguet and Renaud in the principal parts. The libretto, from the pen of M. Edouard Blau and the late Louis Gallet, is, of course, founded upon the Arthurian legend and contains some very effective scenes. With a very good performance, and mounted, as it was, with great liberality and care, the new work met with a very favourable reception.—— New operatic works were also successfully launched last month at the Opéra Comique and the Théâtre Lyrique—viz., at the first-named house, the "roman musical," in four acts, entitled "Louise," by Gustave Charpentier, and at the latter, the "conte flamand," in three acts, "Martin et Martine," the music by Emile Trépard. In the case of M. Charpentier's work, indeed, the reception accorded was an enthusiastic one.——M. Capoul, the once popular tenor of the Opéra Comique, has been appointed a director (in association with M. Gailhard) of the Opéra, in the room of the late M. Bertrand.——At the Conservatoire concert of the 4th ult., which included a vociferously applauded performance of Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Roméo et Juliette," a setting of the 136th Psalm, by M. Guy Ropartz, met with a reception highly flattering to the talented director of the Nancy Conservatoire.

Vienna.—A new ballet, "Das Buckelhaus," the music by Joseph Bayer, was very well received on its first performance on the 4th ult. The new conductor, Herr Schalk, formerly of the Berlin Opera, introduced himself very favourably on the 8th ult. with a performance of "Lohengrin." He is a native of Vienna.——Anton Bruckner's Symphony in E flat major (No. 4) was included in the performance of the Philharmonic concert last month, and aroused much enthusiasm. Bruckner's noble Mass in D minor was produced at the concert of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, on the 11th ult., under Herr von Perger's direction, while Herr Zemlinsky conducted a new manuscript work from his pen, for solo, chorus, and orchestra, entitled "Frühlings Begräbniss," which was well received. The Fitzner Quartet, in its performance of the 7th ult., introduced a new String Quartet in E minor, by Hans Fink, already well known as a composer of chamber works, which was received with great favour.

OBITUARY.

The death of Carl Drechsler Hamilton, on January 31, removed one of the best known and most widely respected figures in Edinburgh musical circles. His friends, who knew his ever fresh interest in musical matters, his warm heart, and his genial good fellowship, scarcely realised that he was the doyen of the profession in Edinburgh. He looked too young for that distinction, but he began his professional life very early, and, passing away at the age of fifty-three, he leaves an almost unbroken record of more than forty years' work in his native city. The unanimous affection and kindly feeling of pupils, choral and orchestral societies, and the public generally were shown in a marked degree at his funeral, which took place on the 3rd ult.

The death is announced, on January 26, at Prague, of Franz Blazek, for many years a professor at the School of Organists, and a much-sought teacher of harmony and counterpoint in the Bohemian capital, aged eighty-five. Dvorák and Bendl were amongst his pupils.

Ludwig Bussler, the well-known Berlin musician and musical author, died in that capital on January 28. He was for over twenty years a professor of musical theory at the Stern'sche Conservatorium, and some ten years ago succeeded Gumprecht in the post of musical critic of the National Zeitung. Bussler published a valuable history of music, and his numerous theoretical works have been widely appreciated. He was born at Berlin in 1838.

Dr. Otto Gumprecht, for many years the highly esteemed and influential critic of the Berlin National Zeitung and other journals, died on the 6th ult. at Meran, where he had, during the last ten years, lived in retirement at the age of seventy-seven. Among his publications in book form, the best known are "Musikalische Characterbilder" and "Unsere classischen Meister." He was a distinct opponent of the Wagnerian school.

The celebrated basso, Tagliafico, associated during many seasons with the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden died recently at Nice, aged seventy-nine. He was the composer of some songs that were, at one time, highly popular, and an apt translator into French of several Italian, Spanish, and English librettos.

The death took place very suddenly on the 16th ult., at his residence, Whitton, Middlesex, of the Rev. John Powley, who was for thirty-two years (till 1897) music-teacher and choirmaster at Bradfield College, Reading. His successor, Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams, writes in reference to the sad event: "Mr. Powley, during his long residence at Bradfield, earned the love and respect of all with whom he came in contact, both masters and boys. He published little, and was therefore little known in the musical world; but as a thorough musician of the old cathedral school (he began life as a choir boy in Exeter Cathedral) and a Christian gentleman of the highest type he will long be remembered by his pupils and his many friends." Mr. Powley composed music for the following performances at Bradfield College: "Alcestis" (1883), "Antigone" (1890), and "Agamemnon" (1892).

The death of Mr. Battison Haynes is referred to on page 183.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TURNER'S ANTHEM "LIFT UP YOUR HEADS."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—In the extremely interesting account of Dr. Armes, given in your current issue, I observe that it is stated that Turner's anthem "Lift up your heads" (forming one of the musical illustrations to the Professor's Norwich Church Congress Lecture of 1895) is unpublished.

Permit me to point out that the anthem was printed, not only in Playford's "Musical Companion," 1701—during the composer's lifetime—but also among the anthems edited for "The Parish Choir," by the Rev. Sir W. H. Cope, Bart., between 1846 and 1850, and subsequently issued in collected form. It is a charmingly fresh and melodious little composition, and I am not surprised that "it obtained an encore" at the Norwich lecture. It might well be reprinted as a useful short anthem or introit for Ascensiontide.—Faithfully yours,

John S. Bumpus.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Bathwick.—Jacobi's popular fairy operetta "Cinderella" was performed by the children attending the Parochial Schools, at the Church House, Grove Street, on the afternoon and evening of the 7th ult. The choruses were sung with spirit, and the youthful performers entered with zest into their parts. The dresses were pretty and effective and the whole performance reflected great credit on Mr. H. Bowen, the headmaster of the Schools. Mr. Shapcott Wensley, the author of the libretto, was present and expressed his pleasure at the performance.

Bothwell (N.B.).—The Musical Society at its annual concert, on the 9th ult., gave a creditable performance of "Spring's Message" (Gade) and "St. Cecilia's Day" (Van Bree). Miss Marguerite Simpson received a cordial welcome for the bright and finished rendering of her solos, and Mr. A. Fallow gave two baritone songs. The accompaniments were played by Miss Ewen (pianoforte) and Mr. W. Padget Gale (harmonium). The conductor, Mr. H. W. Jones, may be congratulated upon the successful issue of the concert.

Bromley.—Gaul's "Holy City" was given in the Parish Church, on January 26, under the able direction of Mr. F. Fertel. The choruses were sung with smoothness and excellent tone, and the solos were undertaken by Masters Herbert Harden, and F. Race, Mr. Albert Day, and Mr. B. H. Latter. The cantata was preceded by Scharwenka's Andante Religioso for harp, strings, and organ, and followed by Sullivan's Overture "In Memoriam," the organ being in the capable hands of Mr. P. D. Hodsoll, the harpist being Miss Molteno, and Mr. Norman Bath leading the string band. It should be stated that the chorus was formed of the choirs of the Parish Church and of St. Mark's. ——On January 30, at the Children's Church, an interesting programme was presented by the Shortlands Orchestra. It included Introduction, Act 3, and "Bridal" Chorus, "Lohengrin," Haydn's Symphony (No. 4), Rameau's Gavotte in D, and Eaton Faning's patriotic song, "Obedient to the call." The solo vocalists were Miss Skipworth and Mr. H. J. Moodie. Mr. E. T. Cryer gave a violin solo and Miss Effie Carter a recitation. Mr. C. H. Venning conducted.

Dauntrey.—A performance of Jacobi's operetta "Cinderella" was given on the 14th ult. The rendering left nothing to be desired, the chorus singing being specially good. The fairies' dance was very pretty, and their grouping around their Queen, with Cinderella in the background, at the Incantation, was exceedingly picturesque. The band played extremely well and was ably assisted by Mr. F. Pincott at the pianoforte. The Rev. A. Laws conducted.

Dunfermline.—The Choral Union gave a successful performance of Macfarren's cantata "The Lady of the Lake," on the 6th ult., at St. Margaret's Hall. The solo vocalists, Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Lilian Hovey, Messrs. T. H. Brearley, W. Thornton, and James Fleming, were all excellent, and full justice was done to the choral and orchestral portions of the work by the choir of 180 voices and the Dunfermline Amateur Orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Cole. Mr. Hugh McNabb conducted with customary ability.

Durban.—A successful performance of "The Messiah" was given in the Town Hall, on January 13, under the capable direction of Mr. J. Frank Proudman. The solo vocalists were Mrs. McBride, Mrs. Wood, Mr. Macfarlane, and Mr. Fellows, the contralto and bass giving a specially meritorious interpretation of their music. The singing of the chorus was distinguished by good phrasing and excellent attack, while the orchestra was, on the whole, very efficient. Mr. Proudman deserves hearty congratulation on the general success of the performance.

Eastbourne.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert on the 8th ult., at the Town Hall, when Sir Frederick Bridge's "Flag of England" was sung, under the baton of the composer and to his complete satisfaction. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" (conducted by Mr. James R. Dear) formed the second part. The soloists were Miss Esmé Atherden and Mr. W. Fell. The choir numbered over seventy voices and there was a complete orchestra.

Greenock.—The concert given on the 15th ult. was of exceptional interest. To the Choral Union the distinction was given last year of producing Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" for the first time in Scotland, and the musical public are now indebted to them for the first production there of the companion work, "The Death of Minnehaha," and the Overture to "The Song of Hiawatha"; also for a repetition of "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." From the deep and earnest attention given by the audience it was evident that Mr. Taylor's music had very greatly impressed those who heard it, and further acquaintance with his settings of Longfellow's poem only increases one's admiration at the manner in which Mr. Taylor has done his work. Most adequate performances were given of both works, the choir singing, as is almost invariably the case with the Greenock Choral Union, with deep intelligence and expressiveness. The soloists were Miss Jenny Taggart, Mr. Whitworth, and Mr. Archie Anderson, the latter of whom failed to reach the level of the performance. The Scottish Orchestra gave an excellent account of the instrumentation, and specially so of Dvorák's "Largo," which was played between the two cantatas. The gifted conductor, Mr. W. T. Hoeck, is to be congratulated on having given one of the finest and most interesting concerts that has ever been heard in the West of Scotland.

Guildford.—The St. Nicolas Choral and Orchestral Society gave its first concert this season, on the 8th ult., when Dr. C. H. Lloyd's cantata "Andromeda" was performed. The solo vocalists, Miss Maggie Purvis, Miss Hughes, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Henry Sunman, were all efficient, and the chorus deserve particular praise for their finished singing of the cantata. Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony was played by the orchestra at the commencement of the concert (ably led by Mr. A. Campbell), and the whole performance reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. R. Vinen Stanley.

Luton.—The Choral Society gave its second concert of the present season on the 7th ult. Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," the Evening Hymn and Prayer from the "Golden Legend," and "Peer Gynt" Suite (Grieg) were the chief pieces in the programme. Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. Sidney Cole were the vocalists, and Mr. F. Gostelow gave some pianoforte solos in addition to conducting the concert.

Lutterworth.—The Musical Society gave a good performance of Cunningham Wood's cantata "King Harold," in the Town Hall, on the 9th ult., accompanied by a small but effective string band, under the leadership of Mr. F. Hall, the solo parts being sustained by the Hon. Olwen Ponsonby and Mr. F. Payne. Mr. W. Adkins was the conductor.

Marlow-on-Thames.—Bennett's "May Queen" was sung by the Marlow Choral Society, on January 29, with Miss Edith Patching, Miss Winifred Wellicome, Messrs. Edward F. Barrow and Ernest Torrance in the principal parts. Miss Greenham accompanied. Miss Edith Byford contributed some violin solos during the evening. Mr. T. W. Lardner conducted.

New Westminster (British Columbia).—The Choral Society gave a successful concert at the Opera House on January 17, in aid of the Mansion House War Fund. The programme comprised Leutner's Festival Overture, a scene from "Cavalleria Rusticana" (the solos in which were sung by Mrs. C. H. Watson and Miss Jennie Peile), Beethoven's Symphony (No. 4), admirably played by the orchestra, and Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." The chorus gave evidence of good training in the cantata and though not always ready in attack, sang with expression and good articulation—a notable point. It was unfortunate that, owing to indisposition, the tenor was unable to sing the charming solo "Onaway! awake, beloved!" and this had to be played on the clarinet. Great credit is due to Mr. A. E. White, not only for the able manner in which he conducted the performance, but for his personal efforts to secure the general success of the concert.

Northampton.—A highly interesting and artistic programme was presented by the Musical Society, in the Corn Exchange, on the 1st ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony were performed. The members of the choir proved their capability in the dramatic chorus "Come with torches" in Mendelssohn's cantata, and throughout the fresh and beautiful choruses in Mr. Taylor's popular work. The orchestra also played with refinement and delicacy, especially in the symphony. Mr. Brearley sang the tenor solos in the two choral works, giving the beautiful song of Hiawatha with taste and discretion; Mr. G. H. Ditchburn gave the music to the Druid Priest in the "Walpurgis Night" with effect, and Mrs. Pettitt was efficient in the contralto solo in that work. Mr. W. Griffith (who conducted in the unavoidable absence of Mr. C. J. King) deserves much credit for the skill and watchfulness with which he directed the performance.

Penrith.—A performance was given by the pupils of the Penrith Board School (upwards of 180 performers) in the Drill Hall, on the 8th ult., and repeated on the 9th ult., when the chief feature of attraction was Jacobi's operetta "Cinderella," which was interpreted, under the direction of Miss Lewens, with considerable success. The costumes were pretty and artistic. The first part of the programme included several action songs, amongst them being Gaul's "The Union Jack," sung by all the boys and girls, and which was encored.

Reading.—The third concert of the present series of the Reading Chamber concerts, which are now in their third season, took place at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 12th ult. The concerted pieces were Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet and Mozart's String Quartet in D minor (the players being Mr. Elderhorst, Miss Eveline Fife, Miss Dorothy Blunt, and Mr. Whitehouse), which received an admirable interpretation. Mr. Elderhorst's solo playing showed much poetic fancy, while his breadth and grip were undiminished. The beautiful Berceuse, Intermezzo for pianoforte, by Brahms, and his Rhapsodie (Op. 79, No. 2) were contributed by Miss Katharine Eggar, and gracefully interpreted. Mr. Alison Phillips, an amateur bass singer of marked talent, gave three of the new settings by Mr. Somervell of songs from Tennyson's "Maud." These included the waltz lyric "Come into the garden," the exquisite and intricate accompaniment of which was rendered by Mr. Charles Pasteur.

Southampton.—The choir of the Avenue Congregational Church (augmented) performed Barnett's cantata "Paradise and the Peri" at its annual concert, on the 14th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Wilby, Miss Rose Hickley, Mr. M. G. Coulan, and Mr. Philip Sangster. The choruses were excellently sung, and efficient aid was rendered by the orchestra, with Miss Beatrice Lonnon at the pianoforte. Mr. A. G. Calvert, organist of the church, was an able conductor.

Ventnor.—A very successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given on the 14th ult., by the Ventnor Choral Society. The soloists were Miss Maggie Purvis (who sang remarkably well), Miss Hulme, Mr. Wetherick, and Mr. Leo Wilson (of the choir of St. Margaret's, Westminster). There was an efficient band and chorus of 100 performers, and Mr. Edwin H. Lemare rendered valuable aid at the pianoforte. The performance was under the able direction of Mr. Edwin Lemare, who has conducted the Society for forty years.

West Bromwich.—The Choral Society performed Sullivan's "Golden Legend," on the 7th ult., in the Town Hall. The choir displayed good tone, singing with admirable precision and expression, and full justice was done to the instrumental portions by an excellent and complete orchestra, led by Messrs. T. M. Abbott and F. Ward. The soloists were Madame Fanny Moody, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Daniel Price, the contralto and baritone especially deserving commendation. The second part of the programme included Coleridge-Taylor's "Danse Negre" and Mendelssohn's Overture "The Wedding of Camacho."

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

L. L.—It is almost unanimously agreed that the vibrato is owing to incorrect methods of breathing. You might with much practical advantage read a series of articles on "The lateral costal method of breathing," by Dr. H. H. Hulbert, which have appeared in the following issues of "The School Music Review"—May, June, October, November, and December, 1899, and January, 1900. It is claimed that this method is identical with that adopted by the old Italian masters.

Mons.—The best biographies of Beethoven and Schubert are those by Sir George Grove in his "Dictionary of Music." Rockstro's "Life" of Handel (Macmillan) is very good. Separate biographies of the composers you name are included in the "Great Musicians Series" (Sampson Low); but perhaps Sir Hubert Parry's book, "Studies of Great Composers" (Routledge), will answer your purpose.

Oberon.—(1) Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35, No. 1) is a composition that cannot be put into the straight jacket of "metronome marks." The accelerando naturally begins at the point where it is indicated. (2) Yes, the left pedal may be used with discretion in the Prelude. (3) Quaver = 100 for Chopin's Etude (No. 3) in E.

Competitor.—We have already given the dates and places of the various competitions to be held in the North of England and elsewhere in the near future, and we shall continue to supply this information from time to time.

W. H. F.—(1) The song "Willst du dein Herz mir schenken" is not by Bach, but by G(i)ovannini. See Spitta's "Life of Bach," English edition, ii., 661; (2) The Bourrée in F by Bach may be played about crotchet = 160. But see (on p. 158 of the present issue) the remarks by Brahms on metronomic indications.

E. R. E.—You had far better wait till next year and enter for the Senior examination of the Associated Board. Your former success should encourage you, and the "three hours and a half steady work every day" will assuredly contribute to the attainment of your desire. The importance of self-help cannot be overestimated.

W. D.—(1) By subscribing to Messrs. Novello & Co.'s library you can obtain the loan of one such score at a time for a subscription of two guineas per annum. (2) We have not heard that any progress has been made in the work. (3) Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Symphony is announced to be performed at Bournemouth during the season.

E. B.—London is so overcrowded, even with accompanists, that you should carefully consider any "thought of coming to London" in order to get "profitable work" in your particular line. Be very careful in regard to agents and their methods, of which "commission" is the predominant feature.

LENTO.—(1) Miss Sabilla Novello's "Voice and Vocal Art" is published at one shilling. (2) We always make a special point of announcing the different musical festivals in the country with their dates.

C. M. C.—You will find some hymn tunes by Dr. Armes in the "Hymnary" (Novello), which is a different publication from the "Church Hymnary."

W. P.—As a preliminary book on the subject, you could not do better than look at Stainer's "Harmony" Primer.

AMATEUR.—We are not aware of any means whereby songs can be type-written.

J. W. L.—"Valete" means "farewell" ("fare-well").

A few questions are held over.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

*UNA

SIXTH AND SEVENTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, OCTOBER 4, 1893.

"'Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

†THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Eleventh and Twelfth Thousand.
This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

*JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

*ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal Parts, each 1s. Words only, *7s. 6d.; †5s. per 100.

Ninth and Tenth Thousand.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

NEW SACRED WORK
FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.
The loan of Orchestral Parts on application to the COMPOSER.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

VERSE BY JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. Taking the Cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"This charming work was composed for the pupils of King Edward VI.'s High School for Girls, Birmingham, and bears all the best marks of the composer's characteristically graceful style. The libretto is of a high order of merit, and worth the music, which from first to last is attractive and without a dull page."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

NEW TUNES FOR OLD HYMNS

By W. L. RUSHTON.

"This is only the first instalment of what we hope may be an extended work. It consists of 24 settings of well-known hymns by Wesley, Milman, Elliott, Heber, Watts, Montgomery, Adams, and other writers in the front rank of English hymnologists. We confess that when we first opened this little book we had considerable misgivings as to the value of its contents, but after the perusal of the first few numbers, this feeling of doubt gave way to one of great satisfaction. On closing the book, after a careful examination of each bar it contains, we are quite sure that these new tunes of Mr. Rushton's are worthy the best consideration of clergy, choirs, and congregations. The music is thoroughly diatonic, with not a single chromatic chord to be seen anywhere. Only 8 of the 24 tunes contain a modulation, and then only to the dominant key. The melodies are singularly smooth and devotional, and the part-writing is delightfully pure—in the best XVI. century style of harmonisation. Here then is a work which we hope may be epoch-making—a true revival of that grand English Ecclesiastical style of which we heard so much at the recent Church Congress from Sir Hubert Parry, Professor Stanford, and others."—The Organist and Choirmaster.

VARIATIONS

ON AN ORIGINAL THEME

FOR

ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 36.)

FULL SCORE (just published), 25s.

String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, 22s.

Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the COMPOSER.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence

THE TIMES.

It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.

The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.

The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.

They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.

The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS OF THE CATHEDRALS, CHAPELS ROYAL, AND PRINCIPAL COLLEGIATE CHURCHES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM, FROM ABOUT THE PERIOD OF THE REFORMATION TO THE PRESENT DAY

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

In cloth cover, gilt lettered, price 3s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

A most valuable contribution to the musical history of our country. . . . The list has been most carefully prepared, and the biographical notes are just what was wanted in a book of the kind, while the quaint anecdotes, epitaphs, &c., that the author wisely included are a welcome relief from the register of appointments and dates.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

To biographical works on music Mr. West has made an acceptable addition. . . . For reference the book is likely to be exceedingly useful, as the arrangement of the contents is simple and there is an index of organists' names.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

A very useful little book of reference on Cathedral Organists, past and present. . . . Mr. John E. West has done his work with conscientious care and ability.

CHURCHWOMAN.

It is well arranged and succinctly written, and will be found a useful work of reference to those who are interested in the development of Church music.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

There is much that is instructive and amusing, information and anecdote being plentiful. So there is nought but thanks and congratulation to Mr. West for his effort.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

It contains biographical notes, extracts from the chapter books, anecdotes, &c.—in other words, it is not a dry record. It has been compiled with great care, and as a work of reference it will be found invaluable. . . . The book is so full of interesting information that we cannot venture to enter into detail.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is certainly a fund of valuable information, much of it hitherto so inaccessible that it is difficult to test its accuracy. This, however, seems trustworthy, partly from intrinsic evidence, partly from the fact that nearly all the Cathedral organists in the country have supplied the material for their respective churches. It is a thoroughly practical well-arranged book of reference, and contains a vast amount of material for the history of the branch of English music that has flourished more than any other.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

Mr. John E. West's "Cathedral Organists" (Novello) is not a bulky volume, but it none the less represents a vast amount of labour. . . . Mr. West deserves, and will receive, the thanks of a large musical brotherhood for his laborious and useful compilation.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

The book before us is the only one of its kind. Mr. West is a pioneer, and the pioneer's work is usually hard, sometimes thankless. . . . The subject is one with which we have some personal acquaintance; and applying to the book our local knowledge—which extends over four dioceses, and dates from forty years ago—we have not discovered any mistake whatever. The book is, therefore, invaluable of its kind, and will in all probability be re-edited, and re-issued as the years roll by, and successive generations of organists wax and wane. Which is to say, that henceforward it becomes a classic.

BIRMINGHAM POST.

A work dealing with a neglected chapter of English musical history; a work, moreover, involving considerable research and consequently of great value for reference. . . . We heartily commend this book to all interested in Church music and musicians.

WESTERN MAIL.

Apart from its intrinsic worth as a biographical and chronological history, Mr. John E. West's book, "Cathedral Organists," is extremely amusing reading. . . . Mr. West's book is clearly the result of great research, and will, doubtless, find extensive appreciation among music-lovers.

EDINBURGH EVENING NEWS.

A unique volume, its aim being to give a complete record of past and present Cathedral organists of the United Kingdom, from the period of the Reformation to the present day.

GLASGOW HERALD.

It is more than a mere list of names, for it contains biographical notes, extracts from the chapter books, anecdotes, and much matter of interest to musicians.

HYMN BEFORE ACTION

SONG FOR A BARITONE VOICE

THE POEM BY
RUDYARD KIPLING.

THE MUSIC BY
H. WALFORD DAVIES.

Price Two Shillings.

Ad libitum Accompaniment for Men's voices, in Four Parts, 4d.

Note.—Though written as a Baritone Song, this hymn is intended to be sung by many men's voices in unison. Except in the second verse (which may well be sung as a solo), the pianoforte part is suited to many voices, and, when used as an accompaniment to a single voice, must be subdued as its character will allow.—H. W. D.

Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage

(PRELUDE TO ACT III.)

FROM

COMPOSED BY

RICHARD WAGNER.

ORIGINAL VERSION.

Pianoforte Arrangement, 2s.
Strings Parts, 2s. 3d.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

ATHENÆUM.

The original version was used, which contains sixty-three more bars than the one usually performed. Wagner is supposed to have made the cut for the Paris production of his opera in 1861. The bars excised ought to be restored whenever the opera is performed. As concert music this Introduction is certainly effective; it is a programme piece complete in itself, not torn away, like many excerpts, from context, which gives to them special point, and from stage action, which brings out the meaning of the music.

THE TIMES.

The original is sixty-three bars longer and is developed in a far more interesting manner; it would not suit the surroundings of the opera, as Wagner must have felt, but for concert use its superiority to the shortened form is apparent at once.

OBSERVER.

The restored version of Wagner's piece will, it is to be hoped, permanently take the place (in concert-rooms, at least) of the mutilated form of it usually played. The latter was prepared by its composer for a special purpose, and most certainly not because he thought it an improvement on the original. The restored portions contain some of the most beautiful passages in the work, and Mr. Wood is much to be congratulated on having been instrumental in bringing them again to light.

MORNING LEADER.

Wagner's artistic conscience gave him a deal of trouble. An instance in point was his abridgement of the Prelude to Act III. of "Tannhäuser," from which he ruthlessly cut some sixty-three bars of very beautiful and poetic music for the mere sake of satisfying an æsthetic qualm. . . . It is really a very poetic symphonic poem, noble and simple with the simplicity and nobility of genius.

STANDARD.

Unquestionably the first edition is more effective than the second as a concert piece.

ECHO.

Contains sixty-three bars of music always omitted at the operatic representations, but their introduction adds another very effective piece to the concert list of Wagner's music.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The additional bars, which Wagner subsequently omitted, unify and decorate the work in quite a remarkable way.

A COURSE OF HARMONY

BY

FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus.D., Oxon.
(Gresham Professor of Music)

AND

FRANK J. SAWYER, Mus.D., Oxon.
(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO. have much pleasure in announcing that they have made arrangements with the owners of the Copyright of Sir GEORGE GROVE'S well-known DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS, which enable them, for a limited time only, to supply it at a greatly reduced price.

 This Special Issue, it should be observed, is only of a temporary character, and it is not to be regarded as implying the early appearance of an entirely new edition of the Dictionary, which, as a matter of fact, Messrs. Novello & Co. are authorized to say that Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have not in contemplation.

TEMPORARY PRICES OF THE FOUR VOLUMES

Previously published, only in cloth, at £4 11s. 6d.

CLOTH BINDING	£2 0 0
FULL MOROCCO	£4 0 0

Should the purchaser desire to take advantage of the instalment system, he can obtain the complete Book on payment of a deposit of 7s. (Cloth), 13s. (Half Morocco), or 24s. (Full Morocco); and must then complete the transaction by five monthly payments of 7s., 10s., or 12s. respectively.

J. A. FULLER MAITLAND, ESQ.

SIR GEORGE GROVE'S DICTIONARY OF MUSIC & MUSICIANS

(1) Is now offered to the public at a price which should bring it within the reach of many who have long desired this valuable possession.
(2) Is now published, for the first time, in solid serviceable leather bindings; specially suitable for heavy books of reference, so constantly and quickly consulted.
(3) Has been recognised, since its first appearance, as a Standard Book of Reference on all topics connected with the Art and History of Music and the Lives of Musicians.
(5) Is the work of nearly one hundred and twenty eminent Contributors, both English and Foreign.
(6) Fills more than three thousand pages.
(7) Represents the zealous and unceasing labour of ten years.
(8) Contains a copious Index by Mrs. Edmond Wodehouse, a complete List of Contributors, and a valuable Catalogue of Articles contributed by each Writer.
(9) Is edited by Sir George Grove, with the assistance of J. A. Fuller Maitland, Esq.
(10) Has been written for a large public; appeals alike to the Amateur and the Professional; is based on original Research, and is thoroughly readable throughout.

Copies of the book may be seen at the offices of Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 1, Berners Street, Oxford Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C. An explanatory pamphlet, giving a full description of Contents, a List of Contributors, and a Catalogue of the Articles contributed by each writer, with specimen pages and illustrations, and an order form will be sent Post-free on application.

[AN ORDER FORM WILL BE FOUND IN THIS PAPER.

C. BECHSTEIN,

Pianoforte Manufacturer

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

The World's Greatest Pianists prefer the BECHSTEIN Piano to any other.

LISZT writes: "For twenty-eight years I have now used your Pianos, and they have maintained their superiority. Your instruments are perfect."

RUBINSTEIN writes: "At my Concerts I use BECHSTEIN'S Pianos almost exclusively. C. BECHSTEIN has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making."

VON BÜLOW writes: "C. BECHSTEIN'S Instruments are distinguished by their superior quality in every branch of Pianoforte manufacture."

WAGNER writes: "C. BECHSTEIN'S Pianos are resounding benefits to the musical world."

GRIEG writes: My enthusiasm for your productions in the art of Pianoforte-making has ever been far too great for it possibly to be increased."

MOSZKOWSKI writes: "BECHSTEIN has succeeded in producing THE pianoforte of the nineteenth century. Such is its perfection that players and hearers must all agree that by BECHSTEIN the last word in pianoforte manufacture has been said."

MOTTL writes: "We musicians have to express our heartfelt gratitude to the firm of BECHSTEIN for having given us, in their instruments, the possibility of producing quite orchestral effects on the piano."

STAVENHAGEN writes: "I do not know of any other Pianoforte besides yours which, in tone and touch, affords the player facilities so exquisite and ideal."

SARASATE writes: "BECHSTEIN is the Stradivarius of the Piano."

SOPHIE MENTER writes: "BECHSTEIN, the King of all pianoforte manufacturers."

JOSEF HOFMANN writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano possesses greater poetry of tone than any other instrument. It is the realisation of my ideal of a piano, and the only one on which I can express all I feel."

LESCHETIZKY writes: "The BECHSTEIN Piano is of the same importance to the pianist as a Stradivarius is to the violinist. Nobility and power of tone, warmth and refinement in singing quality, perfection in mechanism with the utmost capacity for expression and shading are the great qualities of a BECHSTEIN piano. The pianist finds in it an intimate friend for his home, and a faithful and reliable ally in his battle for public renown."

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN writes: "There is a mysterious charm in the tone of BECHSTEIN'S Pianos; as much power and fulness as unheard-of beauty and delicacy, coupled with a touch so capable of modulation for the player, that an artist could not desire a more ideal instrument. To me it is the height of joy to play on these instruments, then alone can I become one with the Piano and revel in pure music and poetry. The beauty of tone of a BECHSTEIN Piano I can only compare with that of a Stradivarius string quartette."

MR. CHARLES KNOWLES

(BARITONE)
Of the Leeds Musical Festival, 1898.
London Musical Festival, 1899.
Sheffield Musical Festival, 1899.
Queen's Hall and principal Provincial Concerts.

Sheffield Musical Festival.—"King Saul."—"Mr. Charles Knowles' Samuel, apart from mannerisms which will be shed with wider experience, sang the lines allotted to the Prophet with fulness and sonority of voice that will assuredly place him among the favoured candidates for principal work at our chief festivals."—Scotsman, October 14, 1899.

"Mr. Charles Knowles, who has throughout the festival accomplished consistently good work, maintained his usual excellence in the character of Samuel."—Nottingham Guardian, October 14, 1899.

"Golden Legend," Cheltenham Festival Society.—"Mr. Charles Knowles gave with dramatic power the numbers allotted to Lucifer, contributing largely to the weird effect of the opening number."—The Echo, February 21, 1900.

"Mr. Charles Knowles was very fine as Lucifer, his vigorous style telling in all his work, while at times he rose to the magnificent."—The Citizen, February 21, 1900.

"Elijah," Dumfries.—"Mr. Charles Knowles, to whom, as Elijah, the bulk of the singing fell, was conspicuous in the succeeding passages in which the Prophet taunts the priests of Baal, a feature of his singing being the distinct and dramatic enunciation, 'Lord God of Abraham,' was rendered in a touching manner and was another example of Mr. Knowles's dramatic powers, and he was even more successful in 'Is not his word.' One of Mr. Knowles' conspicuous successes was the aria 'It is enough,' into which he infused the deep grief of the Prophet, while the recit. which follows, 'O Lord, I have laboured in vain,' was similarly treated and with equal success."—Dumfries Standard, February 24, 1900.

ALFRED GIBSON.

The first English violinist of note seems to have been Davis Mell, who flourished about 1650. This gentleman was not only upon terms of more than scraping acquaintance with his instrument, but he was originally a clockmaker; therefore it may be assumed that he was an excellent timeist. Anthony à Wood records that Mell was "one of the Musick to King Charles I.," and that he had "a sweet stroke." He further describes him as a "well-bred gentleman, not given to excessive drinking as Baltzar was." Conjointly with one George Hudson, Mr. Davis Mell was the first Master of the Musick, and thus led Charles the Second's "four-and-twenty fiddlers," established by that monarch in 1660, in imitation of Louis the Fourteenth's "Vingt-quatre violons du Roi."

John Banister (1630-1679) was also a distinguished native fiddler. In 1663 he was appointed to be "Chief of His Majesty's violins." But he is said to have been dismissed by the King for an impertinent remark concerning the appointment of French musicians to the Royal band. Pepys in his inimitable Diary (20 February, 1666-7), in recording a gossiping visit to Whitehall, says: "Here they talk also how the King's viallin (!), Banister, is mad that the King hath a Frenchman come to be chief of some part of the King's music, at which the Duke of York made great mirth."

Matthew Dubourg (1703-1767) is the next in order of notable home-made violinists. He is said to have first appeared as a boy at one of the concerts of Thomas Britton, "the musical small coal man," when, standing on a joint-stool, he performed a solo by Corelli. Tradition says he was so frightened that he nearly overbalanced himself. Dubourg became conductor of the Viceroy's band in Dublin. He played in the orchestra at the first performance of Handel's "Messiah" (1742). On his return to London he became a member, probably leader, of the King's band, and played at Handel's oratorio performances. Dubourg was a very brilliant performer. On one occasion he introduced a cadenza of such extraordinary length, with excursions into various remote keys, that when he ultimately arrived at the shake which terminated the cadenza, Handel, to the great delight of the audience, shouted, "You are welcome home, Mr. Dubourg."

Passing over the name of Bridgetower, who, notwithstanding his patronymic, was not an Englishman, it would be ungracious not to make mention of Spohr's distinguished English pupil, Henry Blagrove (1811-1872) and Mendelssohn's friend, J. H. B. Dando (1806-1894), who, like Blagrove, was excellent as a quartet player and teacher. It was of these two pioneers in English quartet playing—plus Henry Gattie (second violin) and Charles Lucas (violoncello)—that the younger Dubourg wrote the following poetry:—

> Ye birds, that haunt by night or day grove,
> Yield, yield in dulcetry to Blagrove.
> How sweet and exquisitely natty,
> Those trills ancillary, from Gattie.
> And list! t' enhance our joy what can do
> The "even tenor" of smooth Dando.
> Then, in the stream of sound to hook us
> "Deeper, and deeper still," comes Lucas.
> Come, for one hour be Pleasure's pet!
> Oh! come, and hear a choice Quartet
> Diffused by this consummate set.

The foregoing prelude, having as its subject-matter eminent English violinists who have held high office in the King's band of Musick, and to whom quartet playing in this country owes so much, not unnaturally leads to the consideration of the Leader of the Queen's Band and the violaist of the "Pop." quartet, who forms the subject of this biographical sketch.

George Alfred Gibson was born at Nottingham, the birthplace of Henry Blagrove, on October 27, 1849. His father was a professional violinist in the town. He had the reputation of being a good teacher, with a good elementary method and clean style, attributes which he inculcated into his violinist son. Mr. Gibson had a small band of some eight or ten performers, of which Master Alfred was the side drummer. "The practice of the side drum is exceedingly good for the wrists," he observes. For two years he was a violin pupil of Henry Farmer, a Nottingham violinist, with whom he worked through Spohr's school, Kreutzer's studies, De Beriot's solos, and the one-string solos of Paganini. "But," Mr. Gibson observes, "the teaching of those days was very different from what it is now. For instance, I never played a scale!"

THE ONE STRING THAT BROKE!

Alfred Gibson made his first appearance in public when he was quite a child, when he performed a set of variations by Thirlwall on a theme from Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore." At one of the Saturday night concerts in the Exchange Hall, Nottingham, he played Paganini's solo on one string. "Some one said to me," recalls Mr. Gibson, 'It would seem so grand if you were to cut the other three strings while you are on the platform.' This I did, but unfortunately I touched the remaining string, with the result that in the second variation the string broke, and the bridge went down smash! As I was playing on a three-quarter size fiddle I could not borrow another instrument, and therefore the whole thing came to grief. In a notice of the concert, the writer naïvely remarked, 'Something happened to Master Gibson's fiddle.'" At the age of eleven he was one of a concert party, organised by Henry Nicholson the flautist, that toured about the country, their perambulations extending from the South coast of England to as far North as Dundee. Although Master Gibson was considered a juvenile Paganini, he had a rival in the company in the person of "the inimitable Mr. Mackney, the world-renowned delineator of negro character," whose "Nigger Paganini" on the violin was "a most extraordinary performance, and showed the great adaptability of the instrument to produce all the usual farmyard sounds, as well as an excellent imitation of the hurdy-gurdy!" In regard to the boy fiddler—the un-niggered Paganini—a critic observed: "The performances of Master Gibson on the violin were really as surprising as they were gratifying. In height he scarcely reaches to the top of his music stand, yet the firmness and accuracy of his bowing, and the strength and clearness of tone he elicited from his instrument would have done credit to one much older than himself."

The violin was not the only instrument of his boyhood. He had made some progress with the pianoforte, when he heard that a harmoniumist was required for the then newly-built Peas Hill Unitarian Church, Nottingham. He at once set to work to teach himself the harmonium, with the result that, at the age of fourteen, he obtained the post. He doubtless thought himself passing rich with £5 a year!

FIRST QUARTET EXPERIENCES.

Quartet playing was a very early love which soon became deep rooted in his artistic nature. It was wooed in a curious way. The proprietor of the Shakespeare Hotel in Nottingham was an amateur violoncello player. He formed a quartet party, which met at the hotel on Sunday evenings. Young Gibson, with his father, attended these music-makings as a listener. One Sunday the leader failed to put in an appearance, whereupon the twelve-year-old "Alfred the little" was asked to take "first violin." He did, and read Beethoven's C minor Quartet (No. 4) at sight, to the astonishment of his adult colleagues. His enthusiasm in the cause of concerted music became intensified by the practice that was frequently afforded him of playing Corelli's trios for violin, violoncello, and double-bass.

Ever since he was fourteen years old Mr. Gibson has earned his own living. His experience as a violinist has been as varied as his industry has been and is unceasing. For two years he led the orchestra of the New Theatre in his native town. He subsequently toured about the country as first violin of some travelling opera companies. Thus he was constantly adding to his store of practical experience, and it is hardly necessary to say that he embraced every possible opportunity of "picking up."

Like many a country-born lad, Gibson set his face towards London. To that "smoky nest" he—ætat eighteen—came in 1867. His first engagement was in the band of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, in Tottenham Street, where Robertson's "Caste" was then having its successful run. The young fiddler's pay was only twenty-six shillings per week. As he spent an undue proportion of those shillings in music, he certainly did not fare sumptuously every day; and it would cause no surprise to know that he discovered a place where the inner man could be dinnerly refreshed at an exceedingly small cost.

FIRST WAGNER OPERA IN LONDON.

In 1870 he made a decided upward step when he was engaged as one of the first violins of the Italian Opera band conducted by Signor Arditi at Drury Lane. The season was a memorable one. It witnessed the production of a Wagner opera for the first time in London—to wit, "The Flying Dutchman," on July 23, 1870. "Mignon" also received—on July 5, 1870—its initial representation before an English audience, when Ambroise Thomas and his brother came to London to personally superintend the rehearsals and performance. Mr. Gibson played in both these works. There is an orchestral story told of the genial Arditi's early English to this effect. With a laudable desire to obtain efficient performances, Arditi was prone to insist upon more rehearsals than the English players had hitherto been accustomed. Upon a remonstrance being addressed by one of the band to the conscientious conductor, Arditi replied: "Well, if you do not like it, you can went."

Mr. Gibson only remained at Drury Lane for one season. In 1871 he became a member of the orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, in which he remained for twelve years. He also played in the New Philharmonic orchestra, at the Birmingham Festival of 1882, when Gounod's "Redemption" was produced, and at one of the Hereford Festivals. Thirty years ago there was comparatively little teaching to be had for good violinists in London. The great army of lady performers, for instance, had not come into existence. The best teaching was practically in the hands of three or four of the best known men. An off-season engagement was in the orchestra at Newcastle-on-Tyne, consisting of fifty performers from London, conducted by Dr. William Rea. At one of these popular and admirably directed concerts, which were continued for several seasons, Maurer's Concerto for four violins, with orchestral accompaniment

"was rendered with exquisite taste by Messrs. Carrodus, Betjemann, Ralph, and Gibson"—four excellent native violinists, two of whom, alas! have joined the majority.

HANS VON BÜLOW AND HIS MUSIC STAND.

For eight years Mr. Gibson played in the orchestra of the Choral Union Concerts, Glasgow, of which Hans von Bülow was, for one season, the conductor. Mr. Gibson relates a funny story of Bülow's encounter with his (the conductor's) music stand. This structure was of iron and in construction telescopic. While Bülow was in the midst of giving some directions to the orchestra, down went the desk. Bülow thereupon raised it and made the screw, as he thought, secure. The vibrations of the orchestra, however, loosened the screw, and while Bülow was giving some further admonition to the band, the aggravating downward propensities of the desk asserted themselves for the second time. A third experience of this looseness on the part of the stand proved to be too much for the irascible Hans. He could stand it no longer. He took up the offending structure—which had a very solid iron foundation—and hurled it, smash and crash, over the platform-rail down upon the floor of the room in utter disgust and fiery fury.

"THE POPS."—LISTENER AND PERFORMER.

Thus far the record of Mr. Gibson's life and his livelihood has been that of an orchestral player. But he was anxious to seek other fields of work. To revert to the time of his coming to London, he took two lessons from Henry Blagrove—all he could afford. Blagrove found fault with his pupil's method. He started him on a new and better tack, of which Gibson took the fullest advantage. He lost no opportunity of hearing the best players. He was a humble listener at the "Pops."—in the shilling seats, of course. At one time he lodged in the uppermost story of 202, Piccadilly, immediately opposite the entrance to St. James's Hall. The window of his room was so high that he had to mount a chair in order to look down upon the street below. On Saturday afternoons he would stand on the said chair in order to see the great Joachim and the distinguished Piatti make their exit from the Hall over the way after the rehearsal. Little did he then think that he would become the honoured colleague of two such incomparable artists in the "Pop." quartet. And here it may be added that he has received constant kindness from both Dr. Joachim and Signor Piatti. In order to keep himself from getting rusty in his quartet playing, he and three other congenial spirits met week by week to spend an hour or two in this delightful field of stringed instrument art. Mr. Gibson's first appearance at the Popular Concerts was in Svendsen's Octet in A, on January 23, 1882. He frequently went into the provinces with Joachim and others as the violaist of the quartet. Mr. Arthur Chappell had his eye upon him. After a period of excellent service as second viola, he, upon the resignation of Herr Straus, in 1893, became the viola of the party, a post he still worthily holds. It is hardly necessary to say that he is much esteemed by his colleagues, no less for his artistic insight in the interpretations of the chamber music of the great masters than for his personal worth.

Not the least pleasant of his quartet experiences are those connected with Mr. Dannreuther's chamber music-makings at his residence. Mr. Gibson was a member of the quartet for about twenty years—beginning with second violin, then changing to viola, and finally becoming first violin.

THE QUEEN'S PRIVATE BAND.

"November 5, 1893," is the date of the Warrant, signed by the Lord Chamberlain, appointing Mr. Alfred Gibson "leader" of The Queen's Private Band. This document somewhat quaintly admits him "unto the Place and Quality of Leader in Her Majesty's Band. To have, hold, exercise and enjoy the said Place, together with all Rights, Profits, Privileges, and Advantages thereunto belonging."

The Queen's Band, of about forty performers, plays in the Drawing-room at Windsor or Osborne, after dinner, from about 10 to 11 p.m. The Queen is much interested in the music that is performed and is a most appreciative listener. The programme on one evening during the past month consisted of the following selection, conducted by Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the Queen's Musick:—

Overture, "Shamus O'Brien"	Stanford.
Entr'acte, "La Colombe"	Gounod.
Allegro moderato, "Unfinished Symphony"	Schubert.
Nocturne, "La Navarraise"	Massenet.
Masque, "As You Like It"	German.
(a) Introduction.	(c) Children's Dance.
(b) Woodland Dance.	(d) Rustic Dance.

The inclusion of two compositions by English composers in the programme is most gratifying acknowledgment of native art, and will go towards disproving the prevalent idea that only foreign music finds favour in Court circles.

A BUSY TEACHER.—OXFORD.

Mr. Gibson is one of the best known—certainly one of the busiest—of London violin teachers. He began his teaching career at Oxford, to which city he devoted nearly three days per week. He led the quartets at the University Musical Club, of which he is an honorary member, and is now, as ever, a very welcome guest. He has very happy memories of those Oxford days, and a "present of silver" is tangible proof of the regard in which he was held by the Musical Club. At an "open performance" (May 25, 1886), when M. Camille Saint-Saëns was the guest of the evening, and when the programme largely consisted of that distinguished composer's works, Mr. Gibson played the Rondo Capriccio (Op. 28), violin solo, by M. Saint-Saëns, and, with the French visitor, Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 96) for violin and pianoforte. It may not be without interest to give, as a specimen of the good work done by the University Musical Club in Oxford, the programme of the "500th meeting," held October 18, 1892, when the following works were performed :—

Sextet for Strings, in B flat (Op. 18) ... Brahms.
Messrs. A. Gibson, H. H. Joachim, A. Hobday, A. J. Slocombe, C. Ould, and J. H. Bowman.

Variations, for two Pianofortes, on a Theme by Beethoven, in E flat (Op. 35) ... Saint-Saëns.
Sir W. Parratt and Mr. James Taylor.

Quintet for Strings, in D, No. 7 ... ... Mozart.
Messrs. A. Gibson, E. H. Fellowes, A. Hobday, A. J. Slocombe, and C. Ould.

As at Oxford, Mr. Gibson's teaching connection rapidly grew in London. He is now Professor of the violin at the Royal Academy of Music and the Guildhall School of Music, where his lessons are much sought after. Last year—on June 26—to commemorate his jubilee, he was presented by his past and present pupils with an oil portrait of himself, painted by M. Olivier, a Broadwood pianoforte, a music stand and baton, and a specially designed album containing the autographs of the subscribers. The occasion furnished a gratifying proof of the esteem in which Mr. Gibson is held by those who have benefited, and who still benefit by his conscientious and clever teaching.

STRADS !

Golf is Mr. Gibson's recreation. He has a fancy for engravings and a weakness for Strads ! His Strad viola—a very fine specimen—once belonged to Charles Reade, the novelist. His Strad violin is a superb red specimen, dated 1713. His Guadagnini too is hard to beat.

Royal Academy Students of the seventies will remember "Alice Curtis, Westlake's pupil," who so daintily played Sterndale Bennett's "The Lake, the Millstream, and the Fountain" at one of the concerts. The aforesaid Miss Alice Mary Curtis—the "Potter Exhibitioner" of 1874—is Mrs. Alfred Gibson.

The career of the subject of this biographical sketch furnishes a striking instance of what may be done by the combination of self-help, dogged perseverance, and boundless enthusiasm. Compared with many young students of the present day, "advantages"—which, by the way, are not always unmixed blessings—were unknown to Alfred Gibson. He has had to work his way up the ladder in the face of many privations and difficulties. All honour then to a man who, by sheer force of character and sturdy steadfastness, has so galvanized his natural artistic instincts as to have enabled him to attain his present distinguished position.

"THE CELEBRATED ODE IN HONOUR OF GREAT BRITAIN, CALLED RULE, BRITANNIA."

"The first eight notes of 'Rule, Britannia,' typify the British character." Thus, in effect, spake Richard Wagner. And who will say him "Nay"? The fine old tune has so triumphantly ridden upon the waves of recent national rejoicings that no apology is needed for a few words concerning its history.

One hundred and sixty years ago—or, to be more precise, on August 1, 1740—Frederick, Prince of Wales (son of George II. and father of George III.) organized a fête of some splendour at Cliveden, near Maidenhead, then the place of abode of His Royal Highness. The following extract from the London Daily Post of August 2, 1740, gives an account of the Royal birthday and Hanoverian Accession commemorative festivities at "Cliveden's proud alcove" :

Last Night was perform'd at the Gardens of Cliefden (in Commemoration of the Accession of his late Majesty King George, and in Honour of the Birth of the Princess Augusta, their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, with all their Court, being present) a new Masque of Two Acts, taken from the various Fortunes of Alfred the Great, by Mr. Thomson; and performed by Mr. Quin, Mr. Milward, Mrs. Horton, and others from both Theatres; also a Masque of Music, call'd The Judgment of Paris, writ by Mr. Dryden [Congreve]; and concluded with several Scenes out of Mr. Rich's Pantomime Entertainment, perform'd by himself, and others of his appointing, particularly The Skeleton Scene in Merlin's Cave, and the Dwarf Scene in Orpheus and Eurydice. Also

The famous Signora Le Barbarini (newly arriv'd with Mr. Rich from Paris) performed several Dances, and so much to the Satisfaction of their Royal Highnesses, that His Royal Highness was pleas'd to make her a very handsome Present. And the whole was conducted with the utmost Magnificence and Decorum.

This open-air function was repeated on the following evening, and we learn from the Daily Post of August 5 that "the whole was exhibited upon a Theatre in the Garden composed of Vegetables and decorated with Festoons of Flowers." The libretto of the first piece in the entertainment was shortly afterwards published under the title of :—

Alfred : a Masque . Represented before Their Royal Highnesses The Prince and Princess of Wales, at Cliffden, on the first of August, 1740. London : Printed for A. Millar, over against St. Clement's Church, in the Strand. MDCCXL.

Very near the end of the Masque a Hermit exclaims :—

Behold, my Lord, our venerable Bard, Aged and blind, him whom the Muses favour. Yet ere you go, in our lov'd country's praise, That noblest theme, hear what his rapture breathes.

This utterance is immediately followed by "An Ode," which begins with the familiar words:—

When Britain first at Heav'n's command
Arose from out the azure main
This was the charter, the charter of the land,
And guardian angels sung this strain:
Rule, Britannia, Britannia, rule the waves;
Britons never, never, never will be slaves.

The variants in the fourth and eleventh words of the refrain, as compared with the present-day version, will not escape observation.

remembered, was also performed at Cliveden. The title-page of this "Masque of Music" reads thus quaintly:—

The Music in the Judgment of Paris. . . . To which (By particular desire of several encouragers of this work) are added The celebrated Ode in Honour of Great Britain, call'd Rule Britannia, and Sawney and Jenney, a favourite Dialogue in ye Scotch stile. The whole composed by Thomas Augustine Arne.

PORTRAIT OF DR. ARNE, FROM AN OIL PAINTING BY JOHN ZOFFANY, R.A. (1733-1810).
(In the possession of Mr. Alfred Littleton.)

Thus far nothing has been said concerning the music of "Alfred" and the composer thereof. But all the world knows that it was the handiwork of Dr. Thomas Augustine Arne (1710-1778), a typical British melodist, to whom we are indebted for "Where the bee sucks" and other characteristic tuneful tunes. The music of "Rule, Britannia," first appeared in print at the end of the score of Dr. Arne's "Judgment of Paris," which, it will be

It may be assumed that "Rule, Britannia," speedily attained popularity — perhaps in Dublin, where the Arnes may have performed it during their visit to the Irish capital—a popularity sufficient to justify the designation "celebrated"; or was its adoption in the nature of a propheticism? "Rule, Britannia," in its original form, is set in the key of C for solo voice (Alfred) and chorus, which latter enters at the familiar refrain. It is scored for trumpets, drums, violins (1 and 2), oboes, violas, bassoons, and basses.

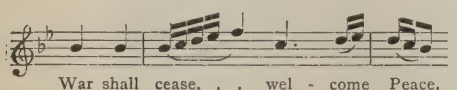
Five years after the Cliveden function, Arne transformed the masque of "Alfred" into an opera. In this form it was produced at Drury Lane Theatre, on March 20, 1745, "for the benefit of Mrs. Arne." An advertisement in the General Advertiser of the above date refers to the work as "an Historical Musical Drama, call'd Alfred the Great, King of England. The Musick was composed by Command of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and never perform'd in England, but at His Royal Highness's Palace at Cliefden. . . . The Musick by Mr. Arne. To conclude with a celebrated Ode in Honour of Great Britain, in imitation of those formerly sung at the Banquets of Kings and Heroes." After stating the prices of the seats—Boxes, 6s.; Pit, 4s.; First Gallery, 2s. 6d.; and Upper Gallery, 1s. 6d.—the advertisement apologetically continues: "Mrs. Arne humbly hopes the Town will not be offended at the small Advance of the Price, this Performance being exhibited at an Extra Expence, with regard to the Number of Hands, Chorus Singers, building the Stage, and erecting an Organ; besides all other incidents as usual. The Ladies are desir'd to send their Servants by Four o'clock."

Not the least interesting feature of the advertisement is the following reference to the date—March 20: "The above day is fix'd on to avoid interfering with Mr. Handel." Probably March 21 was originally contemplated for the "benefit," as on that day "Mr. Handel" gave a performance of his oratorio "Joseph" at the King's Theatre, Haymarket.

The question naturally arises: Was Handel present at Mrs. Arne's benefit? If so, did he listen to "Rule, Britannia," with an attentive and a retentive ear? We trow so. In the same year he started upon his "Occasional Oratorio," wherein will be found the following strain:—



There is no need to further trace the history of "Rule, Britannia." It has so thoroughly become the national utterance of the people that, as Southey said, "it will be the political hymn of the country so long as she maintains her political power." The music—which Beethoven called "a folk-song"—needs no eulogy. "It is," says Mr. W. Barclay Squire in the "Dictionary of National Biography," "perhaps the finest national song possessed by any nation, and for which alone, even if he had produced nothing else, Arne would deserve a prominent place amongst musicians of all countries."

A curious use to which the patriotic tune has been put may be mentioned. That somewhat eccentric, but earnest-minded divine, the Rev. Rowland Hill (1744-1833), is stated to have remarked that "the devil should not have all the best tunes." By this the reverend gentleman implied that all non-sacred tunes are of the evil one! Rowland Hill demonstrated the courage of his convictions by writing a hymn in the same metre as "Rule, Britannia." Here is its first stanza:—

When Jesus first, at Heaven's command,
Descended from His azure throne,
Attending angels join'd His praise,
Who claim'd the kingdoms for His own.
Hail, Immanuel! Immanuel we'll adore,
And sound His fame from shore to shore.

This used to be sung with great heartiness by the vast congregations who worshipped in Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars Road, the scene of Rowland Hill's ministrations. The music, including Dr. Arne's original interludes, appears in an oblong folio volume, a copy of which lies before us, entitled:

Volume the Second of a Collection of Hymn Tunes sung at Surrey Chapel, arranged for three and four voices, with a thorough bass, correctly figured for organ or piano forte, and respectfully dedicated (by permission) to the Rev. Rowland Hill, A.M., by B. Jacobs, organist of Surrey Chapel.

Full justice was done to this version of the original words and Arne's music at the conclusion of a sermon preached by Rowland Hill, in Surrey Chapel, on December 4, 1803, when it was sung by a crowded congregation of volunteers who had enrolled themselves in view of the threatened invasion of this country by the great Napoleon. That the patriotism of Englishmen is no new thing is proved by the fact that no fewer than 341,600 sons of Britain had voluntarily offered at that crisis in the nation's history to defend these shores against "old Bony."

A German version of "Rule, Britannia," is, we venture to think, practically unknown. But Mr. W. H. Cummings possesses a three-page song, which he has kindly allowed us to see for the purposes of this article, entitled:—

Rule Britannia.
Frey Uebersetzt.
Hanover.
Gedruckt bey J. L. Lamminger, Hofbuchdrucker.

The music follows Arne's original version of the tune, except that the refrain is indicated "Chor," without its being harmonized. The first stanza reads thus:—

Britannia, aus des Meeres Schoos, stieg auf des Schöpfers Wink hervor.
Dir zog hochahndend dein Genius das Loos, und jubelnd sang ein Engelchor:
Herrsch' Britannia! der weite Ocean
sey deinem Scepter unterthan.

As Arne's name is not given as the composer, it may be assumed that "Rule, Britannia," was regarded by the German publisher as an English folk-song. Unfortunately the copy is not dated, but it bears signs of a good old age; and, as it was issued by a Hanover publisher, the inference is that the original version was taken thither by one of the Hanoverian people who were connected with the Court of King George II.

In conclusion, reference may be made to the use of the theme of "Rule, Britannia," by two of the greatest masters of music—Beethoven and Wagner. Beethoven wrote a set of five variations for pianoforte on the tune, which, however, is not one of his happiest efforts in the variation form. Wagner composed an overture on Arne's melody, which was duly performed under his direction at Riga in 1837, during his conductorship period at that port. In 1840 he sent the score to the Philharmonic Society in London. Tradition says that the manuscript was addressed to a high official of that Society, but, as the postage was not sufficiently prepaid, this gentleman refused to take it in! Is the packet still in the "Dead Letter Office"? Perhaps the orchestral parts may come to light some day. With what interest would this early work of Wagner's, on a theme so congenial to Britishers, be listened to in London. The tune has been used with much ingenuity by British composers in two instances. The first is that by Thomas Attwood in his Coronation Anthem, "O Lord, grant the King a long life," composed for the coronation of William IV. (vide Musical Times, June, 1897, p. 377), and by Sir Alexander Mackenzie in his exhilarating overture "Britannia."

The portrait of Dr. Arne, here reproduced for the first time, is by John Zoffany (1733-1810), a celebrated portrait painter of his day. Zoffany was one of the founders, in 1768, of the Royal Academy. His Arne picture may have been exhibited at some of the early Exhibitions of the Royal Academy, which began in 1769. But a search through the catalogues has failed to identify it, as in those days the names of the sitters were not given. The portrait came into the possession of the Sacred Harmonic Society in 1868. Upon the dissolution of the Society, eighteen years ago, it was purchased by the late Mr. Henry Littleton. Zoffany's fine picture is considered to be by far the best portrait of the composer of "Rule, Britannia."

"WHAT IS ART?"

At the beginning of his sixth chapter, Count Tolstoy asks a question which leads straight to one of the fundamental ideas of his general argument. Here it is:—

"How could it happen that that very art which in ancient times was merely tolerated (if tolerated at all) should have come, in our times, to be invariably considered a good thing if only it affords pleasure?"

To this query our author makes an extended and, at the same time, very precise reply—one with which we may not agree, but which, nevertheless, justifies careful attention and is not without claims upon respect. If we follow his answer and are convinced by it, we shall, at the end, find ourselves believing that what we now call art is but the product of decomposition. Evidently, therefore, the matter immediately before us is serious. Count Tolstoy enters upon it with a definition:—

"The estimation of the value of art (i e., of the feelings it transmits) depends on men's perception of the meaning of life; depends on what they consider to be the good and the evil of life. And what is good and what is evil is defined by what are termed religions."

Following this we are told that all art transmitting feelings in accord with the general religious sense was held to be good. Such art is found in the prophetical books and psalms of the Hebrew scriptures; in Greek expressions of the joy and energy of life; in the efforts of Buddhism to free humanity from the yoke of animalism, and so on. From this rule Christianity is not exempt. Its "good art" in the first ages of the faith appeared in the form of legends, lives of the saints, sermons, prayers, and hymn-singing. Later, there arose what our author calls a "Church Christianity," which set up a celestial hierarchy similar to the pagan mythology, introduced the worship of Christ, the Virgin, saints, martyrs, and their images; the whole tending to establish blind faith in the Church and its ordinances. When this form of debased Christianity prevailed, the art which sprang from it was nevertheless good, since it corresponded to the general religious view of life. From this it would appear that the criterion of true art is found in devotion to that which the religion of the time and place teaches, and in a consensus of opinion with regard thereto.

Down to the time of the Crusades all went well in the sense just expressed, but then a change for the worse began. Count Tolstoy's betês noirs, the upper classes, started it, and I now go on to describe how and why they did it, premising that I merely state succinctly that which our author argues at length.

Decadence began when the upper, wealthy, and educated classes of Europe had their faith in Church Christianity disturbed; as a result of acquaintance with the classics and perception of the disagreement between Church doctrine and Christ's teaching. Unable any longer to accept Church Christianity, and not having the moral strength to follow true Christianity, the great ones of the earth "were left without any religion, with but the external forms of one, which they supported as being profitable and even necessary for themselves. In reality, these people believed in nothing, just as the Romans of the first centuries of our era believed in nothing. But at the same time these were the people who had the power and the wealth, and these were the people who rewarded art and directed it." What followed upon this godlessness? The upper classes adopted the pagan notion that life's meaning consists in personal enjoyment. Their standard of good was found in pleasure (to which beauty ministers), and they took to themselves the gross conceptions of the primitive Greeks, already condemned by Plato. Upon this understanding of life the theory of modern art was formulated.

So does the Russian author explain to himself the popular belief that beauty (pleasure) is the end of art, and that when art does not confer pleasure it is, in point of fact, not art at all. The believers in this theory declare that it was recognised by the ancient Greeks, and Tolstoy discusses the point in a very interesting way. But I must refer the reader to his book* for our author's argument, and pass on towards the musical questions which more intimately concern the readers of this journal.

In his seventh chapter Tolstoy lays down another proposition, declaring that when the upper classes lost faith in Church Christianity their art became distinct from that of the lower orders. Hence there were two arts existing side by side—that of the vulgar many, and that of the genteel few. Of these the art of the vulgar was the truer, because resting upon the basis of religion. An impassable gulf, according to Tolstoy, separates these forms, since "fashionable art is wholly unintelligible to the people." Up to this point, with a few reservations, I have found my judgment giving consent to the author's arguments, but here I am distinctly not with him. Read the subjoined extract:—

"That which is enjoyment to a man of the rich classes is incomprehensible, as a pleasure, to a working man, and evokes in him either no feeling at all, or only a feeling quite contrary to that which it evokes in an idle and satiated man. Such feelings as form the chief subjects of present-day art—say, for instance, honour, patriotism, and amorousness — evoke in a working man only bewilderment, or contempt, or indignation. So that even if a possibility were given to the labouring classes, in their free time, to see, to read, and to hear all that forms the flower of contemporary art (as is done to some extent in towns by means of picture galleries, popular concerts, and libraries), the working man (to the extent to which he is a labourer, and has not begun to pass into the ranks of those perverted by idleness) would be able to make nothing of our fine art, and if he did understand it, that which he understood would not elevate his soul, but would certainly, in most cases, pervert it. To thoughtful and sincere people there can therefore be no doubt that the art of our upper classes never can be the art of the whole people."

* An English translation of "What is Art?" is issued in the Scott Library (Walter Scott, Limited) at a very low price. The translation from the Russian MS. is by Mr. Aylmer Maude, whose also is an important Introduction.

All this may be true in the case of some countries, or, if not obviously true, apparently a reasonable deduction; it may apply to Russia, for example, but certainly not to England. Here there is no such division between the art of the rich and of the poor, or, if there be, the workman is, say, a better musician than his idle and wealthy neighbour. Count Tolstoy evidently knows nothing about "people's concerts" in London, at which oratorios and cantatas, symphonies and overtures are received with enthusiastic appreciation; he knows nothing about the musical state of Welsh miners and quarrymen, or of Yorkshire operatives, and he is equally ignorant of the steady, unswerving efforts made by humble amateurs all the country over. Count Tolstoy's whole case, as far as it appears in the extract given above, breaks down hopelessly within our island bounds. The music of the rich is not incomprehensible to the poor, nor have the humble folk any such feelings as bewilderment, contempt, and indignation with regard to it. For other countries I leave other writers to speak.

Proceeding (Chapter 9), our author holds that three results have followed from the degeneracy of the upper classes as set up by their loss of religious faith. "The first great result was that art was deprived of the infinite, varied and profound religious subject matter proper to it. The second result was that having only a small circle of people in view, it lost its beauty of form, and became affected and obscure, and the third and chief result was that it ceased to be either natural or even sincere, and became thoroughly artificial and brain-spun." These consequences our author traces in modern poetry, painting, fiction, drama, and even music, which last, as he truly says, should be intelligible to everybody. I pass over much of his terrible indictment (the book can be read) the sooner to reach certain observations on music which will interest us all.

"An acquaintance of yours, a musician of repute, sits down to the piano and plays you what he says is a new composition of his own, or one of the new composers. You hear the strange loud sounds, and admire the gymnastic exercises performed by his fingers, and you see that the performer wishes to impress upon you that these sounds he is producing express various poetic strivings of the soul. You see his intention, but no feeling whatever is transmitted to you except weariness. The execution lasts long, or at least it seems very long to you, because you do not receive any clear impression, and involuntarily you remember the words of Alphonse Karr, 'Plus ça va vite, plus ça dure longtemps' ('the quicker it goes, the longer it lasts'). And it occurs to you that perhaps it is all a mystification; perhaps the performer is trying you—just throwing his hands and fingers wildly about the keyboard in the hope that you will fall into the trap and praise him, and then he will laugh and confess that he only wanted to see if he could hoax you. But when at last the piece does finish, and the perspiring and agitated musician rises from the piano evidently anticipating praise, you see that it was all done in earnest. The same thing takes place at all the concerts with pieces by Liszt, Wagner, Berlioz, Brahms, and, newest of all, Richard Strauss, and the numberless other composers of the new school, who unceasingly produce opera after opera, symphony after symphony, piece after piece." We cannot deny the general truth of these words. Many of us have "been there," and know.

For the present, however, Tolstoy lets music off lightly, with just an indication of modern obscurity and emptiness. But this is only a respite. Execution comes later. On the other hand, summary justice is done upon Continental decadents in painting, poetry, and fiction. Baudelaire and Verlaine, "now accepted as great poets," are whipped with scorpions from the Count's presence. Both are "contemptible and commonplace in subject-matter"; the first elevated gross egotism into a theory and replaced morality by a cloudy conception of beauty; while Verlaine's idea of life consisted in "weak profligacy, confession of his moral impotence, and, as an antidote to that impotence, in the grossest Roman Catholic idolatry." Such, in their kind and manner, are the decadent painters, novelists, and dramatists. The slime of rottenness is on them all.

Do you suppose that Tolstoy encourages, or even permits us to rail against decadent art because we do not understand it? He does nothing of the kind. Mercilessly logical, he turns upon us who prefer what we call a better-ordered and saner art with this argument:—

"Such an attitude towards this new art is quite unjustifiable, because, in the first place, that art is spreading more and more, and has already conquered for itself a firm position in society . . . secondly, and chiefly, because if it is permissible to judge in this way of the productions of the latest form of art, called by us Decadent art, merely because we do not understand it; then remember there are an enormous number of people—all the labourers and many of the non-labouring—who, in just the same way, do not comprehend those productions of art which we consider admirable: the verses of our favourite authors—Goethe, Schiller, and Hugo; the novels of Dickens, the music of Beethoven and Chopin, the pictures of Raphael, Michael Angelo, da Vinci, &c."

All forms of art which have not the feelings of religion as their source and the good of life as their end are thus declared to be false—varying in the measure of their unreality perhaps, but still, without exception, false.

Next month I shall follow Tolstoy into his extended indictment of music as we now know it.

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

By Edwin H. Lemare.

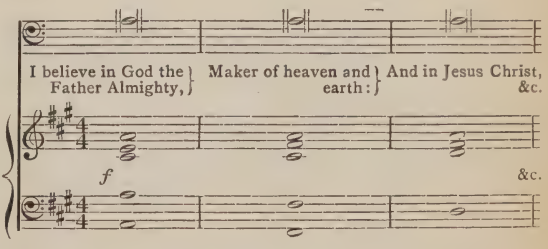
It is an accepted truism to say that music is an indispensable element in worship. Nearly every thoughtful and intelligent worshipper feels the power of music, and instinctively demands it. The day has gone by when one can be satisfied with the lifeless and dreary reading of Psalms, Responses, and Creed. One naturally feels that something more is wanting; something which brings life and spirit into the service. Music, we feel, does this. It brings out, at least to those of a musical or artistic temperament, the meaning of the different parts of the service, and helps to convey to the mind what it is apt to lose sight of through constant repetition of well-known phrases.

Now, nowhere is the help of music in this respect more needed than in the saying of the Creed. The Creed has been called "An act of intellectual adoration"; but in order that this may be a reality and not a mere formality, the mind must be in a state of intelligent acquiescence. The constant repetition of the Creed has the effect of dulling the sensibilities as to its meaning; but I think it is possible, by a judicious accompaniment, to bring out the force of the well-known words. The old diatonic style of accompaniment is too monotonous and uninteresting to be considered in any sense a help. Such, for instance, as—



This, of course, merely fulfils the function of keeping the choir in tune; but, judged from an artistic point of view, it would be better to omit the chords and merely sustain an organ note. The accompaniment to the Creed ought to be a complete improvisation in itself: as far as possible in strict time, and with an interesting outline for the melody. The choir should be trained to keep the pitch however softly the organ may be played. If there is any tendency to flatten, a single note held down by the thumb of either hand, say on the Great Wald Flute (8-ft.), will have a far better effect—assuming that the choir have been trained to listen carefully to the organ—than by increasing the tone of the instrument. Listen attentively to the words throughout, and try and get your accents to coincide with them as far as possible. If you should have wandered from the key, get back in good time in order to prepare for the key of the Amen. A few bars of dominant pedal serve this purpose very well. Regarding the registering, I should suggest the Swell Celeste (if the beats are not too quick) with perhaps sub and super-couplers, or very soft 8-ft. without couplers. Do not herald "the third day" with a trumpet fanfare on the Great, but make your accompaniment descriptive and sympathetic in the way of changes of harmony, in preference to changes of stops, &c. It goes without saying that no chord should be used in which the reciting note does not form a portion, except possibly during a passage where the reciting note is used as a pedal. Every discord should, of course, be properly resolved. We will suppose the choir are reciting the Creed on the note A. Something like the following (which I have written down from a phonographic record, taken at my own church) might be played :—

The same remarks apply to the Lord's Prayer, only in this case let your accompaniment be very soft and only just audible in the church.

A few suggestions as to playing Anthems, Masses, &c., from the ordinary pianoforte arrangements of the orchestral score may be acceptable. If your anthem should be taken from one of the well-known oratorios, and a full score of the work is not available, you are, of course, somewhat handicapped; but if it is possible to look at the score first, you can indicate roughly in your copy how the music is laid out for the orchestra. Thus, for instance, the playing of a passage as a solo on the clarinet that is written for the strings would be avoided. A rough idea may be gathered from the compass of some of the motives and phrases. If a certain phrase went down two or three times to the A below middle C, it would not be written for the oboe. It is a great pity that so many organ stops are wrongly named, as, for example, the Horn stop, which is frequently found in the Swell. This resembles the horn of the orchestra about as much as the double-bass resembles the piccolo! I think the stop that is most akin to the soft tones of the horn is the Great Claribel or Wald Flute. The Swell Oboe, if coupled to this, sometimes adds to the effect, providing the shutters are closed, or nearly so. The stops in an organ by a first-rate builder, that do somewhat approach orchestral tone, are the Flute, Clarinet, and Orchestral Oboe, and if the Gambas are really good one can produce a very good representation of the strings.

Do not be tempted to play the pedal part an octave too low, especially in fugal movements. If you are in doubt as to where the double-bass enters in a fugue, pedal the bass part of the chorus only in the same pitch.

A suitable introduction to the anthem is most important. This should, as much as possible, be in perfect sympathy with what is to follow, both in regard to key, time, and ryhthm. In many anthems which commence ff it is effective to work up a gradual crescendo on a dominant pedal, and then to start right away without any pause.

I have occupied so much space that I am obliged to curtail these remarks and leave further suggestions on this subject to a future occasion. In concluding these unpretentious hints on organ accompaniments, I trust I may not be considered a faddist. But I think it better to err—if, indeed, it is erring—on the side of soft accompaniments than on that of a too loud and dramatic style.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Many happy returns of the Century to Beethoven's First Symphony. This, the No. 1 of the immortal nine, was first performed at the Burg Theatre, Vienna, on April 2, 1800. The occasion was the first concert that Beethoven—then twenty-nine years of age—gave for his own benefit. The performance began at 7 p.m. and the programme was as follows:—

1. Symphony .. .. Mozart.
2. Air from the Creation .. .. Haydn.
3. A Grand Pianoforte Concerto "played and composed" by .. .. .. Beethoven.
4. The Septet .. .. Beethoven.
5. Duet from the Creation .. .. Haydn.
6. Improvisation by Beethoven on Haydn's Emperor's Hymn.
7. Symphony, No. 1 .. .. Beethoven.

No key, and therefore no clue is given as to the Concerto, but it was probably either that in C or B flat. The Septet had been previously performed at Prince Schwarzenberg's, where it had "pleased immensely."

No less than six months passed before the concert received any notice in the great German musical paper of the day—the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung. From the columns of this periodical we learn that Beethoven's Concerto (key not given) contained many beauties, especially the first two movements. The Septet was a work showing great taste and feeling, and Beethoven improvised in a masterly manner. The new Symphony gave evidence of "much art, novelty, and wealth of ideas," but—oh! those "buts" of the critics—the wind instruments were too much in evidence, and thus the symphony was more after the manner of military music (Harmonie) than real orchestral music! It appears that there were some quarrels—"differences of opinion" perhaps is better—in regard to the conductorship of the concert. Beethoven thought that Wranitzky was the best man, but the band disliked him and they preferred Conti. Thus, with Wranitzky at their head, they vented their disapprobation of Beethoven's choice by making mistakes in the concert-giver's "No. 1." In accompanying the concerto they took no trouble in following the soloist—this sort of thing has been noticed within a hundred miles' radius of Charing Cross—they showed no feeling of delicacy, and so on. In parts of the Symphony they even became so lackadaisical that, notwithstanding the conductor's beat, these obstreperous bandsmen—especially the wind players—infused no fire into their performances. Poor Beethoven! Well may the critic pathetically ask: "What sort of effect could even the most exquisite of compositions make under such circumstances?"

The first performance in England of Beethoven's No. 1 took place at a concert given by Giambattista Cimador, at the Great Rooms, King's Theatre, on May 18, 1803, three years after its production in Vienna. (It should be noted that orchestral parts were not printed till the end of 1801.) A search amongst the London newspapers for a notice of Mr. Cimador's concert, in order to see what the London critics—if perchance there were any at that time—said about Beethoven's C major Symphony, has proved fruitless. As a matter of fact, the newspapers of that time (1803) were full of war news! Does not history repeat itself?

Some important alterations have been made in the regulations for the Music Competitions at the Paris Exhibition since the first details were furnished, of which a summary was given in our last issue (p. 167). It had been originally intended that all choirs who competed for prizes should sing in French. But when it was pointed out that such a condition would almost exclude foreign choral societies, the authorities obligingly consented to allow foreign choirs to sing in their own languages, and to offer similar prizes to those offered to French choral societies, such awards to be specially competed for by the foreign choirs. The principles upon which the French competitions were primarily planned precluded foreign choral societies from entering; but choral societies from the British Isles will now be able to enter and compete for special prizes open to all foreign countries, providing the entries are sent in soon enough to satisfy the French authorities.

The annual Bridlington Musical Festival—with a band of 70 players and chorus of 170 voices—is to be held on the 26th inst. The choral works selected for performance are Verdi's Requiem (Manzoni), Coleridge-Taylor's "Death of Minnehaha," and Stanford's "Revenge." The orchestral features will include Beethoven's Eighth Symphony and "Coriolan" Overture, Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" Overture, Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," Berlioz's "Carnaval Romaine," and the Incidental Music to the "Wasps" of Aristophanes, composed and to be conducted by Mr. T. Tertius Noble. Mrs. Bosville will sing Liza Lehmann's vocal scena "Endymion," and Mr. Bosville will, as heretofore, be the conductor-in-chief. It is satisfactory to learn that the low pitch will be used at the concerts.

The prize of £20 offered by Mr. Alexander for the best Quintet for horn and strings has just been awarded to Mr. Emil Kreuz. Mr. Alexander is now offering an additional prize for a Pianoforte Quintet, of which particulars may be obtained from Dr. Yorke Trotter, 22, Princes Street, Hanover Square.

The "Gostling anecdote," referred to in our biographical sketch of Mr. George Henschel in last month's issue, is desired by a "regular reader." Here it is, with the preliminary that the incident refers to Purcell's double D anthem, "They that go down to the sea in ships":—

The King had given orders for building a yacht, which, as soon as it was finished, he named the Fubbs, in honour of the Duchess of Portsmouth, who we may suppose was in her person rather full and plump. The sculptors and painters apply this epithet to children, and say for instance of the boys of Fiammengo, that they are fubby. Soon after the vessel was launched, the King made a party to sail in this yacht down the river and round the Kentish coast; and, to keep up the mirth and good humour of the company, Mr. Gostling was requested to be of the number. They had got as low as the North Foreland, when a violent storm arose, in which the King and the Duke of York were necessitated, in order to preserve the vessel, to hand the sails, and work like common seamen. By good Providence, however, they escaped to land; but the distress they were in made an impression on the mind of Mr. Gostling which was never effaced. Struck with a just sense of the deliverance, and the horror of the scene which he had but lately viewed, upon his return to London he selected from the Psalms those passages which declare the wonders and terrors of the deep, and gave them to Henry Purcell to compose an anthem, which he did, adapting it so peculiarly to the compass of Mr. Gostling's voice, which was a deep bass, that hardly any person but himself was then or has since been able to sing it. But the King did not live to hear the anthem. The words are taken from Psalm cvii., vs. 23 and 24. (Sir John Hawkins's "History of Music," Novello's edition, Vol. II., p. 693, note.)

The subjoined may furnish a biographical coda to the foregoing. The Rev. John Gostling was born in or about the year 1652. On February 25, 1678, he was sworn a gentleman extraordinary of the Chapel Royal, and three days later a gentleman in ordinary, being described in the Cheque-book as "a base from Canterbury, Master of Arts." After holding a minor canonry at Canterbury, he became successively vicar of Littlebourn, near Canterbury, Chaplain to the King, Sub-dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Prebendary of Lincoln. He was one of the "ministers" at the coronations of James II., and of William and Mary. Mr. Gostling died July 17, 1733. His voice was not only of an extraordinary compass, but of a very powerful tone. Charles II., who could warble "the tenor part of an easy song," would often sing with his "Gosling," the Duke of York accompanying them on the guitar.

The Edinburgh University Music Class Room Library has recently received a large addition to its possessions. The donors were the Scottish Musical Society, the members of which, on resolving to dissolve the Society, decided also to use the residue of its funds for the above indicated purpose. The donation is not only large in volumes, but also extremely valuable and useful. In fact, nothing was purchased that was not valuable and useful. Among the old and new music and books on music, native and foreign, there are especially noticeable full scores of many works of Wagner, Berlioz, Liszt, Richard Strauss, and others. Mr. Robert A. Marr, the liquidator, a lover of music and things musical, did his work well. With him it was a labour of love. Professor Niecks acted as adviser.

A new comic opera, "Der Barenhäuter," by Arnold Mendelssohn, a grand-nephew of the composer of "Elijah," was recently brought out at the Berlin Theater des Westens, the performance having been looked forward to with considerable interest by amateurs for some time past. The libretto, by Herrmann Wette, was written before Siegfried Wagner even contemplated his opera of the same name; but the subject, founded upon Grimm's popular tales, being common property, there was no reason (except, perhaps, a chivalrous one, on the part of Wagner's son) why there should not be two "men in bearskins." Arnold Mendelssohn's opera was received with much favour by the great majority of his audience, and, in the opinion of many competent critics, his score must be ranked amongst the most noteworthy German operatic productions of our day.

The new Codes just issued by the English Education Department (covering England and Wales) and the Scotch Education Department announce the abolition of the special grant for singing in elementary schools. This grant for many years past has been one shilling per head for singing by note, and sixpence per head for singing by ear. Instead of this special grant, a new combined grant is to be given for a block of obligatory subjects, one of which, we are glad to observe, is singing, "which," to quote the Code, "should as a rule be by note." In the opinion of most school music experts the change will be advantageous, and will in the end promote the cause of school music. The matter is fully discussed in the current number of the School Music Review.

A recent search made by Herr C. Rouland, organist of St. Peter's, Vienna, amongst the papers in the church library, has brought to light a number of autographs by Beethoven and Schubert. The most interesting of these appears to be that of the Rondo in E flat major for pianoforte and orchestra, by Beethoven, which, from indications contained therein, confirms the opinion expressed long ago by Otto Jahn, Mozart's biographer, of the Rondo forming part of the concerto in the same key. These precious MSS. have happily been confided to the care of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde.

A number of musical autographs, from the collection of Herr Alexander Posonyi, of Vienna, is included in the catalogue, just issued by F. Cohen, of Bonn. Amongst the most interesting are the first movement of Beethoven's last Pianoforte Sonata (in C minor, Op. 111), which is valued at 4,000 marks. A letter written by Anton Rubinstein concerning Wagner contains the characteristic passage: "Have you seen 'Tristan,' have you seen 'Rheingold'? The former strikes me as absolute madness; the other as being, to say the least of it, ultra-eccentric."

The programme of a sacred concert, given on February 8, reaches us from Moriah, Tobago, British West Indies. By no means its least interesting feature is that, with the exception of a clergyman and doctor who took part, all the performers were negroes. Thus the realm of music knows no distinction of race or creed. And the loyalty of those coloured subjects of the Queen—those devotees of the divine art—found its full expression in the old familiar strains of "God save the Queen."

The new Oxford and Cambridge Musical Club was successfully inaugurated, on the 1st ult., with an interesting selection of chamber music performed by the members. The club has its home in the fine old house once the habitation of Sir Joshua Reynolds, now No. 47, Leicester Square.

The first number of the new weekly review, The Londoner, edited by Mr. Alfred Kalisch, the well-known musical critic, contained a novel article by Mr. Frederic H. Cowen, entitled "My own music: how it affects me." As to the first performances of his creations, and their impressions upon him, Mr. Cowen remarks:—

I will say candidly that the first performance of a new work of mine usually gives me pleasure. It may not quite realise my anticipations; it may unexpectedly reveal effects where I did not expect to find them, and vice versâ, but the varied feelings and emotions associated with its conception, the gradual development of its parts, the very ideas themselves, are all still so fresh in my mind that I have no power to be analytical, and I hear my music as I wish to hear it. Later on this feeling wears off, and I am able to judge more or less dispassionately and from an outsider's point of view. If, on the third or fourth hearing (especially after some lapse of time), I can critically approve, I know the intended effect has been realised, and I rest contented.

Sometimes I have taken up an unsuccessful composition after a period of several years, and looked it through carefully, with the result that a new light has been thrown on it, and I have inwardly thanked the critics and the public for telling me the truth, as much as I outwardly abused them in the beginning.

On the whole, however, I think that, apart from a first performance, listening to my music for its own sake affects me but indifferently. (I am leaving out of the question those bad renderings which we all have to endure sometimes.) I have known every phrase, every bar of it so well from its very birth, it is like a face you see every day; you fail after a time to notice whether it is pretty or the reverse, and the mere fact of its beauty or plainness has ceased to arouse any admiration or repugnance within you. Still, whatever I may think with regard to the music itself, I confess I always feel a certain pardonable pleasure (and doubtless other composers do the same) in the very knowledge that I am actually listening to something that I have evolved out of my own brain, something which is part of myself. It is a curious sensation: a mixture of pride, timidity, happiness, nervousness, and anxiety.

Mr. Whitney Mockridge has just returned from a successful six months' concert tour in the United States and Canada. And here it may be remarked that, contrary to general opinion, Mr. Mockridge is not an American. Although he was born in Canada, he is the son of a London gentleman who had settled in the Dominion. During his recent visit to "the other side" Mr. Mockridge had the satisfaction of introducing Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's fine tenor song from "Hiawatha," "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" which at once "caught on" in a very remarkable manner. Theodore Thomas, upon hearing the song, thus remarked upon its composer: "Yes; the young man understands the value of climaxes." Mr. Mockridge—who had the distinction of creating the tenor parts of Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" and "Stabat Mater" in America—pays a high tribute to the chorus singing in the States. He thinks, however, that the West is sapping up the East in this respect. "There is a fine chorus in every Western city of 10,000 inhabitants. The audiences are most appreciative, and one instinctively feels the power that a great work exercises over them." The Canadian tenor speaks in terms of the highest appreciation of the splendid work done for music in the States by Theodore Thomas—"a very able man," he says, "and an ideal programme maker." In regard to Canada and its interest in the war in South Africa, Mr. Mockridge says "the loyalty of the Canadians was something marvellous! I sang 'The Death of Nelson' and 'Let me like a soldier fall' amidst scenes of the wildest enthusiasm, and 'God save the Queen' was everywhere sung with a fervour that was overwhelming."

Mr. Robert Newman has again put forth a bumper programme for his "London Musical Festival, 1900," to take place at Queen's Hall from the 30th inst. to the 5th prox. inclusive. The combined bands, numbering 200 instrumentalists, will consist of the Lamoureux and Queen's Hall orchestras, and are to be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood and M. Camille Chevillard, son-in-law of the late M. Lamoureux. A special feature will be the performance of six representative symphonies, one at each concert—viz., Beethoven's "Eroica," No. 5, and No. 7; Brahms's No. 2; Schubert's "Unfinished"; and Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic." The novelties will include a Rhapsodie Sicilienne by Ch. Silver; two symphonic poems, (1) "Sur la mer lointaine," by Léon Moreau, and (2) "Le Chêne et le Roseau," by M. Chevillard. We are glad to notice that English music is to be represented in the scheme. The native compositions are a symphonic prelude, "Le Sang des Crépuscules," by Mr. Percy Pitt (first time of performance); an orchestral poem, "Thalaba, the Destroyer," by Mr. Granville Bantock; and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha" Overture.

Mrs. Newmarch has now completed her new book on Tschaïkowsky, which Mr. Grant Richards will publish this season. The volume will include a biographical sketch of the distinguished Russian composer, a brief selection from his collected writings, and the Diary of his tour abroad in 1888, which the authoress has translated from the Russian. Mrs. Newmarch has worked through all the Russian sources of information, which, by the way, are tantalizingly meagre, and the book is sure to be both a useful and interesting contribution to the literature of the subject. We understand that the long talked of "Life and Correspondence" of Tschaïkowsky, which Mr. Modeste Tschaïkowsky has in preparation, may not be issued for some considerable time. The difficulty of dealing with over 1,000 letters, many of them of a very intimate character, no doubt accounts for what may very naturally be regarded as a delay. In the meantime, Mrs. Newmarch's book will be most acceptable.

Dr. C. J. Hall, of Manchester, has followed the excellent example of Dr. Henry Watson by presenting to the Corporation of Manchester his musical library of about 750 volumes. Not only is the literature of the art well represented, but many full scores, vocal scores, &c., find a place in this valuable gift. Congratulations again to Manchester and a full acknowledgment of Dr. Hall's public spirited generosity.

Verdi has been decorated, by the Emperor of Austria, with the order for art and sciences. This is the highest distinction ever conferred by Austria-Hungary upon artists and men of science, and it is very rarely bestowed. In fact, since the death of Brahms, the veteran Maëstro is the only musician who holds the coveted decoration. Moreover, he is the first Italian to be thus decorated.

The Wagner Society proposes, on May 22, to entertain Mr. William Ashton Ellis at dinner, to celebrate the successful completion of his great task, the translation of Wagner's Prose works. Sir Hubert Parry will occupy the chair.

Dr. Hans Richter, according to news received from Vienna, has written a letter from Manchester, in which he has officially signified to the directors of the Court Theatres his resignation, which has been accepted by the management.

A correspondent asks us to aid him in obtaining a portrait of George Cooper, the elder (died 1846), who was assistant-organist at St. Paul's Cathedral during Attwood's organistship. Perhaps some reader may possess the desired portrait and would be willing to lend it for reproduction, or could suggest where one may be procured. If so, will he kindly communicate with the Editor?

The Committee of the Birmingham Festival have decided to include Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha," in its complete form, in the programme of this year's Festival.

Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley will form the subject of the biographical sketch in our next issue. Mr. F. H. Cowen will, in the same issue, contribute his promised article on "Conducting."

BRITISH MUSIC PUBLISHERS.*

Many hard things have been said about publishers, ay! and even of music publishers. And yet it must be admitted that they are of some use. Moreover, have they not played an important part in furthering the art of music? An answer to this question in regard to the British Isles is to be found in the volume under notice. Mr. Frank Kidson, its author, has opened up quite an interesting field of musical literature in this his latest publication. Following a short historical introduction—wherein he laments "the unfortunate habit" of not dating musical publications since the time of "wily John Walsh"—he proceeds to give an alphabetical list of music printers and publishers in London. To this succeed the names of many provincial music publishers in England, in addition to those of Scotland and Ireland. Thus the comprehensiveness of the record is proved. It is true that the names of some present-day publishers are omitted; but Mr. Kidson closes his survey with the reign of George IV.—i.e., the year 1830.

Apart from its value to the musical antiquary, the book contains much that is of general interest. The following gleanings from its pages may furnish some idea of the harvest of information which Mr. Kidson has garnered. In 1743 John Browne, of Cornhill, not only published music, but dealt in musical instruments, and carried on something of an agency for the supply of teachers, as the following trade card, in the possession of Mr. Arthur F. Hill, duly records:—

> Made and sold by John Browne, musicall instrument maker, at the Black Lyon, over against the Royal Exchange in Cornhill, London, where you may be furnished with all sorts of musicall instruments, as Violins, Bass Viols, Hoboys, Flutes, etc.; printed books of tunes, with directions for learners. . . . At the same place you may hear of a Master for any instrument now in use.

The connection between the sign of the "Black Lyon" and a musicseller's shop does not appear to be very close, unless he did a roaring trade.

The author of "Sally in our alley," Henry Carey, took to publishing his own songs periodically. One such half-sheet ditty (circa 1720) is entitled: "Once for all. Harry Carey's general reply to the libelling gentry who are angry at his welfare. The words and music by Henry Carey." Following the song comes a gibe, "wrote sarkastic," against his libellous enemies, and couched in the following terms:—

> MR. CAREY, instead of being angry, humbly thanks those gentlemen who have rail'd him into so much business. His poems being now in the press he can publish nothing in the musical way till after Christmas, when, according to his old preface, he doubts not but to please his friends, to mortify his enemies, to get money and reputation. In the meantime, if a thousand libels come out against him he won't answer one; humbly hoping this reply sufficient by ye Author's order.

One John Carr (1667), a friend of old John Playford's, advertised "all sorts of books and ruled paper for musick; songs and airs, vocal and instrumental, ready prick't." "A Periodical Sonata by Mozart" was published by J. Cooper about 1790. "In what form is a Periodical Sonata?" is a question that might well find a place in a musical examination paper. There is plenty of scope for something fresh in those interrogatory documents. John Cullen, "At the Buck within Temple Barr,"—another curious sign—sold

> All sorts of ruled paper, ruled books, and music books of all kinds, with violins, flutes, flagellets, mock-trumpets, haut-boys, reeds, bows, bridges, strings, wire for harpsichords, and rests for harpsichords, with all the newest songs and music that comes out, to be had at the same place, likewise music fairly written.

The name of John Day (circa 1549), one of the earliest printers of note (and notes), is well known. He wittily used his patronymic for a business sign. Underneath a woodcut device of a man arousing a sleeper he adopted the motto, "Arise, for it is Day."

One of the earliest innovators in regard to the issuing of cheap music was R. Falkener, who sold sheet music at one penny per page, instead of threepence, the rate then (1775) in vogue. J. Heptinstall was the first printer to introduce (in 1690) the new tied note into type-music printing—that is to say, the joining of quavers and lesser notes together instead of printing each one separately. Amongst many curious titles of books given by Mr. Kidson—these alone make his book valuable—is that of "Twelve English songs, serious and humourous . . . by the newly invented method of composition with the Spruzzarino." It would be interesting to know something about this "sprinkling" process of the manufacture of music. Mr. J. Macock printed, in 1672, that famous controversial book by Thomas Salmon entitled "An Essay to the advancement of Musick, by casting away the perplexities of different cliffs." There are yet many perplexities of music that need casting away.

George Walker (1790) is distinguished in the London Directory as a "publisher of music at half-price." He may possibly have been the first to mark his publications at double the price at which they were intended to be sold. One John Watlen, having failed as a publisher in Edinburgh, started again in business in London, where he taught "singing and the pianoforte in the tasteful method." "Tasteful," as opposed to mere technique, is good; there is much need of it even in the present day. Music publishers' assistants may derive encouragement from the fact that Benjamin Franklin, when he first came to London in 1726, worked in the office of one John Watts, a publisher and printer of music.

* British Music Publishers, printers and engravers: London, Provincial, Scottish, and Irish. From Queen Elizabeth's reign to George the Fourth's, with select bibliographical lists of musical works printed and published within that period. By Frank Kidson. London: W. E. Hill and Sons, 140, New Bond Street.

The old London signs are very interesting features of bygone city life and its commerce. In addition to those already referred to, there were, amongst others, "The Golden Bass," "Handel's Head," and "The Lyre and Owl." "The Golden Crotchet," one of the last of these signs, was adopted by Mr. Alfred Novello, at the city branch of his business. Music publishers have not often furnished subjects for the poet's muse, but John Young, at the sign of the Dolphin and Crown, St. Paul's Churchyard (circa 1700), was an exception. Here are the words of "A Catch upon Mr. Young and his son," written by Dr. Cæsar:—

You scrapers that want a fiddle well strung,
You should go to the man that is old while he's Young,
But if this same fiddle you fain wou'd play bold,
You must go to his son, who'll be Young when he's old,
There's old Young and young Young, both men of renown,
Old sells, and young plays the best fiddle in town.
Young and old live together and may they live long,
Young to play an old fiddle, Old to sing a new song.

Such are a few samples of the good things that are to be found in Mr. Kidson's well compiled pages. His task has been an exceedingly difficult one, but he has discharged it with a painstaking zeal and conscientious thoroughness that call for full acknowledgment and high appreciation. Mention must be made of the excellent notices of such pioneer music publishers as Thomas Este (with twenty-seven titles of works issued by him), the three Playfords, the Thompsons, and the Walshes (Handel's publishers) father and son, which contain much valuable information concerning these worthies and the works they published. In a book of this kind misprints and errors, however carefully they may be guarded against, will crop up. These inevitabilities, a few of which we have noticed, will doubtless receive correction in a second edition. "British Music Publishers," which is appropriately enough dedicated to so typical an antiquary as Mr. T. W. Taphouse, of Oxford, is not only a useful book of reference, but one that merits many readers.

CHURCH AND ORGAN MUSIC.

ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR.

Interests as varied as they are absorbing environ the Royal Chapel within the precincts of Windsor Castle. The beautifully proportioned sanctuary erected four centuries ago is unique in associations, regal, historical, heraldic, picturesque, and musical. There is an indescribable charm in the Choir of the venerable edifice as seen in the grey twilight of a winter's day. The decorated vaulting of the roof, the richly-coloured banners of the Knights of the Garter, the old-world candle illuminant—it is fervently to be hoped that the glaring electric light in the Nave will never be allowed to untraditionalize the Choir—and the music, these all combine to calm the mind and refresh the soul of the sympathetic worshipper within those historic walls.

The past "chief musicians" of St. George's Chapel have included John Marbeck, Richard Farrant, John Mundy, Nathaniel Giles—described in the registers as a "Dr. of Mewsicke"—William Child, who held the office of organist for sixty-five years, and Sir George Job Elvey, who reigned forty-seven years. James Nares was at one time an assistant-organist; and amongst former choristers may be mentioned Benjamin Rogers, John Travers, and H. Walford Davies, the present organist of the Temple Church.

The organ stands on what appears to be a stone screen presented by King George III.; but as this resting-place is manufactured of a cement composite, it aids not the resonance of the instrument. Samuel Green was the original builder of the organ, which, upon its erection, in 1790, was enclosed in a general swell. It contained no pedal pipes, and the compass was to F (minus the lowest F sharp), which compass, by the way, was even continued until 1882, when Sir Walter Parratt succeeded the late Sir George Elvey. Previous to that date the keyboards were on the East side of the instrument—the player sitting in the "chaire organ" of olden times, with his back to the altar; now, however, the manuals are placed on the South side, whereby the organist is enabled to command a view of both Choir and Nave. As compared with Green's 25 sounding stops, the organ now contains 41—great and swell, 13 each; choir, 7; solo, 3; and pedal, 5. The swell pedals, of which there are three (fixable at any point), control two sides of the swell-box and the orchestral oboe in the solo. The couplers are placed in a row above the solo manual.

A few impressions of a recent evening service may be recorded. Through the courtesy of Sir Walter Parratt we were accorded—though not for the first time—the privilege of a place in the organ loft. This elevated position is not only admirable for hearing the choir to the best advantage, but the eye is feasted with a scene that is strangely fascinating. Here, from among the helmets and swords above the stalls of the Garter Knights, we look down upon the singing men and boys, whose surplices reflect the dim flickering light of the candles; the congregation—by no means a scanty one, even on this bleak March Saturday—are almost lost in gloom; while above, the banners seem possessed of an added dignity in the semi-darkness which intensifies the mysterious picturesqueness of the surroundings. The organ is in the cleaner's hands, and therefore only the choir organ stops and a few pedal notes are available. But does not Sir Walter Parratt proverbially exercise a wise restraint in his accompaniments? And is he not to be commended for so doing?

Immediately after the bell has ceased its summons to prayer, there resounds throughout the Chapel the cry, "Toll's down." This utterance, made by a verger from some hidden corner of the building, is a quaint relic of the past signifying that the bell has stopped its tolling, and that the hour for service has come. Sir Walter plays from memory a soft movement in B flat, by old Thomas Adams. Although he has not played it for forty years he has no difficulty in recalling the music, which has for him a peculiar charm by reason of its melodic grace and simplicity. The stops that he uses are those supplied by Green a century ago. As they are only on a $2\frac{3}{4}$-in. wind, their delicate softness is in pleasant contrast to the over-voiced and over-blown registers that are the bane of present-day organs—which are too often, alas! mere monsters of sound-producing machines. We should not be surprised if Sir Walter has some very strong views upon the subject of the hugeness of modern church organs. "I always use these stops when accompanying the old anthems," he remarks, "because they correspond to those of their period. How would it be possible to play one of Russell's pieces on a modern organ with the registration 'oboe solo, accompanied by great diapasons'?" Elvey's Psalter is used, and the chants are a manuscript collection made by the present organist. A feature of the chanting is its deliberateness and reverential rendering. A somewhat full tone on the final tonic chord of the chant might have an unpleasant effect if sung by throaty boys in their lower registers. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, "King in F"—that "very serviceable man," according to Dr. Greene—is sung at a slower speed than that at which it is sometimes rattled through. Sir Walter plays from the original edition of Arnold's "Cathedral Music," published in 1790, and which has been in use at St. George's ever since. Battishill's "Call to remembrance," for seven voices, is the anthem, which devotional and expressive composition "will live as long as man can appreciate the value of the tender sentiment of graceful melodies, interwoven with ingenious counterpoint."

The "Royal peculiar" characteristic of the Chapel is manifested in the following prayers, taken from the Obiit Service, which are said at every morning and evening service before the prayer of St. Chrysostom.

Almighty God, we beseech thee to keep thy Servant Victoria, our most Gracious Queen and Governor, and so rule her Heart in thy Faith, Fear, and Love, that evermore she may have Affiance and Trust in thee, and ever seek thy Honour and Glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

God save our Gracious Sovereign, and all the Companions of the most Honourable and Noble Order of the Garter. Amen.

ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR, LOOKING WEST.

(From a photograph by Messrs. Valentine & Sons, Ltd.)

As a concluding voluntary Sir Walter Parratt—who always has a fancy for something off the beaten track—plays a Prelude and Fugue in E flat—one of a set of six—by one J. J. Jones, organist of St. Andrew's Wardrobe, and St. Ann, Blackfriars, about 1808-10, and a pupil of Dr. Crotch. These preludes and fugues are unknown to the present generation of organists; but that played by Sir Walter contains a remarkable stretto. This Mr. Jones, of whom very little appears to be known, must not be confused with John Jones of the double chant in D fame. Thus is brought to a conclusion a service which from beginning to end is dignified and devout and absolutely free from any approach to ostentation or mere effect.

OLD-TIME ORGANS AND ORGANISTS.

Some quaint historical matter relating to the organs in and the organists of Holy Trinity Church, Coventry, has been issued in connection with the re-opening recitals following upon the re-building and enlargement of the instrument. The work has been carried out by Messrs. William Hill and Son, under the supervision of Mr. C. H. Moody, the organist.

A curious document is preserved among the records belonging to Trinity Church, being an agreement between the Churchwardens of Trinity, and John Howe and John Climmowe, "citizens and organ makers," of London, dated the 17th of December, 1526, and endorsed "The Indentur of the newe organs." By this indenture the parties above named undertake for £30 to make and set up in the Parish Church of Holy Trinity, before the ensuing Pentecost "A Peir of organs wt vij stopps, ov'r and besides the two Towers of cases, of the pitche of doble Eff, and wt xxvij pleyn keyes, xix musiks, xlvj cases of Tynn and xiiij cases of wood, wt two starrs, and the image of the Trinite, on the topp of the sayed orgayns." . . . . . Various items are scattered through the Church accounts for two hundred years afterwards. . . . . 1560, "payd for mendyng of ye organs, ijs. iiij*d.*; for carrying in ye organs into Jesus Chapell, iiij*d.*; for roppes to ye organ, ij*d.*; to Richard Lynes, ye organ plaer, for his ernest, j*d.*" 1570, "receyved of the glazier of Stonley, for a payer of balowes, vs." 1583, "received of Richard Gosse for olde organ pypes, wayeng eleven score and thirteen pound at iiij*d.* half-farthing the pound, iiij*l.* js."

After this sale of the bellows, and the pipes, the Church remained without any organ for nearly sixty years—till 1632, when one was procured by the then Vicar. A few years afterwards the Puritans decided to reduce the salary of the organist, William Lambe, from £10 to £4 a year; and then to abolish such salary altogether.

Poor Mr. Lambe to be so closely shorn.

Special commendation is the just due of that true Bach student, Mr. E. H. Thorne, for the admirable performances he is giving on Friday evenings during Lent, in St. Anne's Church, Soho. On these occasions an excellent selection from Bach's "St. John" Passion forms the anthem. The rendering of the grand old Cantor's music is in every respect thoroughly adequate. Choir, orchestra, and soloists give evidence of the training they have received by a first-rate musician who has his heart and soul in the work. It is exactly two hundred years ago that Dr. Croft became the first organist of St. Anne's, Soho. His fine old hymn-tune "St. Anne's" is named after the church wherein now resounds the music of his great contemporary, J. S. Bach, the composer of the "St. Anne's" Fugue!

"The Church Choral Association for the Diocese of Norwich" is doing excellent work. The Report for 1899 states: "It is gratifying to have to report another year of steady and successful work." The service book for this year's Festival (Norwich Cathedral, May 30) contains, "in addition to a fairly easy service and anthem, in which all the choirs can take part," the first part of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The "fairly easy service and anthem" are respectively S. S. Wesley's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F and Sullivan's "Hearken unto Me, My people." A credit balance of £73 5s. 7d. shows that the financial position of the Association is satisfactory.

Sir John Stainer has been elected President of the London Gregorian Choral Association in succession to the Duke of Newcastle, who has resigned that office.

The "Celestial organ" has found its way across the Atlantic, where it has been placed in Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal. Its exact position is in the tower of the church, which, as it has a central opening into the nave and chancel, is well adapted for instrumental celestialisms. It is interesting to learn that King George III. presented an organ to the old Christ Church Cathedral in 1814. In the present mother-church the choir is a mixed one of thirty-six voices—twenty ladies and sixteen men, all of whom, however, are clad in surplices. A tastefully prepared and illustrated booklet giving particulars of the new celestial organ contains a photograph of "The Cathedral Quartette," two ladies and two gentlemen duly robed—the soprano and contralto wearing mortar boards of a somewhat elevated type.

Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons have recently erected a new organ in Emmanuel Church, South Croydon, which furnishes an instance of what their tubular action is able to accomplish, the distance between the organ and its console being very considerable. We give the specification of the organ; some of the stops, however, are omitted for the present:—

Great (9 stops).

A new organ has recently been erected in the Parish Church of St. Nicholas, Sutton. The instrument, built by Messrs. Norman and Beard, under the direction of the honorary organist and choirmaster of the church, Mr. Charlton T. Speer, gives the greatest satisfaction. Mr. W. Stevenson Hoyte displayed the resources of the instrument to advantage in a recital, the programme of which included Handel's "Cuckoo and Nightingale" Concerto.

Specimen programmes have already been given of municipal organ recitals at Liverpool and Manchester. Leeds, therefore, may not unnaturally follow suit in supplying the specimen programme for this month. Mr. H. A. Fricker, the Borough organist, gives two free recitals weekly—one on Tuesday afternoons, the other on Saturday evenings—extending from September to June inclusive. At the afternoon performances, arranged for Tuesday for the benefit of the country folk who attend the weekly market held on that day, the attendance is about 500 or 600, but on Saturdays it averages 1,200 persons. Mr. Fricker says: "The Saturday evening audience is an ideal one to play to. The keenness with which they listen, and their appreciation of the music, make my duty one of great pleasure. One marked feature has been the reception accorded to Bach's works, several of the fugues having been encored." The following is one of Mr. Fricker's Saturday programmes:—

1. Grand Solemn March in E flat . . . . . Henry Smart.
2. Lied (From "Suite de trois morceaux") . . . . E. Gigout.
3. Sonata in D minor (Op. 30) . . . . . Merkel.
   (Originally written as an Organ Duet, and arranged as a Solo by Frederic Archer.)
4. Allegretto in B minor . . . . . E. H. Lemare.
5. Grand Fantasia ("The Storm") . . . . . Lemmens.
6. Overture ("Rienzi") . . . . . Wagner.

The annual performance of Graun's "Der Tod Jesu," at St. Saviour's Collegiate Church, Southwark, is announced to take place on the 5th inst., at 7.30 p.m.

Sir Walter Parratt recently played the following comprehensive selection at All Saints' Church, Reading, which may well form our Church specimen recital-programme for the month.

1. Overture ("Ptolemy") .. .. Handel.
2. Andante in D, with variations (Posthumous).. Mendelssohn.
3. Fugue in B flat .. ..William Russell.
4. Largo, from the "New World" Symphony .. .. Dvorâk.
5. Idylle and Toccata, from the Sonata in C .. Rheinberger.
6. Allegro grazioso, from the "Pathetic" Symphony Tschaïkowsky.
7. Prière et Berceuse .. ..Guilmant.
8. Fantasia in G major .. .. J. S. Bach.

Organ recitals have recently been given by Mr. Allan Paterson St. Paul's, Greenock; Mr. Edward Cutler (who played his "Andante Religioso"), Preston Parish Church; Mr. W. Granger, Kendal Parish Church; Mr. R. W. Strickland, College Street Chapel, Northampton; Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, the newly-appointed organist, Tewkesbury Abbey; Mr. Arthur Docksey (who played Smart's "Con moto moderato: En forme d'Ouverture," which was also recently performed by Mr. E. H. Lemare), St. Aidan's Church, South Shields; Mr. Fred. Diggle, Galashiels Free Church; Mr. Thomas Nisbet, Cambuslang Parish Church; Mr. Edward Nicol (who played Stainer's Jubilant March), North United Presbyterian Church, Perth; Mr. Fountain Meen (who included Dr. Maurice Greene's Overture in G), Whitefield Memorial Church; Mr. Wesley Hammet, Clapham Wesleyan Church; Mr. J. B. Lawson, Dirleton Parish Church (inauguration of new organ built by Messrs. Ingram and Co.); Mr. Arthur E. Jones, All Saints', Bolton; Mr. Sidney A. Mosdell, St. Martin's Church, Fenny Stratford; and Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, who daily performs most interesting and varied programmes on the great organ at the Crystal Palace.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, AND CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Frederic W. Goodrich, Bletchingley Parish Church, Surrey.

Mr. E. F. Davies, Christ Church, Cyfarthfa, Merthyr Tydfil.

Mr. William Cooke, St. Paul's Church, Widnes.

Mr. J. W. Cheadle, Parish Church of St. Michael's, Dumfries.

Mr. Arnold Bagshaw, St. Jude's (Eldon) Church, Sheffield.

Mrs. H. E. Bennett, Parish Church of Holy Trinity, Tauranga, Bay of Plenty, New Zealand.

Mr. Malcolm B. Kidd, Forfar Parish Church, N.B.

Mr. Adam Henderson, Whiteinch Parish Church, Glasgow.

Mr. F. G. Dyer, Organist and Musicmaster, St. Edward's School, Oxford.

Mr. Rowland Loose, Choirmaster, St. Mary's Parish Church, Newington.

Mr. W. Coleman, Lay Clerk, Canterbury Cathedral.

Mr. W. Jefferson (Tenor), St. Peter's, Great Windmill Street.

Mr. Belle (Tenor), Christ Church, Beckenham.

REVIEWS.

MUSICAL LITERATURE.

Richard Wagner's Prose Works. Translated by William Ashton Ellis. Vol. VIII. Posthumous, &c. [Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Company, Limited.]

With this volume Mr. Ashton Ellis concludes his herculean task of translating into our vernacular the prose productions of the Bayreuth master. For nine years, "through thick and thin," as he observes, has Mr. Ellis steadily "pegged away" at his difficult labour of love, and English readers owe him a deep debt of gratitude for "something attempted, something done." But his farewell is really in the nature of the pleasanter "Auf Wiedersehen." His next "How do you do?" will herald a translation of Glasenapp's trustworthy "Life of Richard Wagner," which task is to occupy him "for the next two or three years."

Not the least interesting feature of this final volume is that it contains some of Wagner's published writings penned during his young man period. That "On German Opera," written when he was barely of age, is his first known contribution to the press. In an article on "Bellini," written for a local newspaper at Riga in 1837—and where and when he produced his "Rule, Britannia," Overture—he improved the occasion by a little pardonable self-advertisement in the following terms: "Bellini's operas have found applause in Italy, in France, and Germany; why should they not find the like in Lithuania?" A few days subsequent to the appearance of the article, Wagner produced "Norma" for his benefit!

Wagner's Paris period (1839-1842) occupies some 130 of Mr. Ellis's readable pages. It will be remembered that upon leaving Riga Wagner reached the French capital viâ London—"the city of costly experiences," is his opinion of our metropolis. The Parisian articles and letters, contributed by him to various German newspapers, are very amusing. He evidently made the acquaintance of Scribe, then "the king of librettists," as a distinguished critic happily crowns him. So mighty was Scribe that he caused Wagner to burst into "inspired verse" thuswise:—

> To thee, high God of pen and paper, creative > Genius without a peer, Autocrat of all the > theatres of Paris, Man of the exhaustless > rents, Ideal of productive force in > weekly numbers, to thee resound my > reverent lay.

There are some interesting references to Mendelssohn, who, like Wagner, was at that time (the early forties) on the operatic war path. The two men traversed widely different art roads, but they had one thing in common—the desire to write a grand opera. Mendelssohn spent many wasteful hours in vainly seeking a libretto to his liking. Wagner probably did likewise—he and Mendelssohn may even have courted Scribe; but the redoubtable Richard would have nought of those librettists—Scribe or no scribe—with the result that, as all the world knows, he became his own poet. Wagner's criticisms on Mendelssohn are as fairly as they are temperately expressed. He says: "I hear that Mendelssohn has been invited to compose an opera for Paris: if he is so insane as to accept, he's to be pitied. To my way of thinking, he is not even in the position to succeed with an opera in Germany; he's much too intellectual, and totally wanting in passion." Again: "In Mendelssohn the veritable German nature declares itself most characteristically. The type of intellect, of imagination, in fact, the whole interior life revealed in his instrumental compositions, so finished in their smallest details; the pious quietude that breathes from his religious works,—all is profoundly German, but does not suffice for writing dramatic music; nay, this peaceful and abstemious piety is diametrically opposed to the inspiration demanded by Drama." Wagner is severely sarcastic on the business-like propensities of Dumas and Auber, whom he compares with bankers and frequenters of the Bourse. "If," he says, "they are in need of money, they take the practised scissors of their talent, and snip a piece or opera from the gilt-edged security of their renown, just as any other capitalist cuts off his darling coupons; they send it to the theatre, instead of the bank, and amuse themselves."

Was Wagner ever a musical critic? There is some internal evidence to furnish an answer in the affirmative. On the reverse of a "prose-sketch," now in the Berlin Library, of his "Love feast of the Apostles," is a draft report of a criticism on a performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," conducted by the composer at Dresden, in April, 1843. Mr. Ellis says that this critical notice has not been used. We must accept his word. But why should Wagner write a notice in the orthodox style of a newspaper criticism unless he had some use for it?

The temptation, strong though it be, to quote from this volume must be resisted. Unlike some of its forerunners, the matter therein is much more readable and more human in its interests, being less charged with those philosophical and metaphysical dissertations that Wagner loved so well.

Mention must be made of the opening chapter, "Siegfried's Death," written in 1848, and of two of the posthumous contributions — the draft (unused) of "The Saracen Woman," an opera in five acts, and "Jesus of Nazareth," a poetic draft, one of the unrealised drama dreams of Wagner.

We can only repeat previous commendations of the manner in which Mr. Ashton Ellis has discharged his difficult task. As heretofore, his summary and index are models. "A general chronological table of the contents of the eight volumes" is another of those instances which testifies to the thoroughness of Richard Wagner's English translator.

Life of Chopin. By Franz Liszt. Translated by John Broadhouse. [William Reeves.]

The reader who takes up this book in the expectation of finding it a biography per se of the greatest of pianoforte composers will probably be disappointed; but this by no means implies that it is not a book to be read. As a matter of fact, the volume before us throws a hardly less interesting light upon the personality of its illustrious author than upon the master musician who forms its theme. In an interesting letter, dated "Weimar, February 4, 1851," to M. Léon Escudier, the Parisian music publisher and manager of La France Musicale, Liszt refers to "the proofs of the first two articles of my biographical study of Chopin" (the italics are ours), which, by the way, first appeared in the above-named journal in detached numbers, beginning on February 9, 1851. Liszt adds: "Both on account of the reverence of my friendship for Chopin, and my desire to devote the utmost care to my present and subsequent instalments, it is most important that this work should make its appearance as free from defects as possible, and I earnestly request you to give most conscientious attention to the revision of the last proofs."

Nearly fifty years have passed since Liszt's "biographical study," or "appreciation"—that is its best designation—of Chopin appeared in book form, yet it only now makes its appearance in an English version, "translated in full for the first time," as the title-page informs us. Although Liszt's "appreciation" is more or less in the nature of a rhapsodical panegyric upon his friend, there are many interesting touches of a personal nature that are of distinct value. For instance, in regard to Chopin's pianoforte performances, Liszt says: "By his peculiar style of playing, Chopin imparted with most fascinating effect a constant rocking, making the melody undulate to and fro like a skiff driven over the bosom of tossing waves. This manner of execution, which set so peculiar a seal upon his own style of performance, was first indicated by the words Tempo rubato affixed to his works; a tempo broken, agitated, interrupted; a movement flexible while it was abrupt and languishing, and as vacillating as the flame under the fluctuating breath which agitates it. This direction is no longer to be found in his later productions; he was persuaded that if the player understood them he would divine this regular irregularity. All his compositions ought to be played with this accentuated and measured swaying and rocking, though it is difficult for those who never heard him play to catch hold of this secret of their proper execution." His favourite amongst his own compositions was the beautiful Larghetto of the second Pianoforte Concerto (in F minor, Op. 21).

Chopin expressed to a brother artist his dislike of playing in public in the following terms: "I am not suited for concert-giving; the public frighten me; their looks, stimulated by nothing but curiosity, paralyse me; their strange faces oppress me; and their breath stifles me"! He had a rooted dislike to letter writing. "Many and many a time has he walked from one end of Paris to the other to decline an invitation to dinner, or to afford some trifling information rather than write a line or two which would have saved all this trouble and waste of time. The great majority of his friends did not even know what his handwriting was like." That he was not entirely the lackadaisical sentimentalist, a state of existence so often associated with his personality, is proved by the fact that "he would willingly spend whole evenings in playing blind man's buff with young folks, and would tell them little tales to make them break forth into that silvery laughter of youth which is sweeter than the nightingale's song."

While the "Life of Chopin" is the exhaustive biography by Professor Niecks, this "appreciation" of one great artist by another is one that distinctly adds to our knowledge of the great Polish composer for the pianoforte, and its author, the greatest of all pianoforte players.

THEORETICAL WORKS.

A Course of Harmony. By Frederick Bridge and Frank J. Sawyer. [Novello and Company, Limited.]

Harmony, Diatonic and Chromatic. By Charles Vincent. [Charles Vincent.]

If the present generation of harmony students fail to become equipped in their theoretical knowledge it will not be for lack of treatises. Joint-authorship is somewhat rare in such books, as even in the same Institution one harmony professor will have nothing to do, theoretically speaking, with his colleague "over the way." But in the first of these works under notice two professors of the Royal College of Music prove that they can really dwell together in unity, or should it not be in harmony? "No new theory" is their watchword. "Existing systems, mainly those of Goss and Macfarren," are the foundations upon which they build; they raise their superstructure unencumbered, and rightly so, we think, with all philosophical or acoustical arguments. Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, adopt an unassailable creed in their belief "that the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." What have they done to prove the truth that is in them? They "have aimed at a higher and more artistic result—viz., the 'creation' of harmony by the student." How have they sought to attain that end? We quote from the general preface:—

> Firstly, those in which the figured bass is given and in which the student has, therefore, to add the upper parts.
> Secondly, those in which the melody only is given and in which the student has, from the very outset of his work, to consider the formation of his bass, that most important of all things in music.
> Thirdly, those in which nothing is given, and he has himself to "create" the whole passage of harmony, choosing his chords and manipulating them accurately in accordance with the instructions given.

The student is then led through the various stages of his harmonic journey from triads to the chord of the thirteenth, with calls, so to speak, on the way at modulation (two chapters), harmonising unfigured basses, chromatically altered chords, unessential notes, and pedals. But the goal is not yet. The last three chapters of the course treat of harmonising for string quartet—containing most useful hints on bowing and phrasing, three-part writing, and five-part writing. And then, finally, there is an Appendix, entitled "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in harmony," the importance of which goes without saying. There is also a complete index.

So much for the outline of the subject-matter of this treatise. It is quite impossible within the limits of our space to give a detailed exposition of its development. This cannot be more thoroughly grasped than by the reader himself with the book in his hands. But one special feature may be pointed out. In regard to the exercises, the figured basses that are given are not like belated hymn-tunes, but they embrace a variety of rhythms and styles. Moreover, a marked excellence of this exercise department consists of the melodies that are given to be harmonised. Old English songs, such as "Sally in our alley," and so on, are laid under contribution. Thus the student's harmonic faculties are developed up and down—instead of "up" only, as is the method of many manuals. Moreover, his interest is thereby awakened and sustained; and thus he is gently and safely led along the road which leadeth to the creative state of his harmonic existence.

As the book is the outcome of a request made by the Council of the Royal College of Music to Sir Frederick Bridge that he should "prepare a Manual of Harmony for use in the College," it may be assumed to bear the "hall mark" of that important Institution over which Sir Hubert Parry presides. The joint-authors are men of wide experience in their respective fields. They have literally gone to the root of the matter; therefore, it would indeed be strange were they not to see a rich fruition in well equipped harmony students as the result of their joint seed-sowing.

Dr. Vincent, in his concise manual, also makes a laudable attempt to make the rough places of the harmony student plain and to guide his footsteps in the paths of efficiency. In his introduction he states that he has "failed to find any system which enables the beginner to compose a bass, or to harmonize a single melody with any degree of accuracy." He endeavours to show, and we think he succeeds, how these essentials may be acquired. He bases his system "on the Diatonic, Chromatic, and Enharmonic scales," being convinced that this is the only consistent theory whereby modern combinations can be explained.

Teachers will be struck with the novelty of the arrangement of the book. For instance, Chapter II. treats of "writing a bass part," and the consideration of first inversions is suspended—to use a harmonic word—till Chapter XIII. Previous to that "unlucky number" there are chapters on progression of parts, adding a treble part to a given bass, adding inner parts, sequences, suspensions, passing notes, &c. Thus it will be seen that Dr. Vincent does not follow the traditional methods of stating his case. It is quite possible that a jury of harmony experts would not agree upon a verdict, but they would certainly give him credit for the courage of his convictions. A specially useful chapter is that on "accents, rhythm, cadences, and elementary form." Anything that will help to remove the study of harmony from the region of mere dry mathematicalities into the purer atmosphere of real music is to be encouraged and commended. And therefore both these thoughtfully compiled treatises having that object in view will assuredly meet with the attention they deserve. We think it was Sterndale Bennett who remarked that "all the harmony one needed to know could be written upon half a sheet of note-paper." But until we all become Sterndale Bennetts, harmony books will continue to be a necessity.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Story of the Cross. By J. Varley Roberts.
How great is the loving kindness. By John E. West.
My God, I thank Thee. Words by Adelaide Procter. Music by Edwin H. Lemare.
Create in me a clean heart. By Percy J. Fry.
Turn ye ever to Me. By A. E. Godfrey.
Except the Lord build the house. By Henry Gadsby.
Nearer, my God, to Thee. By Thomas Adams.
Behold now, praise the Lord. By Frederick Iliffe.
(Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 557, 615, 617, 622, 626, 628, 629, and 631.) [Novello and Company, Limited.]

The excellence of this important series is fully maintained in recent numbers. A setting of the Rev. E. Monro's popular "Story of the Cross," by Dr. J. Varley Roberts, comes appropriately for the Lenten season and may be recommended by reason of its simplicity combined with its devotional and musicianly character.

"How great is the loving kindness," by Mr. John E. West, is an anthem for Sexagesima for general use. The music is remarkable for graceful flowing character and richness of harmony. It is in four parts throughout, but contains several effective points of imitation. The voices are admirably supported by the organ accompaniment.

"My God, I thank Thee," is an anthem which would be specially appropriate at weddings. The music, set by Mr. Edwin H. Lemare to Miss Adelaide Procter's words, possesses a tranquil beauty which renders it very impressive. There are two short solos for a baritone voice, but the remainder of the work is in four vocal parts which will present no difficulty to average choirs.

"Create in me a clean heart" is an anthem for treble or tenor solo and chorus, by Mr. Percy J. Fry. The opening solo occupies two pages. The chorus which follows is Mendelssohnian in character, easy to read, and flowing and devotional in style.

"Turn ye ever to Me," by Mr. A. E. Godfrey, also opens with a solo, for a baritone or tenor voice, of some length. In this anthem, however, the solo voice continues after the choir has entered. Well sung, the work would be impressive.

"Except the Lord build the house" was written by Mr. Henry Gadsby for the jubilee of Queen's College, London, and the music is appropriately bright and festive in character. It begins with a chorus in four parts, in which occur some effective imitative passages. This is succeeded by a section for two sopranos (or semi-chorus), who are subsequently joined by an alto soloist. A return to the allegro portion of the opening chorus effectively concludes an interesting composition.

Mrs. Sarah Adams's favourite hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," has had many settings. In this, by Mr. Thomas Adams, the music is laid out for soprano and tenor soloists and four-part chorus. Its expression is not only sincere, but manifest care has been taken to secure the proper accentuation of the lines. Some bold and striking harmonic transitions at the close have a beautiful effect.

"Behold now, praise the Lord," by Dr. Frederick Iliffe, is well described as "a short and easy full anthem for parish choirs." Much appreciation is shown by the composer of contrast, and some excellent effects are produced by simple means.

Lord, teach us to number our days. By C. H. Lloyd.
Almighty and everlasting God. By Francis Edward Gladstone.
(Novello's Services and Anthems for Men's voices. 43, 44.)
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Dr. Lloyd's anthem is well laid out for two altos, two tenors, and two basses, and may be sung by soloists or chorus. The words are taken from the 90th Psalm, and their devotional spirit is admirably reflected in the music. The vocal parts possess considerable independence and will interest cultured singers. An accompaniment is provided; but the work is so closely knit that, provided capable vocalists are available, it might be dispensed with and thus gain in impressiveness.

More simple in character is the setting by Dr. Gladstone of the Collect for the Twelfth Sunday after Trinity, which has been allied with music of flowing and appropriately prayerful spirit. It is designed for solo tenor and chorus of alto, tenor, and bass, the chorus echoing and supporting the soloist in an effective manner. Dr. Gladstone's skill and expression are specially shown in the organ accompaniment: it is remarkably slight, but every note tells, as might be expected from a pupil of S. S. Wesley.

SONGS.

Come, then. My Love. Music by Ethel Barns.
Arabic Love Song. Words by Shelley. Music by S. Liddle.
Española. Words by Charles H. Taylor. Music by Arthur Desmond.
My Love Nell. By C. Milligan Fox.
[Forsyth Bros.]

Madame Ethel Barns writes in an unpretentious manner, but with a simple and direct sympathy with her text that imparts to her music much charm. Of the two songs, "Come, then," and "My Love," the second is the better; but singers of limited capacities will find in each a grateful vocal part and music that can easily be made effective in performance.

An "Arabic Love Song" should be entitled an "Arabian Love Song," since Shelley's lines are in English; but with this exception no fault is to be found with the song. Mr. Liddle has made use of a favourite Indian scale, a characteristic feature of which is that the keynote is followed, ascending, by a semitone and a minor third, and he has used these intervals with great deftness to suggest the Eastern sentiment of the text. As the song has already been favourably received in our chief concert rooms, there is no need to enlarge upon its merits.

Vocalists who incline to songs of conventional Spanish type will find a pleasing example in Mr. Desmond's "Española," in which the praises are sung of "Juanita, sweet as Spanish skies are blue."

"My Love Nell" is described as a "collected and arranged Ulster ballad." Perusal of the words induces the conclusion that part of the ballad has been left in Ulster, since the behaviour of the colleen, who suddenly embarks for "Amerikee," is somewhat inexplicable. There is manifestly more in the story than appears to the "unclothed eye," but the tune is delightful and its best features are carefully preserved and accentuated in the arrangement and accompaniment.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Three Swedish Dances. By Frederic Mullen.
Liebeslied. By R. H. Bellairs.
T'en souviens-tu? Melody. By Anton Strelezki.
[Leonard and Co.]

Pianists of limited executive abilities in search of short pieces of pleasing character may be recommended the above compositions. Mr. Mullen's "Swedish Dances" are bright and engaging; the "Liebeslied" is as winning as a love-song should be; and "T'en souviens-tu?" suggests a question to which the speaker feels assured of receiving a satisfactory answer.

MISCELLANEOUS, SHORT NOTICES, AND BOOKS RECEIVED.

Hymns of Modern Thought, with music.
[Houghton and Company].

This is a collection of hymns "which contain no theological dogma," and in which "even the name of God has been avoided." It is not within the province of a journal devoted to music to comment upon this feature of the publication, but it is necessary to state the fact in judging the musical aspect of the volume. The book, which is printed in blue ink, contains about 200 tunes, of which one half are new—an unusually large proportion. As these new tunes are presumably composed for "hymns" which are not likely to be heard in "choirs and places where they sing" in the general acceptance of the term, it would serve no useful purpose to criticise them in detail, even if we had the space at our disposal. In regard to the tunes that are reprinted from previous collections, it comes as a sort of shock to find them divorced from their old and Divine associations. For instance, that ideal supplicatory tune "Ellers," in this collection is put to James Russell Lowell's words:—

> O truth! O freedom! how ye still are born
> In the rude stable, in the manger nursed!
> What humble hands unbar those gates of morn
> Through which the splendours of the new day burst!

We are bound to express a preference for the association of the words of Ellerton's devotional evening hymn, "Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise," with its equally devotional tune ("Ellers"), composed expressly for it by Dr. E. J. Hopkins.

MAJOR C. R. DAY.

In the kindly, wise, and just apology of Uncle Toby for war, in "Tristram Shandy," there occur these words: "Need I be told as I was by you, in Le Fever's funeral sermon, that so soft and gentle a creature, born to love, to mercy and kindness, as man is, was not shaped for this? (the miseries of war). But why did you not add, Yorick,—if not by Nature—that he is so by necessity?—For what is war; what is it, Yorick, when fought as ours has been, upon principles of liberty, and upon principles of honour—what is it, but the getting together of quiet and harmless people with their swords in their hands, to keep the ambitious and turbulent within bounds?" The sentiment expressed in these remarks is particularly applicable just now to the late Major Charles Russell Day. In South Africa, in the attack which took place near Paardeberg upon Cronje's position on February 18, in helping a wounded man, he fell himself, dangerously wounded, to die almost immediately. This sad incident robbed the world of a musical soul, a delightful, gentle enthusiast, who has left admirable work in special lines on music, and leaving those who were bound to him in the intimate relations of life to deplore the loving son, husband, and father—he has left one little daughter—and true friend.

His career may be briefly told. The only son of the Rev. Russell Day, Rector of Horstead, Norwich, he was born in 1860, and was educated at Cheam School and at Eton. In 1880 he joined the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia. In 1882 he was gazetted to the 1st Battalion of the Oxfordshire Light Infantry, formerly the 43rd regiment. Very soon after he left England for service in India, where he remained five years. He was severely wounded while quelling a rising of the Moplahs in Malabar, in 1885. It was during those five years he acquired his remarkable knowledge of one great branch of Eastern music and could return in 1887 with his magnum opus, "The Music and Musical Instruments of Southern India and the Deccan." He was instructed in the complicated system of pure Hindu music entirely by native musicians. This great work was published in 1891 by Messrs. Novello. It is illustrated by admirable chromo-lithographs drawn from rare specimens which Lieutenant Day, as he then was, had collected in India—one, an almost priceless Vina, a stringed instrument more than 200 years old. He was promoted to be Captain in 1889, and, it may be incidentally mentioned, he served as Adjutant to the second Volunteer Battalion, Middlesex Regiment, from 1892 to 1897. The Musical Division of the Military Exhibition at Chelsea, presided over by Colonel Shaw Hellier, gave him, in 1890, the opportunity to show his unusual knowledge of wind instruments by arranging the interesting collection, musically and historically, that was gathered there. The Catalogue raisonné, a quarto of 253 pages, which he compiled, a work in itself sufficient to bring the author a lasting reputation, was published by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode. About this time he gave what help he could to the establishment of a Wind Instrument Society, intended to further the development of chamber music for wind instruments. His mind was ever active in his favourite subjects, as was shown by a lecture, with illustrations, before the Musical Association, and papers contributed to the press almost to the day of his departure for South Africa. He served on H.R.H. The Duke of Edinburgh's Committee for the British Section of the great Musical Exhibition at Vienna, in 1892, and was also invited to form one of a Committee of Advice, meeting at South Kensington, to the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition this year. He was gazetted Major in 1899. Had he survived and returned to England his friends believe he would have ended his military career as Commandant at Kneller Hall, the great training school for military bands, a post that was the object of his ambition. He would no doubt have got brevet rank if necessary to fill it. The improvement of our military music and the proper education and welfare of the bandsmen were ever in his mind. But it was to be otherwise. Her Gracious Majesty the Queen, who was an early subscriber for Major Day's Indian book, has honoured the memory of a brave and good man by requesting his photograph. The bugles may sound the Last Post gravely and tenderly over the distant grave where this gentle, musical soldier reposes.

MR. S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S "HIAWATHA."

"Hats off, gentlemen, a genius!" With these words of Schumann's we greeted, in our issue of October, 1898, the appearance of Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," even before its production at the Royal College of Music on the 11th of the following month. When in October last "The Death of Minnehaha" made its appearance, and whelmed us with its heartbreaking pathos, we again spoke of the young composer's "genius." And now the completion of the trilogy, "Hiawatha's Departure," has been performed, together with its two complementary works, and we say once more to all who have ears to hear: "Hats off, gentlemen, a genius!"

Need we hesitate to say this, or stop to criticise, when in the presence of a work so absolutely beautiful and so absolutely unique? We think not. Here we have at last what England has been waiting for ever since she began to repudiate the taunt that she was unmusical, that the creative gift was denied to her musicians. "Hiawatha" is a creation if ever there was one in our art. It boldly crosses the line that divides the abnormally clever from the simply beautiful, the obviously inspired. Who can define inspiration in music? Who can analyse the qualities in Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music that touch singers until they can hardly produce their notes, and audiences so that they cannot read their programmes or scores? For this is what happened at the North Staffordshire Festival, at Hanley, in October last, when "The Death of Minnehaha" was first produced. It happened again at the performance of the complete trilogy, at the Royal Albert Hall, on the 22nd ult. We have it on the authority of the soloists engaged on these occasions, and we have heard it from many members of the choir, that hardly anything they have ever sung has moved them to attempt, and yet (for the reasons stated above) prevented them from achieving their very best, as has this beautiful music of our young countryman. And the undefinable Something that can produce this greatest of "Marvels many and many wonders" must be, is inspiration.

"The Song of Hiawatha" has been before the world both in Longfellow's original and numerous translations into foreign languages for nearly half-a-century, and it has been free to countless composers great and small to exercise their genius or ingenuity upon it. Yet not one has succeeded in producing music that lives as Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's does and will live. "Poetry" in this case has long been waiting for its sister, "Music," but it has not waited in vain. And when did ever

> Music and sweet poetry agree
> As they must needs, the sister and the brother, as do Longfellow's trochaics and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's music, which so illumines and glorifies the poem that it shines with a hitherto unrealised effulgence!

And this leads us to another remarkable fact. Although Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has set altogether over 800 lines of Longfellow's poem to music, every one of them, with but the rarest exceptions, consisting of trochaics, nothing is more remarkable than the absence of that feeling of monotony which the almost paralysing sameness of the poet's metre might easily have engendered.

Coming now to the performance of the 22nd ult., let us say at once that the young composer's triumph was complete. Rarely, if ever, has such a spontaneous outburst of genuine enthusiasm been witnessed in London at the production of a new work than that displayed by the large audience after the first part of the concert, which concluded with "The Death of Minnehaha." The pent-up feeling of the deeply moved audience relieved itself in such cheers and shouts of approbation as must have warmed and gladdened the heart of the composer and, if we may incidentally say so, also of those who for some years past have hailed the young Anglo-African as the coming man in music.

The question will naturally arise: Has the composer succeeded in keeping up to the end the interest so powerfully excited by the two earlier cantatas, and has he been able to even surpass the beautiful and touching climax at the end of "The Death of Minnehaha?" To both questions we reply with an emphatic "yes"! The "Departure" is both the longest and ripest of the three cantatas that constitute the trilogy. To surpass the heartrending, tear-compelling pathos of the "Death" was impossible, unless the composer found lines even more moving than the canto superscribed "The Famine" in Longfellow's poem.

After the tragic gloom of the "Death," relief and contrast were absolutely necessary. This the composer has given us in the delicious first soprano solo, "Spring had come," and in the humorous scena between that confirmed old story teller, Iagoo, and his people. Both these numbers, together with a subsequent baritone scena, are taken from the penultimate canto of Longfellow's epic. The rest of the libretto consists of the final canto in the poem, without the omission of a single line. The words uttered by Hiawatha are, of course, given to the baritone, those of Iagoo and the Priest to the tenor, while the twenty-eight lines commencing "From the brow of Hiawatha" are set as another soprano solo. All the remainder is assigned to the chorus, which has consequently a heavy and important task in the work. The music is throughout as fresh and individual as that of the earlier cantata. There is hardly a bar that can be said to recall any other composer's music, and we feel instinctively, as we said eighteen months ago, in reviewing the "Wedding-Feast," that if a way of setting Longfellow's endless trochaics had to be found, then Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's seems the best and the only way. Whether he writes simple "tunes," such as in Iagoo's tales of wonder, or recitative-like passages to words describing the Saviour's sufferings and triumph; whether rough, almost barbaric utterances for the Indian chiefs, or dignified farewells for the noble Hiawatha, he finds exactly the right musical phrases to suit such varied conditions. And how beautiful are his phrases! The work is one long stream of spontaneous melody from the first note to the last.

We need not go through the "Departure" in detail to single out its best points, but we must mention the splendid and elaborate baritone scena, "True is all Iagoo tells us" (Hiawatha's vision), a superb piece of declamatory music (an afterthought, by the way!); the delightfully tuneful soprano solo, "From the brow of Hiawatha"; Hiawatha's address of welcome to the strangers, "Beautiful is the sun," as fascinating a song as ever flowed from the composer's facile pen; and Hiawatha's valedictory addresses to Nokomis and to his people, two stately and original solos that rise to great heights of expressiveness.

The composer has put forth his full powers in the lengthy and imposing Finale. He has succeeded in writing a choral movement of splendid virility and poetic suggestiveness, broadly melodious, beautifully harmonised, and rising from strength to strength on to the final outburst, "Farewell, farewell for ever." This is a great effort, and the effect of the gorgeous stream of colour flowing from orchestra and organ, above and below the massive choral harmony—especially from the point "Thus departed Hiawatha," where the organ, bassoon, tuba, double-basses, and drums hold a pedal B—is magnificent, and stirring to a degree. This is a climax greater, nobler, and more elevated even than that of the "Death of Minnehaha," and thus our young composer has succeeded in piling Ossa upon Pelion.

The performance, conducted by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor himself, was fair as regards the chorus. The two earlier cantatas went well on the whole, but there were many hesitating attacks, weak climaxes, and even wrong notes in the "Departure," while there was no attempt to bring out the humour and poetry that lie hidden in the beautiful music. The orchestra was correct and sympathetic and the soloists were excellent. Miss Blauvelt's sympathetic voice and refined style were exactly suited to the touching solos in the "Death of Minnehaha," which she sang with the utmost pathos. She had a splendid partner in Mr. Andrew Black, who greatly moved his audience in the heartbreaking solo, "Farewell, said he, Minnehaha," and, moreover, declaimed the fine solos in the "Departure" with superb breadth and dignity. Mr. Whitney Mockridge, excellent artist that he is, sang his various solos with full appreciation of their varied character.

"Hiawatha" will become familiar as household words to music-lovers, for it lacks not one of the essentials of a work that can be heard again and again with ever increasing delight and admiration. Apart from the beautiful music, the unconventional poem will never fail to exercise its strange fascination. And all who can feel this fascination will say with the poet:

> Ye who love a Nation's legends,
> Love the ballads of a people,
> That like voices from afar off
> Call to us to pause and listen,
> Speak in tones so plain and childlike,
> Scarcely can the ear distinguish
> Whether they are sung or spoken;—
> Listen to this Indian Legend,
> To this Song of Hiawatha!

SIR HUBERT PARRY ON "NEGLECTED BY-WAYS IN MUSIC."

The following is a digest of the three lectures recently delivered by Sir Hubert Parry at the Royal Institution, and made specially by him for The Musical Times:—

Most men's knowledge of unfrequented by-roads must necessarily be at second-hand, and their views of them are coloured by accident and disposition. Some remember them when they have been sweet with the sight and smell of primroses and violets, and gay with may in spring sunshine. Some will think of them with memories of floundering in mud and ancient ruts. The by-roads of art are just the same as the by-roads of ordinary life. Some of them are decked with the primroses and violets of art, and even more pretentious flowers, such as are seen in out of the way cottage gardens, and a great many of them are muddy and dreary.

By-ways would not be by-ways if they had not some essential drawbacks, and neglected by-ways are almost necessarily failures. The public is too practical to neglect a road which is serviceable for any place where many people want to go; and the only alternative which can practically justify a by-way is the none too frequent case of desirable places which are only known to few, and whither the herding public has not yet received an impulse.

BY-WAYS v. HIGHWAYS.

By-roads are mainly survivals of an intermediate stage of human development. In the earliest stages there were mere uncertain tracks, in the latest everything is so highly organised that the world is almost dominated by great highways, and neglected and superfluous by-ways have no chance to come into existence. In art it would be presumptuous to say that any branch was a neglected by-way till we have got a good way from it. The greatest minds have often seemed to their contemporaries to be wandering off into unaccountable by-ways. Brahms, Wagner, Schumann, Beethoven, and Bach all seemed at times unintelligible even to intelligent musicians of their day. But the wider public of successive generations found that they were pioneering great highways, and those who sought what was worthy of the name of art soon frequented them. To find neglected by-ways one must go back to times of transition or experiment, when there were plenty of unknown tracts to explore, and the main roads were not so clearly marked out.

Up to the end of the sixteenth century musical art was limited almost entirely to one great highway, which had been developed mainly for ecclesiastical purposes. When men began to give their minds to secular music, they seemed to come to a wide and spacious land with infinite possibilities of development, but little or nothing to show in what direction it was most serviceable to go. Some men started off on the roads which led to the great branches of instrumental music, opera, oratorio, and so forth, and a few struck out experimentally in directions where less enduring results could be obtained; they sometimes lost their way, and sometimes turned through a by-way into the main road again. Some of their by-ways continued to be trodden by admiring crowds for a while, and were adorned with specious skill; and some remained homely and secret. Into some few we may look with likelihood of finding traces of human nature and human characteristics, which are so often specially attractive in unfamiliar phases.

FANCIES.

Instrumental music was a natural province for impracticable by-ways in the early part of the seventeenth century, because it was so new, and men so little understood how to deal with it. Responsible composers hardly thought it consistent with their dignity at first to write ordinary simple dance tunes, though they often wrote movements called by dance names, which were so elaborated with all the resources of their art that they ceased to have any possible connection with dancing. Of such there is a profusion in all the collections of music for virginals and other keyed instruments by our great English masters of Elizabeth's time. But many of the composers cultivated a still more unprofitable line. The methods of art so far cultivated were almost exclusively restricted to choral music—representing various phases of counterpoint—and the serious composers who felt the obligation of justifying their work by artistic interest endeavoured to write music in choral style and on contrapuntal principles for instruments. Out of this ultimately emerged the familiar form of fugue. But while men were beating about the bush to find the right road they fell into all sorts of by-ways, which are represented by different types of canzone, ricercari, symphonie, and fantasias or fancies. These were written for organ, spinets, or virginals, and even for lutes. But the by-road which proved most unprofitable was that of the Fancies, especially those written for strings. There are most remarkable examples of such works by the great Gabrielis, by Bruys, Orazio Vecchi, and our own Orlando Gibbons. The true Fancy, which represented a justly negligeable by-road, is the English Fancy, of which type of art examples were produced in overwhelming profusion from the early part of the seventeenth century till after the Commonwealth; when Charles II. is commonly reported to have made an exception to the well-known formula of his life, by giving it the coup-de-grâce of his disfavour. These fancies were mere essays in contrapuntal dexterity, without method or system, serving for next to nothing but to show off the learning and drouthiness of the composers. As exceptions may be quoted some examples of Orlando Gibbons's in the "Parthenia" of 1611—which are very noble and dignified—and some extraordinarily delicate and dainty little examples in the MS. volume of Benjamin Cosyn, belonging to Her Majesty, and preserved at Buckingham Palace. (Two examples were performed by Miss F. Smith.) Of the absolute unfanciful type the long-lived John Jenkins was the most profuse composer. His fame at that time was great—and some little justification for it is found in other provinces of instrumental art—but as far as the Fancies are concerned, his line is obviously a dreary and unprofitable by-road, and one which travellers in the realms of art have justifiably neglected. (Examples by Orazio Vecchi and by John Jenkins were performed.)

DIVERTISSEMENTS.

A neglected by-road which presents much more attractive features is that which was the outcome of the very dance movements which serious composers at first fought shy of. They had made groups of dance tunes which were prototypes of the suites and ordres of later times; and were not intended to accompany dances, but to represent what may be called absolute artistic music. But when the development of French taste in things theatrical came to one of its crises in Lulli's works, the irresistible attractiveness of the "divertissements" suggested not only the performance of selected dance tunes from the operas apart from the actual operatic performances, but also the composition of groups of dances which could be used for accompaniments to dancing. Not many works of this kind of any real artistic value have been written at any time; but it so happened that a remarkably interesting German composer, Georg Muffat, who resided in Paris for six years and studied Lulli's style, when he returned to Germany set to work to compose a number of such dance tunes; which he grouped into sets, with an overture after the French manner to begin with. They are quite unlike the suites of Bach or Handel, because the individual dances are of such varied character and so suggestive of connection with the stage. There was a great number of these sets, which Muffat designated by the name of "Fasciculus," and the sets themselves were published in groups, each called a "Florilegium," the first of which came out in 1695. The overtures are well developed, and much more free and artistic than Lulli's own; and the dance movements, which comprise canaries, bourrées, rigodons, minuets, gavottes, and movements called "Les Cuisiniers," "Les Marmitons," "Entrée des Fraudes," "Entrée des Insultes," "Les Gendarmes," &c., are light, lively, melodious, and full of point—sometimes even extraordinarily vivacious and effective. One of the curious points about them is that they were written by a composer who was said to be of English descent, for the benefit of Germans, in imitation of the Italian Lulli's imitation of typically French dance music. (A number of the movements were played by a small stringed orchestra.)

AYRES.

The seventeenth century was the most prolific period in the making of musical by-ways in England, and though some of them were muddy and unattractive, others were adorned with bright and dainty flowers. The tendencies towards what was called the "New Music" showed itself in England, even in the latter part of the sixteenth century, in the increase of unsophisticated tunefulness, even in the works of responsible masters such as Morley and Dowland. The English composers were much slower in deserting the lines of the great choral art than those of other countries. As usual, they were inclined to hold fast that which was proved to be good after composers of other nations had all adopted the new style. But an important proof that the new tendency had votaries in this country is shown by the extraordinary quantity of solo songs and secular part-songs with lute accompaniment, which came out just at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth centuries. One of the remarkable features of many of these songs was the beauty of the poetry; and another remarkable fact was that the poetry was often written by the composers themselves; and as this line of musical art has become a neglected by-way by reason of the impossibility of having songs accompanied by lutes in modern times, the makers of these songs have taken more abiding hold of the world as poets than as composers. But the music is often dainty, delicate, and tuneful, and always pure and refined. The best of these sets of Ayres (as they were called) were by Jones, Rossiter, Coperario, Thomas Ford, and Campion.

THE MASQUE.

A form of art which was immensely popular from the time of the Tudors till almost the outbreak of the Civil War was the Masque. It was a sort of counterpart of the French mascarade, and has become an unfrequented by-way, partly through changes of taste and partly through its incapacity for expansion and development. It, however, represents the larger branch of the English departure in the direction of the so-called "New Music." It was a very artificial kind of entertainment, with next to no dramatic intention, but often highly artistic in a literary sense. The musical ingredients consisted of songs, passages of declamation, and dance tunes, and, occasionally, instrumental interludes and introductions. Of these the songs are the most attractive features. Not very much music from the masques has survived, but there are samples of quasi-recitative by Laniere and Coperario, and some charming little ditties by Campion and Lupo and Johnson, of the Jacobean days, and dances and songs by William and Henry Lawes, of Charles I.'s time.

The most famous of masques, Milton's "Comus," was fitted with songs by Henry Lawes, who had an extraordinary reputation as a song-writer in his time, which is more justified by his appreciation of genuine poetry than by the actual music he produced. The songs for "Comus" are really very halting and feeble, but they show an artistic intention in the sincerity with which the composer endeavoured to follow the rhythm and accent of the poetry rather than to make merely pleasant little tunes. This tendency is also shown in the collections of songs by Lawes, Laniere, Colman, Wilson, and others, which came out in the early years of the Commonwealth; in which an attempt to achieve a new kind of accompanied recitative is perceptible—a sort of compromise between melody and declamation, which occasionally turns out very expressively, as in Henry Lawes's setting of "He that loves a rosy cheek." Though the most prolific period of the production of masques was the latter part of Charles I.'s reign, when a great masque was given at Court almost every year, the masque of which there are most copious musical examples remaining belongs to the latter part of the Commonwealth. The suppression of Church music by the Puritans drove lovers of music to cultivate secular music, and the suppression of ordinary stage plays led to the attempting of operas and performances in the theatres with music, and of these the most notable was Shirley's masque of "Cupid and Death," with music by Matthew Lock and Christopher Gibbons, which was performed in Leicester Fields in 1659. This comprises a kind of overture in several movements, some very queer and clumsy dance tunes suggestive of strange gestures, and a great deal of solo music, both declamatory and tuneful, and a few short choruses. The stage directions are curious and interesting, and give a fairly clear idea of the fanciful entertainment, in which apes and fauns and "Slaine Loves" took a prominent part. (Illustrations of lute songs and various specimens of the different kinds of masque music were performed.)

MONOLOGUES AND DIALOGUES.

There was one curious experimental venture of the English composers of the first half of the seventeenth century which seemed as if it ought to have turned out well, but ultimately proved an unfrequented by-way. The idea was to put dialogues or monologues into the mouths of classical or mythical characters, whose circumstances were either perfectly familiar to every decently educated person or sufficiently suggestive by their very names to give cue and colour to the works. A long monologue by Henry Lawes was the plaint of "Ariadne sitting on a rock in the island of Naxos," when deserted by Bacchus, which PATRIOTIC MUSIC.

HYMN BEFORE ACTION

SONG FOR A BARITONE VOICE

THE POEM BY
RUDYARD KIPLING.

THE MUSIC BY
H. WALFORD DAVIES.

Price Two Shillings.

Ad libitum Accompaniment for Men's voices, in Four Parts, 4d.

Note.—Though written as a Baritone Song, this hymn is intended to be sung by many men's voices in unison. Except in the second verse (which may well be sung as a solo), the pianoforte part is suited to many voices, and, when used as an accompaniment to a single voice, must be subdued as its character will allow.—H. W. D.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ought to have served for an interesting piece of music, but which, owing to the undeveloped state of musical art at the time, proves quite childish. There are dialogues between Venus and Vulcan, between a Nymph and a Shepherd; also one between Time and the Pilgrim, which seems poetically suggestive, but is sad twaddle. One of the best is a dialogue between Philomel and Charon, by William Lawes, in which the plaintive pleading of the bird to be regarded as a mortal and entitled to be ferried across the Styx into the realm of shades, and the gruffness of old Charon are well suggested in the music. This form of art seems to have met with little favour with composers, but it led to some remarkable examples by Purcell in the latter part of the century; such as that vivid stroke of genius the monologue of Bess of Bedlam, the surprisingly characteristic dialogue of Saul and the Witch of Endor, and a few melodious and artistic dialogues in the music for plays. It may be also said that the form occasionally presents itself in the dialogue verses in the "Restoration" anthems of Humfrey, Blow, Purcell, and others. The dialogue between Philomel and Charon was performed.

THE "CANTATA A VOCE SOLA."

A very curious contrast to this form of art is found in the "Cantata a voce sola" of the Italians of about the same period and later. This was an outcome of the operatic development in Italy, and, though probably never meant for presentation on the stage, was on the same lines as much of the operatic music of the latter part of the seventeenth and the first half of the eighteenth century. Occasionally it was brought into line with the English dialogues by being put into the mouth of a famous person or a personified abstraction. There is a very long cantata by Carissimi which is put into the mouth of Mary, Queen of Scots; a very interesting and constructively elaborate cantata by Rossi is put into the mouth of La Gelosia; and another, by the same composer, into the mouth of La Fortuna. But such cantatas became more and more conventionalised, till, at the end of the century, in the hands of Alessandro Scarlatti, they consisted almost invariably of a systematic alternation of typical passages of Italian recitative and regular Da capo arias; and the effect they produce to modern taste is monotonous and long-winded. But in their way they are often very artistic, and they were evidently written for first-rate singers. One of the peculiarities of those of Scarlatti's time is that the accompaniment is limited to no more than a violoncello with figures; which gives them quite a peculiar cachet, as the violoncello part is always treated melodically, and thus very rarely supplies a substantial bass. As a form of art the "Cantata a voce sola" is inevitably a neglected by-way; as the style and artistic method belong essentially to the period, and the cantatas are so long that they are hardly presentable in their entirety to modern audiences. (A complete example by Alessandro Scarlatti was performed by Miss Agnes Nicholls and Miss Eleisen.)

GERMAN BY-WAYS.

In very marked contrast to both English and Italian by-ways were some of the German by-ways of the seventeenth century. Though the Germans gave hardly any indications of their great destiny at that time, their music always had characteristic qualities of earnestness and expressiveness. Whatever of artistic method they learnt from other nations they transmuted into a distinct style; and when the German composers took up the "new music" they dealt with it in a different manner from other nations. By a fortunate accident the impulse came from Venice through Heinrich Schütz, who was sent to study under Giovanni Gabrieli in 1609. Giovanni Gabrieli was a very speculative composer, and Schütz adopted the lines which he opened up. The results are found in some of the most extraordinary works in the whole range of musical art. A great part of his choral works, such as the Symphoniæ Sacræ and the Psalms, seems to be almost impracticable, so they have necessarily become a neglected by-way. But they are profoundly interesting through the depth of thought and feeling, the ardent aspiration, and the transparent sincerity which shine in every page. Of different character are the four Passions and "The Story of the Resurrection." These contain hardly any choral work of any scale, but they are devised so as to suggest and emphasize the details of the Gospel stories. The narrative is given in a kind of chant by one singer, and the various characters are distributed to other singers, and the utterances of groups, such as High Priests or Apostles, are given in choruses, which are always short and characteristic. The Passions have no instrumental accompaniment, but the "Resurrection" had an accompaniment of four gambas and bass with figures. The music is extremely simple, but perfectly consistent in style. Moreover, even within slender limits the composer managed to suggest the characteristics of the actors in the story; and such scenes as the coming of the women to the Sepulchre and the conversation with the Angels have an exquisite tenderness and pathos, which is scarcely credible within such narrow limits. The whole scheme and style of these works are almost unique, and it cannot be said that, technically, they prefigure much of the later development of German art. But spiritually they show the same qualities that are found in the tenderest and deepest moments of J. S. Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms; and though these works belong to an almost forgotten by-way they illustrate the attitude which set the Germans so high above all other nations in music; for the motive to their musical utterance is not mere superficial distraction, but the spur of the deepest feeling.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

MR F. H. COWEN'S RE-APPEARANCE.

The first concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on March 8, 1813. Therefore, the initial concert of the present season, given at Queen's Hall on the 8th ult., was the Philharmonic's eighty-seventh birthday. The occasion furnished strong evidence of the wisdom of the Directors in re-appointing Mr. Frederic H. Cowen to the office of conductor. Eight years have passed since Mr. Cowen laid down the Philharmonic baton. In the interval he has been tried in such musically critical regions as Lancashire and Yorkshire, and he has not been found wanting. What more natural, therefore, than that his reception at Queen's Hall should be one of warm-hearted welcome from so representative a musical audience in London as the "Philharmonic"?

Perhaps no work could furnish a more severe test of a conductor's generalship than Tschaïkowsky's Pathetic Symphony, the chief feature of the concert. We are bound to state that Mr. Cowen came off with flying colours. He conducted this mysterious and fascinating work from memory and with a thorough grasp of its technical difficulties and poetic beauties. Considering that he had only two rehearsals, for a long—too long—programme, Mr. Cowen achieved wonderful results. It was quite delightful, for instance, to listen to the subdued accompaniments to Beethoven's concerto, which had the advantage of being directed by one who can play the solo portion of the work, and who is thus in technical touch, so to speak, with the soloist. The new-old conductor must be congratulated upon a most successful start off.

The only novelty in the programme was an "Ouverture Dramatique" in D minor (Op. 2), by Mr. Otto Manns, a nephew of the veteran conductor at the Crystal Palace. Like so many similar attempts by our young composers, the work revealed greater evidence of cleverness than of originality. Oh, ye young men, technique giveth not life! Madame Teresa Carreño, by her splendid playing of the solo part of Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, gave a masterly interpretation of a masterpiece. The performance was worthy of the music. What more can be said? The vocal portion of the concert, which commenced with "God save the Queen," consisted of the "Duet and Closing Scene, Act iii., 'Die Walküre,'" sung by Miss Esther Palliser and Mr. Andrew Black.

In regard to the second concert, on the 21st ult., we must give place of honour, by unassailable right, to Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. The old familiar strains fell upon the ear with perennial freshness, and called forth a sincere "Thank God for Beethoven." This creation of the great tone-poet gave Mr. Cowen every opportunity for his artistic intuition and conductorship gifts. We are bound to say that his reading of the great work was in every respect satisfactory, and, moreover, that he secured a performance that may be summarized in the word "fine." Mr. Cowen more than sustained the good opinion he had created at the first concert; and when, speaking of the Philharmonic, he feels his feet—if that expression may be applied to a movement of the hands—he will probably modify certain hypergestures that may seem to him necessary until he gets his band to be as alert and whole-hearted as himself.

Mr. Granville Bantock supplied the novelty of the evening in "Jaga-Naut," Scene xiv. of his Orchestral Drama—a new term in our musical vocabulary—"Kehama," founded on Southey's "Curse of Kehama." Until the "Orchestral drama" is performed in its entirety, it may suffice to state that the "Jaga-Naut," even if it did not make a very marked impression, was a very brilliantly scored composition, in which the trombones supplied plenty of colour. But, with the possible exception of a "Dance of Yoguees," in Tschäikowskyian 5-4 rhythm, which afforded welcome relief, it is to be feared that Mr. Bantock's music is of too inflated a type to be placed in a high rank of art creations. The remaining numbers of a commendably short programme were Wagner's "Eine Faust Ouvertüre," Weber's "Durch die Wälder" (from "Der Freyschütz"), sung by M. Louis Arens, and Rubinstein's D minor Pianoforte Concerto, the solo part of which was performed brilliantly, but not altogether convincingly, by Mr. Frederick Lamond.

"THE REDEMPTION" AT THE ALBERT HALL.

Gounod's trilogy was again selected for the Ash Wednesday (February 28) performance of the Royal Choral Society, and once more a large assemblage recognised the claims of the work to public approval. Its rendering, under the baton of Sir Frederick Bridge, was in all respects highly satisfactory. The choir delivered the utterances of the Jews with dramatic force, and spirit was united to devotional feeling in the "Ascension" chorus, which never made a deeper effect upon the hearers. The principal soprano part was sung with adequate expression by Madame Ella Russell, and with undiminished impressiveness Mr. Santley repeated his fine reading of the music of the Saviour. The other soloists were Miss Maggie Purvis, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Daniel Price.

THE BACH CHOIR.

The opportunities of hearing a carefully prepared performance of Bach's great Mass in B minor are too few to preclude regret for artistic, as well as other reasons, that, through illness, neither Professor Stanford, as conductor, nor Mr. Andrew Black, as bass soloist, could appear at Queen's Hall on the 20th ult. Sir Hubert Parry kindly took Professor Stanford's place, and displayed his accustomed zeal and watchfulness. The superb five-part chorus, "Cum Sancto Spiritu," was rendered with specially telling effect. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Plunket Greene, the latter (as substitute for Mr. Black) singing at very short notice. The execution of the important obbligati passages was among the commendable features of the only concert announced by the Bach Choir this season.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The most memorable feature of Mr. Newman's Symphony concert, on February 24, at the Queen's Hall, was the superb violin playing of M. Ysaye in Beethoven's great Violin Concerto. More complete expression of the emotional and intellectual depth of the unsurpassable work could not be imagined. The Belgian violinist was also heard in two new works, a "Fantasie Pastorale" (Op. 26), by M. B. Hollander, and a "Ballade," by Mr. Percy Pitt, both designed for violin solo and orchestra. M. Hollander has manifestly striven to write music that will charm by the gentle melodiousness of its themes and please by the picturesqueness of their setting, and he has succeeded. Mr. Pitt's music seeks to arouse sentiments that "Live within the sense they quicken." The themes are expressive and broad in contour, and their passion is intensified by rich and polyphonic scoring. It is satisfactory to know that the full score of so strong a piece of writing will be published by Messrs. Novello, and that M. Ysaye is so delighted with the work that he will play it on the Continent. Mr. Wood secured a beautiful interpretation of Mozart's Symphony in G minor (No. 40, B. and H.), and Mr. Charles Knowles is to be commended for bringing forward this master's fine aria "Mentre ti lascio." Wagner's "Faust" and Berlioz's "Carnaval Romain" Overtures completed the programme.

The final concert of this series took place on the 10th ult., when several masterpieces were magnificently interpreted. Mr. Wood is to be praised for adding to his repertory on this occasion Weber's Overture "Ruler of the Spirits" and that to Mozart's first serious opera, "Idomeneo." Very fine performances were given of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, the "Tannhäuser" Overture, and "Siegfried Idyll," the crispness and delicacy of the playing of the band being specially notable. The pianist was Herr Zwintscher, who created considerable enthusiasm by his powerful and unaffected reading of the solo part of Beethoven's Fifth Concerto.

The success of these concerts has been so marked that Mr. Newman was induced to give an extra one on the 24th ult. It was gratifying to see three English composers represented on this occasion, the selection including the fine Triumphal March from Mr. Edward Elgar's "Caractacus," Sir Alexander Mackenzie's "Britannia" Overture, and Mr. Percy Pitt's "Coronation" March. These native productions, together with Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Tschaïkowsky's "1812" Overture, and Grieg's first "Peer Gynt" suite, were designated a "popular programme." 'Tis well!

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

Additional interest has been imparted to the second portion of the forty-fourth series of the Saturday afternoon concerts by the inclusion of several novelties. At the opening concert, on February 24, the first performance in England was given of Berlioz's "Ruy Blas" Overture. Concerning this work, the composer, in a letter to Humbert Ferrand, dated Paris, September 20, 1838, says: "After I heard it I did not think well of it, so I burnt it." What it was that Berlioz burnt is not quite clear, since the original full score, under the title of "Intrata di Rob Roy MacGregor" now reposes in the library of the Paris Conservatoire of Music. That he "did not think well of it" does credit to his critical faculty. But the most probable reason why he never published it is because he incorporated a considerable portion into his symphony "Harold in Italy," and took its second subject to form the theme which represents "Harold." Berlioz has sought to give local colour to his "Rob Roy" Overture by employing the melody of "Scots wha hae," and he treats the fine old tune with much ingenuity. The principal theme is also admirably suggestive of the high-spirited and turbulent "Rob Roy." But in spite of the merit of its thematic material the design is so vague and the music so loosely knit that the overture, although interesting as an effort of the brilliant French composer, is not a satisfactory work. Madame Carreño gave a magnificent rendering of the solo part of Rubinstein's melodious and grandiose Fourth Concerto in D minor (Op. 70) and Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia." Miss Clara Butt sang to perfection Mr. Edward Elgar's fine series of songs, entitled "Sea Pictures," and the concert concluded with a vivacious interpretation of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

The concert on the 3rd ult. began with the production of a new symphonic poem, dated September 27 last, entitled "The Raven," by Mr. Josef C. Holbrooke, who, it may be remembered, is one of the several promising young composers who have been taught their craft at the Royal Academy of Music. Although he is not yet twenty-two (he was born at Croydon, July 6, 1878), Mr. Holbrooke's compositions already include a symphony, two symphonic poems, a concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, an orchestral suite, two suites for strings, two quintets, a quartet, three pianoforte trios, and a sextet for strings. In spite of this experience his "Raven" is deficient in regard to balance of tone in orchestration. There are invariably two ways of creating a desired effect. The one is allied to beauty, the other to ugliness. Of late a preference has, in most instances, been shown for the latter, because the writers had not sufficient strength to seek the former without becoming sentimental and undramatic; but ugliness is bad art. Mr. Holbrooke shows that he can invent expressive melodies, can develop them in a musicianly and interesting manner; but his endeavours to support in his orchestration the supernatural in Edgar Poe's lugubrious poem result, for the most part, in crudities and harsh sounds that seem to blaze forth their inability to combine with anything approaching an harmonious whole. Still, the work in its entirety is one of decided promise, for it attests to the possession of lively imagination, invention, considerable knowledge, and resource. M. César Thomson played the solo part of Brahms's Violin Concerto, and subsequently gave first performances in England of an expressive Adagio by Goldmark and an effective Passacaglia of his own. A fine interpretation by Mr. Kennerley Rumford of Brahms's "Four Serious Songs" and a finished performance of Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony completed the afternoon's music.

A new Symphony in C minor, entitled "Walt Whitman," composed by Mr. William Henry Bell, was produced for the first time on the 10th ult. Unfortunately the second movement was omitted; but, although thus presented in a mutilated form, the work made a most favourable impression by reason of its manly sentiment and masterly development. The four movements are respectively: (1) Allegro con molto spirito; (2) Humoreske, Variations on an original theme, and Waltz Finale; (3) Elegy; (4) Con molto brio, Poco meno mosso. Mr. C. A. Barry, in his admirable analytical notice of the symphony, says: "The title given to this Symphony, the score of which is dated September 11, 1899, owes its origin to the fact that it was written while the composer was strongly under the influence of the writings of the great American poet, Walt Whitman, especially that exercised by his 'Preface to the Leaves of Grass,' wherein he has so nobly put forth his ideals as to the mission of the artist of to-day. While the present work is not in the slightest degree 'programme music,' and owes nothing to or gains nothing from the fact of its bearing a title—except so far as it satisfies the wishes of a modern audience—yet it is a deliberate attempt and striving after some of the ideals which Whitman sets up, and more especially that quality of strength, or—as he says—'health, rudeness of body, withdrawnness, gaiety, sun-tan, air-sweetness, which is sacrificed in so much present-day music for a neurotic morbidness and gloomy passion.'" Mr. Bell is to be heartily congratulated upon his healthiness of mind, and we hope to hear his symphony at an early date in its entirety in central London. Another notable event at this concert was the re-appearance, after some three years of study under M. Leschetitzky, of Mr. Waddington Cooke, who played the solo part in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor with conspicuous brilliancy and clearness. Mr. A. V. Belinski was heard in Guiraud's weak Caprice for violin and orchestra, and Miss Lillian Blauvelt sang.

A few words only are needed concerning the performance on the 17th ult., when Tschaïkowsky's Sixth Symphony was given "by general request of the subscribers." The novelty was a Concert-Overture in E flat (Op. 35), by Herr Julius Klengel, which proved a scholarly work in orthodox form, possessing expressive themes, concisely developed, and well orchestrated. The composer had previously created a favourable impression by his brilliant violoncello playing in R. Volkmann's Concerto in A minor (Op. 33). Mr. Santley sang, and the afternoon concluded with Wagner's "Huldigungs-Marsch," performed at these concerts on this occasion for the first time.

ROYAL ARTILLERY BAND CONCERT.

At Queen's Hall, on the 16th ult., Cavaliere L. Zavertal offered an attractive programme, throughout which he had his band perfectly under control. The symphony was Beethoven's No. 8, and the delicacy, fancy, and elegance of each section were so admirably brought out that a more sympathetic rendering could not have been wished for. The first of Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suites also obtained treatment that was effective, whilst wholly free from sensational elements. From this high standard the performance of the dainty "Danse des Sylphes" from Berlioz's "Faust," Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody "Pester Carneval," and Wagner's "Kaisermarsch" did not fall.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

The only performance calling for special mention at Mr. Arthur Chappell's music-makings at St. James's Hall was the addition to the repertory, on the 5th ult., of Tschaïkowsky's "Variations sur un theme rococo for violoncello" (Op. 33). This work was played with its orchestral accompaniment for the first time in England by the Philharmonic Society, at the Queen's Hall, on June 17, 1897, when Mr. Leo Stern was the soloist. He, however, omitted the fourth and fifth variations, and so Mr. Hugo Becker may claim to be the first to give the work in its entirety in this country, although, of course, the orchestral portion was represented by a pianoforte. He played with great brilliancy, and the work so pleased its listeners that the most expressive variation was repeated. The quartet party was led, on this occasion, by M. Halir, and the solo pianist was Miss Adela Verne.

The 1,500th concert took place on the 19th ult., when the quartets performed were Schumann's in F (Op. 41, No. 2) and Brahms's in G minor (Op. 25), and the executants were Messrs. Schonberger, Ysaye, Haydn Inwards, Alfred Gibson, and Paul Ludwig; with Miss Blanche Griffin as vocalist and Mr. Henry Bird as accompanist.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The pupils of the Royal College of Music are to be congratulated on the success of their orchestral concert, on the 15th ult., at St. James's Hall, especially as the sudden illness of Dr. Villiers Stanford deprived them of his suggestive guidance. But happily for them Sir Hubert Parry was available to give them the benefit of his inspiring direction. The orchestral works were Schumann's fine "Manfred" Overture and Brahms's first Serenade in D (Op. 11). The latter is rarely heard, but it is a genial example of Brahms's style and contains some interesting experiments in tone colour which the composer was making at this period of his career. William Scott played the solo part of Beethoven's Fourth Pianoforte Concerto with neatness and notable expressive refinement. Muriel Foster and Agnes Nicholls sang excellently; the former four of Mr. Edward Elgar's "Sea Pictures," and the latter the rarely heard scena "Die Kraft versagt," from Hermann Goetz's opera "The Taming of the Shrew."

LONDON CONCERTS, &c.

A chamber concert of exceptional interest, owing to the works performed being little known, was given on the 12th ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall, by Mr. George A. Clinton. The programme comprised a Quintet in F (Op. 81) for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, by George Onslow, a good example of the music of the first half of the present century; a String Quartet in F, written by Mozart just after the production of his first serious opera "Idomeneo," and containing a characteristic Rondo; a Fantasia and Variations in B flat (Op. 81) for clarinet and strings, by Spohr, the clarinet part being remarkably effective; and Heinrich Hofmann's pretty Octet in F (Op. 80) for wind and strings. These works were admirably rendered, the wind instrument players being Messrs. Griffith, Malsch, Clinton, Borsdorf, and James, and the strings being in the hands of Miss Grimson and Messrs. Sutcliffe, Hobday, and Parker. Miss Florence Oliver sang.

The Westminster Orchestral Society, continuing its commendable practice of encouraging British composers, produced, at its concert on the 21st ult., at the Westminster Town Hall, a new orchestral suite, entitled "Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales," by Mr. Harry Farjeon, the son of the novelist and a grandson of Jefferson, the famous impersonator of "Rip Van Winkle." Several of this young composer's works have elicited favourable comment at the pupils' concerts of the Royal Academy of Music, and the suite will certainly add to his reputation. The stories which have inspired the music are "The Gallant Tin Soldier," "The Nightingale," "The Little Nursemaid," and "Little Klaus and big Klaus," which are severally treated in as many movements. The first of these is the best, and is a dainty and charming little piece; but in all of them there is shown a lively and graceful fancy allied with considerable facility in apposite expression and knowledge of orchestral effects. The remainder of the evening was occupied with Schubert's Fourth Symphony, Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture, Carl Davidoff's second Violoncello Concerto in A minor (the solo part of which was neatly played by Miss Muriel Handley), and some admirable singing contributed by Mr. Frederick Ranalow. Mr. Stewart Macpherson conducted with his usual skill.

Small wonder that Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Leonard Borwick's recitals attract such large audiences, for their selections invariably contain variety and attractiveness in a superlative degree. Mr. Greene began by singing, on the 2nd ult., at St. James's Hall, a singularly dignified example of sixteenth century music, entitled "Von edler Art" (Of noble air), arranged by Sir Hubert Parry, and he finished with Miss Maude Valérie White's setting of Tennyson's charming lyric "The Throstle." Between these extremes many most interesting songs were given, notably a vigorous eighteenth century French song, arranged by Professor Stanford, entitled "Entendez-vous le carillon du verre?" Schumann's "Aufträge," in which the perfect sympathy between singer and accompanist was felicitously shown, and a fascinating "Boat Song" by Professor Stanford. Mr. Borwick's chief solo was Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 111).

Dr. Max Bruch's cantata "Frithjof-Saga," for solos, male chorus, and orchestra, is an estimable work, but since its production at the Crystal Palace, on June 8, 1878, under the direction of its composer, it has been too much neglected. Therefore its revival, on February 27, at the Queen's Hall, at the eighth annual concert in aid of the German Benevolent Society, is worthy of record. The cantata, written between 1862 and 1864, may be said to have laid the foundation of Dr. Max Bruch's reputation as a composer, and is thoroughly German in its solidity and earnestness. The name part was excellently embodied by Mr. Hugo Heinz, and Mrs. Helen Trust, who, at very short notice, took the place of Madame Blanche Marchesi, sang the part of the heroine. The choral portions were delivered with point and precision by the Sängerbund and Liederkranz Societies, under the conductorship of Herr Laistner.

The honour of giving the first performance in London of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's cantata "The Death of Minnehaha" belongs to Mr. Allen Gill and his choral and orchestral societies at the People's Palace, Mile End Road, where, on the 3rd ult., the work was performed, together with its companion, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast." As the composer's settings of Longfellow's poem "Hiawatha" are noticed in another column, it is unnecessary to say more here than that the beauty, pathos, and truth of the music manifestly made a deep impression on the audience, and that the baritone and soprano solos were effectively sung by Mr. Haigh Jackson and Miss Gertrude Drinkwater. It should be added that the tenor solo in the "Wedding-Feast" was so well sung by Mr. Whitworth Mitton and so delighted its listeners that he was constrained to repeat it.

The Maze Pond Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," in Maze Pond Chapel, Old Kent Road, on the 8th ult. The choir maintained its reputation for conscientious work, and sang Mendelssohn's music throughout with good effect. The solos were well sung by Miss Stanley Lucas, Miss Lizzie Coombs, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. Edgar Archer; the second quartet consisted of Miss M. Taylor, Miss F. Lake, and Messrs. A. Sears and E. T. McLeod. In the accompaniments the organ and pianoforte (Mr. E. Partridge and Miss M. Tyrer) were augmented by a small but efficient band, with Mr. H. Pywell as leader. Mr. W. Dexter Miller again proved himself a conscientious and successful conductor. We are pleased to note that the Society insists upon a sight-singing test, in addition to vocal fitness, before admission to its membership.

The Trinity College (London) students creditably acquitted themselves at an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall, on the 15th ult. Dr. E. H. Turpin did well to include in the programme such good examples of the school they represent as two movements from Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor and Thomas Wingham's concert-overture "Eros." Each was performed in a painstaking manner. Miss Queenie Dando played with facility the Allegro from Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto in E minor, and Miss Winifred Palfreman made the most of her opportunities in the Andante and Finale of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor.

On February 22 an excellent performance of Gounod's "Redemption" was given by the Psalmody and Choral Class of Union Chapel, Islington, under the conductorship of Mr. G. H. Betjemann. The solos were admirably rendered by Miss Florence Bethell, Miss Beatrice Burt, Madame Rose Dafforne, Mr. Harper Kearton, Mr. Arthur Barlow, and Mr. Robert Grice. The work was accompanied on the organ by Mr. Fountain Meen, valuable help being given by Messrs. Frank James and D. Caldwell (trumpets), A. Putnam (harp), and E. J. Scruton (tympani).

The Finsbury Choral Association performed Mendelssohn's 115th Psalm and Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," on February 22. The soloists were Miss Elsie Mackenzie, Miss Alice Simons, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. The singing of the chorus throughout these two works was very creditable, and proved that a distinct advance has been made in this direction by the Society. Mr. F. Cunningham Woods conducted with his accustomed care and alertness.

Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips concluded their fifth series of chamber concerts on the 6th ult., at the Steinway Hall, when Miss Barns played a Violin Sonata in D, by Nardini, an interesting example of this old master, and Mr. Phillips sang a set of six hitherto little known songs by Purcell, of which those named "Ah! how pleasant 'tis to love," "More love or more disdain I crave," and "Sylvia, now your scorn give over," proved most charming.

Mdlle. Marguerite Haering gave a concert, on the 12th ult., of artistic character, at the Steinway Hall. Her light and well trained soprano voice was heard to advantage in the Ballatella from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" and in songs by Pergolesi, Lotti, and Berlioz, and she was ably assisted by Mr. Hugo Heinz, Mr. Desider Nemes, and Mr. Oscar Meyer, the two last-named contributing violin and pianoforte solos.

The Welsh Nonconformist Festival, held on St. David's Eve (February 28) in the City Temple, was quite as successful as either of its predecessors. The service was heartily joined in by a congregation thoroughly conversant with such hymn tunes as "Engedi," "St. Peter Malvern," "Whitford," and "Dolgellan." The anthem was "Byd o erlidiau." Mr. E. Maengwyn Davies conducted and Mr. Merlin Morgan rendered invaluable aid at the organ.

The Kyrle Choir gave a performance of "Elijah" in St. Mary's, Lambeth, on the 14th ult., under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker. The soloists were Madame Edwardes, Miss Constance Barber, Mr. Douglas Willson, and Mr. Robert Grier, the part of the Youth being sung by Master Arnold Grier. Mr. E. G. Croager accompanied.

The two most important pianoforte recitals of the past month were given by Herr Rosenthal and Madame Carreño on the 9th and 15th ult., at St. James's Hall. The former was heard in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 81) and Schumann's "Carneval" (Op. 9), which were interpreted with magnificent technical command, but with an analytical frigidity that became aggravating in portions calling for emotional expression. Madame Carreño, on the other hand, has of late infused greater warmth into her playing, which in consequence appeals more forcibly. Her programme consisted entirely of Beethoven's music, the two sonatas in E flat and C sharp minor (Op. 27), the "Waldstein" and the "Appassionata" Sonatas, the Andante in F, originally intended for the slow movement in the "Waldstein" Sonata, and the delightful Rondo in G (Op. 51, No. 2). Her interpretation possessed fascinating individuality, full depth of expression, and artistic earnestness.

The pianoforte recital given by Mr. Harold Samuel, on the 14th ult., at the Steinway Hall, merits record if only to encourage a promising young pianist of manifest artistic temperament, and because he had the courage to play Bach's rarely heard "Air and Thirty Variations." Mr. Dannreuther has described these Variations of Bach's as "marvels of contrapuntal and artistic skill with which there is nothing to compare except the Thirty-three Variations by Beethoven."

SUBURBAN CONCERTS.

Bexley.—On February 26, at the Freemantle Hall, the Bexley Festival Choir gave its second concert, under the conductorship of Mr. Harold Moore. The works chosen were Parry's "St. Cecilia's Day" and Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus." The chorus and orchestra consisted of one hundred performers, the band (the Bexley Heath Orchestral Society) being composed entirely of amateurs, under the leadership of Mr. Harry Swann. The soloists were Miss Margaret Nutter, Miss Mabel Calkin, Mr. Ernest Harris, and Mr. Frank Hulburd.

Catford.—The Choral Society gave an excellent concert at St. Dunstan's College, on the 13th ult., when Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" were performed. The chorus of this excellent Society sang as usual with much spirit and intelligence, and were admirably supported by Mr. C. H. Weatherley's orchestra, the whole performance being conducted with tact and ability by Mr. Arthur Fagge. The solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Mrs. Toft, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. A. H. Gee.

Surbiton.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" in the Assembly Rooms, on the 12th ult., under the able direction of Mr. R. Frederic Tyler. The choruses were sung with precision and due attention to light and shade. The Evening Hymn and Choral Epilogue especially were admirably rendered, while the excellent professional orchestra rendered full justice to the instrumental accompaniment. The solo vocalists were Miss Marion Perrott, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. S. Masters, and Mr. Arthur Walenn. ——On the 1st ult., at St. Mark's Church, a selection from Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was rendered by the augmented choir of the church, numbering upwards of eighty voices. The soloists were Mrs. Tyler, Madame Tester-Jones, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. J. P. Trew, who gave excellent interpretations of their respective numbers. The choruses were sung with great precision, although without a conductor, and the performance reflected great credit upon Mr. R. Frederic Tyler (organist and choirmaster of St. Mark's Church), who presided at the organ.——At the last of Mr. Joseph Ivimey's chamber concerts of the season, on the 10th ult., the programme included Mozart's Clarinet Quintet in A and Rheinberger's Quartet in E flat, the performers in the first piece being Messrs. W. H. Hall, J. Ivimey, E. Shelton, A. Hobday, and Arthur Blagrove, and, in the last, Messrs. J. W. and J. Ivimey, Hobday, and Blagrove. Mr. J. W. Ivimey played, for the first time, two "Songs without words" of his own composition, and Mr. J. Ivimey gave Wilhelmj's arrangement of Walther's "Preislied" on the violin. Madame Alice Gomez was the vocalist.

Woolwich.—The Choral Union performed Stanford's "The Revenge" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend," at the Polytechnic Hall, William Street, on February 22. The chorus showed careful training on the part of the conductor, Mr. Jefferson Nell, and in every way the singing was worthy of the highest praise. The solo vocalists were Miss Sara Gomersall, Madame Marie Hooton, Mr. E. Branscombe, Mr. Daniel Price, and Mr. W. P. Rivers, who, in addition to playing the bells, sang the part of the Forester. Mr. Sidney Horton led a most efficient orchestra, and Madame Tester-Jones and Dr. H. W. Jones presided respectively at the pianoforte and organ.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, February 12.

While the American metropolis is seeking diversion at the opera, and incidentally cultivating music in all its forms from the highest to the lowest with great assiduity, Boston, Chicago, and Pittsburgh are engrossed chiefly in their orchestral concerts, Cincinnati moderately in its orchestra, but more in preparation for the fourteenth biennial festival to be held next May. Louisville and half-a-dozen other cities are also looking forward to festivals, in the giving of which they are helped by an ingenious Yankee manager who stands ready every Spring to deliver a ready-made orchestra, and make plain the rough places which ordinarily obstruct the engagement of the celebrated singers who are thought to be essential to success. The activity in music is really very great, and it will soon be an act of justice to the States to attempt to convey an idea of the extent and character of their recent musical culture.

The field of operations covered by the Boston orchestra comprehends half-a-dozen cities and towns, and from Philadelphia, St. Louis, Baltimore, and several other cities reports come of orchestral concerts of a character impossible outside Boston and New York a score of years ago. Discussion of the merits of the different organisations being precluded by the necessary brevity of this letter, I can best show the zeal with which the two leading permanent orchestras labour by giving lists of the novelties (absolute and comparative) which Mr. Gericke has brought forward this season in Boston and Mr. Thomas in Chicago:—

Boston.—Draeseke's "Jubilee" Overture, Siegfried Wagner's "Bärenhäuter" Overture, Wilhelm Berger's Symphony in B flat, Dvorák's "Heldenlied," Tschaïkowsky's Third Symphony (in D), Rubin Goldmark's Overture "Hiawatha" (Mr. Goldmark is a nephew of the Austrian composer), Professor Parker's "Northern Ballad" (Op. 46), César Franck's Symphony in D minor, Humperdinck's "Moorish" Rhapsody, Lalo's Concerto for violoncello, Glazounow's Symphony in C minor, Arensky's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, Grieg's Symphonic Dances (Op. 64), George W. Chadwick's elegiac overture "Adonais," and a Symphony by Mozart in G minor (No. 25 in Breitkopf and Härtel's list, No. 183 in Köchel's catalogue).

Chicago.—Siegfried Wagner's "Bärenhäuter" Overture, Dvorák's "Wild Dove," Humperdinck's "Moorish" Rhapsody, Christian Sinding's "Episodes Chevaleresques" and "Rondo Infinito," Dukas's "L'Apprenti sorcier," MacDowell's "Lancelot and Elaine," César Franck's Symphony in D minor, and Professor Parker's "Northern Ballad."

Of interesting choral performances note must be made of the first production in America of Dr. Dvorák's "Te Deum," in Worcester, at the second of Mr. J. Vernon Butler's free oratorio concerts. Unhappily the orchestral part was dispensed with. A really pompous performance of Walter Damrosch's Manilla "Te Deum" was given in Carnegie Hall, on February 6, by the Oratorio Society, a large orchestra, and a triple quartet.

March 10.

The most significant occurrence at the Opera since my last letter has been the serial performance, without curtailment, of the dramas constituting Wagner's "Ring des Nibelungen." Two of these cycles, so-called, were planned at the beginning of the season for a separate subscription, but they involved a very considerable money loss. So far as the music goes, the representations were admirable, but the New York public can look back to better stage pictures and much better stage management. Meanwhile, also, Mr. Grau's company has given performances of "La Traviata," "Die Meistersinger," "Les Huguenots," "Tannhäuser," "L'Africaine," "Aïda," "Tristan und Isolde," "Lohengrin," "Rigoletto," "Roméo et Juliette," "Lucia," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (in German). Most of them were repetitions, and repetitions of repetitions, and I mention them in the order in which they were brought forward to show what an operatic olla podrida we are enjoying. In "Tristan und Isolde" M. Van Dyck made his first essay with the rôle of the hero, and achieved a success quite unexpected by critics and public in view of his choppy style and frequent untunefulness.

The concert record of the month in the American metropolis could not even be outlined without consuming more space than I would feel justified in asking. Every Sunday night has been filled with music by Mr. Grau's orchestra and singers. The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three concerts, and at two of them presented M. Ludwig Breitner, of Paris, in Schütt's Second Pianoforte Concerto; the Kneisel Quartet, of Boston, whom London lovers of chamber music know, gave several concerts, and within a week played Beethoven's Quartet in C sharp minor (Op. 131) twice; the Bach Singers, a new organisation, gave a concert of unfamiliar music by Bach; Mr. Grossmith entertained four audiences, as he has entertained many since in other American cities, with his amusing musical skits and sketches; and there were small concerts innumerable. In the programme of the Bach Society were excerpts from the cantatas "Jesu, nun sei gepreiset," "Bleib' bei uns," "Von der Vergnügsamkeit," and "Tönet, ihr Pauken!" The Society was organised in a spirit of beautiful seriousness by Theodor Björksten, who conducted the concert, but the results were scarcely edifying.

Glancing over the orchestral doings of the month, I note performances of Vincent d'Indy's "Medea" suite in Boston and Chicago, and of César Franck's "Éolides" as a novelty in Boston (it was given in Chicago and New York last season). In Cincinnati, Mr. Frank Van der Stucken has brought forward Alexander Ritter's "Charfreitag und Frohnleichnam" and P. A. Tirindelli's Violin Concerto in G minor. In its own city, and also in New York, the Pittsburgh Orchestra has produced a new "Suite Romantique," by Victor Herbert, the conductor of the orchestra, a voluminous composer of operettas and a grandson of the author of "Handy Andy."

This suggests a train of thought connected with personalities and the propriety of noting the regrettable fact that Mr. Theodore Thomas, whose labours on behalf of high class music in the United States have been beyond all measure valuable and have covered a full generation, is contemplating a retirement from active work, and has indicated a purpose to present his library of scores, books, and programmes to the Newberry Free Library in Chicago. Morris Steinert, a retired merchant of large means, who was a professional musician in his early life, has presented a large collection of keyed instruments, illustrating the origin and development of the pianoforte, to Yale University. In the special course of lectures on musical subjects at Yale, Mr. Krehbiel has discoursed on "Folk-music in America," Mr. William F. Apthorp on "Musical Criticism," Mr. Edgar S. Kelley on "Oriental Music," and Mr. W. J. Henderson on "Classicism and Romanticism." Dr. George William Warren, for thirty years organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas's Church, New York, will retire on a life pension on May 1. He will be succeeded by Mr. Will Macfarlane, who will organise a vested boy choir to take the place of the mixed choir over which Dr. Warren has so long presided.

In the choral field I note briefly performances of "St. Paul," by the Mount Vernon (N.Y.) Musical Society (Mr. Hallam, conductor), on February 16; "The Damnation of Faust," by the Mozart Club, of Pittsburgh (Mr. McCollum, conductor), on February 20; Bruch's "Odysseus" and Gounod's "O Day of Penitence," by the Mendelssohn Club (Mr. W. Gilchrist, conductor), on March 7; "Elijah," by the Gounod Club, of New Haven (Emilio Agramonti, conductor), in February.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Philharmonic Society gave its fourth and closing concert of the season on the 9th ult., when Wagner's "Tannhäuser" was performed, for the first time in Ireland, as a concert work. The "cuts" adopted by the conductor (Dr. Frank Koeller) were not just those usual in operatic performances, but were carefully made so as to give as much work as possible to the chorus. The conductor and Society deserve much praise for the success of the performance of so difficult a work. The artists engaged were Miss Lucille Hill (Elizabeth), Mdlle. Brani (Venus), Mr. E. C. Hedmondt (Tannhäuser), Mr. Hugo Heinz (Wolfram), and Mr. Whitney Tew (Landgrave).

On the 12th ult. Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra again visited us, to the great delight of all earnest musicians. The "program" (as it was called) consisted in the first part of three Wagner pieces: the Overtures to "The Flying Dutchman" and "Lohengrin," and the "Charfreitagszauber," from the third Act of "Parsifal"; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and a violoncello solo by Tschaïkowsky, played by Mr. Carl Fuchs. Of this last it might be said that, although very difficult and very well played, it is more curious than beautiful. The second part was devoted to Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, which, played as it was, proved once more how the greatest of composers towers above all others—as he probably will to the end of time.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Reverting to the Festival Choral Society's concert of February 22, I have to record a magnificent rendering of the choral portions of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and "The Death of Minnehaha." The last was quite new here, and the graphic treatment of the sad story made a great impression. Mr. Herbert Grover gave the tenor solo in the first work, "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" very well; and Madame Ella Russell sang the soprano solos in "The Death of Minnehaha" with a dramatic power and beauty of tone that roused the audience to enthusiasm. A member of the Society, Mr. Frank Cranmer, replaced Mr. Trevose Daniel at the last moment, and he did his best under the circumstances. The picturesque score was well interpreted under the able direction of Dr. Heap.

Mr. Halford's eighth Orchestral concert took place in the Town Hall, on February 27. The programme consisted of Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3), Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, Stanford's Variations upon an English theme for pianoforte and orchestra and "Irish" Symphony. This last received the finest rendering heard in this city. Mr. Ernest Schiever gave the solo part in the violin concerto in splendid style, and was warmly applauded and recalled. The young local pianist, Mr. G. H. Manton, achieved quite a triumph in the concert variations, his execution being brilliant. Mr. Halford at this concert repeated J. D. Davis's Ballade, and the performance strengthened the good opinion formed at the production of the work. The ninth concert was held on the 13th ult. For this occasion the Russian composer, Rachmaninoff, had promised a new pianoforte concerto, in which he was to play the solo part. As he was unable to leave Russia in time, Herr Georg Liebling was engaged, and Beethoven's E flat ("Emperor") Concerto was substituted. This was given by soloist and orchestra in magnificent style, and Herr Liebling afterwards played, with much bravura, Liszt's well-worn second Rhapsody, and was enthusiastically recalled. The orchestral pieces were the overtures "Figaro" and "Rienzi," and the "Pathetic" Symphony of Tschaïkowsky, all very finely played, the symphony creating a profound impression. Mr. Halford's work as conductor was of the first order.

On the 5th ult. the last of the Harrison concerts was given in the Town Hall. The chief feature was the début here of the Harrison Orchestra, conducted by Mr. G. Jaeger, a former member of the Hallé Orchestra. The band numbered just over fifty performers, and was heard at its best in Sullivan's "Ouvertura di Ballo" and Grieg's first "Peer Gynt" suite. Mr. Arthur de Greef gave a superb rendering of the solo part in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, and was enthusiastically recalled after a brilliant performance of Liszt's great Polonaise in E. The vocalists were Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Ada Crossley, and Mr. Watkin Mills, who gave well-chosen selections with complete success. Liza Lehmann's scena "Endymion" was introduced by Miss Palliser and met with warm acceptance.

On the 6th ult. a concert was given in the Masonic Hall, the chief performers being a ladies' band of harps and Mr. Joseph H. Adams's Madrigal Choir. The choralists sang very well in Dudley Buck's "Hymn to Music," Cooke's "Strike the Lyre," and other pieces.

Miss Fanny Davies paid us her annual visit on the 7th ult., when she gave a recital in the Masonic Hall. The programme was interesting and unhackneyed, and included the Sonata in F minor (Op. 5) by Brahms (new here) and Schumann's "Carnaval," given by desire. Miss Davies never played better and her friends gave her the warmest welcome.

The City Choral Society gave its last concert for the season in the Town Hall, on the 15th ult., Gounod's Messe Solennelle, "St. Cecilia," was the principal work. This, with Miss Lilian Coomber and Messrs. Reginald Brophy and Louis Fröhlich as solo vocalists, was finely given, the chorus singing grandly in the Gloria and Credo. Tschaïkowsky's Solemn March was fairly well played, and selections from "Tannhäuser," "Carmen," "Esmeralda," and "Cavalleria Rusticana" gave soloists, chorus, and orchestra opportunities for display. Mr. F. W. Beard was an able conductor.

The same evening Mr. Max Mossel concluded his season of drawing-room concerts at the Grand Hotel. Madame Blanche Marchesi was the vocalist and charmed the audience. A new quartet of strings—Messrs. Max Mossel, Harold Ketelby, E. W. Priestley, and J. C. Hock—made its first appearance. Quartets by Haydn and Mendelssohn, and selections from Tschaïkowksy and Beethoven made up the programme. The new combination achieved a distinct success.

The annual concert by the band of the City Police was held on the 16th ult., in the Town Hall. This time the function took place in the evening, and was of more than usual importance, being honoured with the presence of the Lord Mayor.

On the 19th ult. the Amateur Orchestral Society gave a concert to the members of the Midland Institute. As a tribute to the memory of the late Mr. C. J. B. Duchemin, Sullivan's "In Memoriam" Overture was played. Mr. John Lawson was the solo violinist and played movements from Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole." Gade's Symphony (No. 3) was the principal orchestral work. Mr. George Halford conducted.

The Festival Choral Society closed its season, on the 22nd ult., with a performance in the Town Hall of Sullivan's oratorio "The Light of the World." The vocal principals were Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Marie Hooton, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. Assistance was given in some numbers by Miss Marguerite Gill and Mr. Harry Smallwood. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies gave the words of the Redeemer very impressively, and the other soloists did well. The singing of the chorus was very fine. Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ, there was an excellent band, and Dr. Heap conducted with masterly skill. There was a very large audience, and the work, not heard here since 1886, was most cordially received.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The eighth of the series of nine Chamber concerts at All Saints' Hall, Clifton, on the 12th ult., attracted a numerous audience. The executants were Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Mr. Gerald Walenn (violin), and Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello). Excellent renderings were afforded of Grieg's Sonata in C minor (Op. 45) for pianoforte and violin, and Tschaïkowsky's Pianoforte Trio in A minor. Mr. Parsons and Mr. Herbert Walenn also contributed solos. The vocalist was Madame Margaret Milward.

The Western Ladies' String Orchestra, having about fifty members, who come from different towns in the West of England, are practising, under Mr. J. W. Duys, of Bath, compositions by Grieg, Tschaïkowsky, and Mr. Elgar, with a view to a public performance. The ladies meet fortnightly at Redland Park Hall.

A performance consisting of selections from "Elijah" was given in the Presbyterian Church, St. James's Parade, on the 19th ult. The soloists were the Misses Katharine and Evelyn Gerrish, Miss Clara Aldersley, Mr. W. G. Brierley (Bristol Cathedral), and Mr. Arthur Trowbridge (Wells Cathedral). Mr. Howard Hayman was at the organ.

At St. Mary's Church, Tyndall's Park, on the 19th ult., a recital was given by Mr. F. W. Rootham (organ) and Mr. Ernest Lane (violin). The vocalist was Miss Chambers.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Castle season this year in Dublin, which concluded on St. Patrick's Day, was remarkable for the number of State concerts which the Lord Lieutenant commanded. One only is usually given, but this year there were four. The second concert, conducted by Mr. Charles Marchant, consisted of a performance of Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter" and part-songs by the amalgamated choirs of St. Patrick's and Christ Church Cathedrals. Miss Agnes Treacy sang the soprano solos and Mr. C. W. Wilson played the accompaniments. At the third, the Dublin Orchestral Society, conducted by Signor Esposito, performed the "Egmont" Overture, parts of the "Casse-Noisette" suite of Tschaïkowsky, the "Arlesienne" suite by Bizet, the Overture to the "Flying Dutchman," and Saint-Saëns's Overture to the "Déluge." In the second part Dr. J. C. Culwick's "Orpheus" Choir sang a number of unaccompanied part-songs and glees. The fourth concert was given altogether by Belfast artists, consisting of Dr. Price's Male-voice Choir, which has been so much praised at Feis competitions, and a trio of solo singers, Mrs. Brogden, Miss McCreary, and Mr. Thomas. Miss Winifred Burnett was the solo violinist.

The Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Richter, gave their two Spring concerts in March. At the first Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony was played magnificently, in addition to Glinka's "La Jota Aragonese," Berlioz's "Carnaval Romain," the "Freischütz" Overture, and Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll." At the second concert Stanford's "Irish" Symphony was played and interested the audience greatly. The violoncello solo of Tschaïkowsky's Variations on a Rococo Theme was played by Herr Fuchs, and was a delightful exhibition of artistic skill. Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Wagner's Overtures to "Lohengrin" and the "Flying Dutchman," and the "Good Friday" music from "Parsifal" were also played. A very large audience assembled on both occasions.

The third evening concert of the Dublin Orchestral Society included Mozart's G minor Symphony and Beethoven's Overture to "Fidelio." Herr Wilhelmj played Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor and Bizet's delightful "Arlesienne" suite terminated the programme. Signor Esposito conducted.

Professor Prout delivered a very interesting University lecture, at the Royal Dublin Society's Theatre, on the 16th ult. The subject of the learned Professor's discourse was "The music of the nineteenth century."

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The members of the Norwich Union Fire Office Orchestral Society gave their fourth annual concert on February 22, in Noverre's Room, conducted by Mr. H. J. Curtis. Led by Mr. Geoffrey Hart, the band gave a very good account of Handel's "Occasional" Overture and the Menuet from "Berenice" (strings only), Tschaïkowsky's "Douce reverie et petite valse," Sullivan's "Graceful Dance," and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March. Mr. E. Lake displayed good tone and clever execution in a Clarinet Fantasia by Reissiger. Miss Teresa Blamy gave most skilfully the "Jewel Song" from Gounod's "Faust" and Lambert's "Bon jour, Pierrot." The local vocalists included Miss Gazely, Mr. Sawford Dye, and Mr. Harry Andrews.

The Beccles Choral Society closed the season, on February 27, with a highly successful performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea," conducted by Mr. Warder Harvey. The principal vocalists were Miss Mildred Rix,

Mr. J. W. Stoker, and Mr. W. Baldwin, while the chorus numbered about thirty voices. A small band, led by Mr. Coote Suggit, was responsible for the accompaniments.

Handel's "Acis and Galatea" was selected by the Bungay Choral Society for performance at its concert on February 21, and, under the conductorship of Mr. Warder Harvey, a successful result was obtained. Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. H. Franckiss, and Mr. E. Webster were the principal vocalists, and Mr. F. W. B. Noverre led a small but efficient band.

The eighth annual concert of the Great Yarmouth Orchestral Society was held on February 27 and largely patronised. Conducted by Mr. Moss and led by Mr. Bernard Hulley, the band, about fifty strong, gave good renderings of the Overture to "William Tell," the Overture to Weber's "Abu Hassan," a suite by Professor Prout, a selection from Bizet's "Carmen," the Hongroise March by Berlioz, and the final movement from Haydn's "Farewell" Symphony. Mr. Dezso Kordy charmed the audience with several violoncello solos, while Madame Grey-Burnand and Mr. W. Llewellyn were the vocalists.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

On the 2nd ult. the University Musical Society gave a very successful annual concert, in the McEwan Hall, under Mr. Moonie's skilful guidance. The chorus now numbers about 200 voices, and the result of the winter's session proved to be good reason for congratulating the chorus and chorusmaster on each other's efforts. The "Revenge" was attacked with due energy and with distinct success. Macfarren's "May Day" also proved successful, although it requires a treatment somewhat outside the range of a University chorus in a city which has been trained to make somewhat severe demands upon choral societies. Miss Alice Esty gave great pleasure in her solo numbers and also in the songs she contributed to the general part of the programme. The accompaniments were supplied by an orchestra under Mr. Dambmann and by Mr. Collinson, the University organist, at the organ.

Mr. Denhof's ambitious scheme of Chamber concerts, in the Music Hall, has proved an unqualified success this session. The last concert, on the 3rd ult., attracted the largest audience. Madame Marchesi was the vocalist and she was enthusiastically received for her interpretation of various songs. Herr Brodsky was the leader of a very capable quartet, and his solos, as well as those of Mr. Walenn, were very successful.

On the 5th ult. Miss Olive Milne Rae made her first appearance in her native city with Metropolitan honours still fresh upon her. She proved herself a thoroughly trained student before the large and friendly audience in the Music Hall, and experience ought to bring her the other conditions essential to real and permanent success.

The University Historical concerts, organised by the Reid Professor, were brought to a successful conclusion by a quartet concert (7th ult.), when the Kosmann Quartet played compositions by Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven.

On the 17th ult. the Edinburgh public had an opportunity of hearing Herr Rosenthal again, after a somewhat long absence. The great artist was in his happiest vein, and in sonatas by Beethoven ("Lebewohl") and Chopin, as well as in other pieces of the most diversified character, he made a very deep impression.

On the 19th ult. the Choral Union gave a performance of "Elijah" at the third and last concert of the season. The Music Hall was crowded by an audience which repeatedly showed its entire satisfaction with the work of soloists and chorus alike. Mr. Collinson has again to be complimented on the high standard his chorus has attained under his care. The solos were in the very capable hands of Madame Alice Esty, Miss Bertha Salter, and Messrs. Herbert Grover and Watkin Mills.

The conductorship of the Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society, a large, important, and very enterprising association, which was rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Carl Hamilton, its first conductor, has been offered to and accepted by Mr. T. H. Collinson.

Mr. T. H. Collinson gave a lecture on "The Development of Church Music," in Queen Street Hall, on the 5th ult. Illustrations were given from the works of Merbecke, Tallis, Palestrina, Purcell, Mozart, Bach, and other composers, admirably sung by the choir of St. Mary's Cathedral.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, aided by a local orchestra, performed Stanford's "The Revenge," on February 20, and Miss Evangeline Florence contributed some vocal solos. Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was sung by Camphill United Presbyterian Church Musical Association on the 23rd ult., and Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" by Pollok Street United Presbyterian Church Association on the 27th.

Madame Blanche Marchesi gave one of her song-recitals on the 7th ult., singing songs by Schubert ("Erl-King"), Schumann, Bach, Purcell, Kjerulf, Délibes, and H. Parker, when she drew a large audience. On the 12th ult. the Kosman Quartet made its third and last appearance for the season. The principal features of the programme were Beethoven's C major Quartet (Op. 59) and Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet, in which Mr. Ernst Denhof was associated with the regular members of the party, and Miss Jenny Taggart sang.

The second pianoforte recital of the season was given, on the 16th ult., by Herr Rosenthal, who played Mozart's Sonata in A major, his own "Vienna Carneval," and drew upon Chopin, Davidoff, Mendelssohn, Schubert, and Liszt for the rest of the programme.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER.

The Choral Society is exceptionally fortunate in having for its president Mr. Joseph Bennett, to whom its grateful thanks were due and accorded by hearty acclamation for his having induced Herr Rosenthal to pay a visit to the city on the 12th ult. Herr Rosenthal's rendering of such works as Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Schumann's Carnival Scenes, several of Brahms's Variations, and pieces by Couperin, Schubert, and Chopin is too well known to need any comment here; and the interest of his performances was greatly enhanced by the analytical comments on the various pieces given by Mr. Bennett. That the distinguished pianist's efforts were received with enthusiasm goes without saying.

On the 20th ult. the Choral Society's second concert of the season took place at the Shire Hall, when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was performed. Miss Gertrude Lynes, Miss Greta Williams, Mr. C. Eynon Morgan, and Mr. Douglas Powell were the chief soloists, assisted in the double quartet by Miss Rosalind F. Elliott, Miss E. M. Fluck, Messrs. H. G. Chance, F. Renshaw, Percy Gray, and F. White. The choir sang throughout with vigour and prompt attack, and indeed their performance, under the very able direction of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, was of a high order. A select band of strings (led by Mr. E. G. Woodward) assisted, Mr. James Capener filling in the wind parts on the organ with skill and discretion.

MUSIC IN HEREFORD.

The Herefordshire Orchestral Society, under the energetic direction of Dr. G. R. Sinclair, is steadily increasing its reputation. It now numbers over 100 performers and appears to be gradually dispensing with extraneous professional aid. On the 22nd of February (evening) and 23rd (afternoon) two concerts were given in the Shire Hall, the programmes being to a large extent the same. Miss Esther Palliser appeared at both concerts and Mr. Charles Collier contributed harp solos on the second occasion. The programmes included Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture, Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Edward Elgar's picturesque Scène Espagnole "Sevillana," and Tschaïkowsky's "Casse-Noisette" suite. The orchestra were heard to great advantage in these works, particularly in the symphony and the "Nutcracker" suite, in which they followed their excellent conductor con amore. A special feature of interest was the performance by Dr. Sinclair, Mr. D. Heins, and Mr. A. E. Brain of Brahms's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and horn, in E flat (Op. 40), the ensemble of the three players being irreproachable.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Philharmonic Society, at its penultimate concert, on the 6th ult., presented, under Mr. Cowen's conductorship, Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Brahms's "Academic" Overture, Rubinstein's "Dance of the Bayaderes," and Edward German's Harvest Dance from his "Seasons" suite. Not the least important feature of the scheme was the brilliant performance of the Third Violin Concerto, (Op. 61), by Saint-Saëns, by Miss Maud Powell. In this difficult work and in three movements from Bach's Sixth Sonata the fair violinist proved herself to be a performer who combines the precious attributes of finished technical ability and deep artistic insight.

At the last concert, on the 20th ult., the main interest centred in the performance of Verdi's "Manzoni" Requiem. The chorus, whose greater usefulness, under Mr. F. H. Cowen's conductorship, has very naturally resulted in a marked increase of zeal and improvement of form, showed themselves on this occasion possessed of remarkable qualities, and not for the first time this season gained marked distinction. The principals were Mdlle. Marie Duma, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The series of concerts which has just closed is admitted on all hands to have been one of the most interesting for many years past. Mr. Cowen has exerted himself, and successfully, to maintain the prestige of the Philharmonic concerts.

The series of Chamber concerts given at the College of Music by Mr. Ernest Schiever, and at the concert-room, St. George's Hall, by Mr. Theo. Lawson, have also concluded. Mr. Schiever's last concert, on the 17th ult., was a very interesting one. The programme included a Pianoforte Quintet by Christian Sinding, the Norwegian composer, whose work is becoming increasingly known in this country. Mr. Leonard Borwick played the part for pianoforte in his usual admirable manner. The performance, in fact, was excellent. Mr. Borwick also played at Mr. Lawson's last concert, when he gave an admirable interpretation of Bach's "Italian" Concerto.

The musically illustrated lectures on Italian vocal music given at the College of Music by Mr. W. I. Argent is locally a new departure, and has been greatly appreciated by students. The selections, rendered by members of the College, were very well sung. A performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," by members of the Post Office Choral and Orchestral Society, on the 19th ult., under Mr. F. H. Crossley, was meritorious and successful.

On the Cheshire side of the water, musical interest has been sustained by the concert given at Claughton, on the 22nd ult., by the Wirral Amateur Orchestral Society. The Society, which is under the direction of Mr. Ernest Schiever, is very flourishing. At the concert on the 22nd Master Harold Batten, a pianist of some twelve years, who attracted the favourable notice of the late Sir Charles Hallé, made his début. He played the part for the solo instrument in Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto with extraordinary ability, discovering technical attainment and nerve phenomenal in a player of his age.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The choral portions of Mendelssohn's "Elijah"—given at the Hallé concert too late in February to be adequately noticed in your last number—were far too admirably rendered to be passed over without further report. Our yearly performance of Mendelssohn's masterpiece has come to be regarded as one of our most enjoyable festivals; and the enthusiasm of the choir, so well drilled by Mr. R. H. Wilson, proves that love of the great work grows with familiarity among the performers as well as among the listeners. We are very far yet from meeting with evidence of the long threatened decline in the popularity of the great oratorio.

At the following concert, given on the 1st ult., Herr Hugo Becker repeated the Tschaïkowsky Variations upon a rococo theme which our highly accomplished resident artist, Herr Carl Fuchs, introduced here some two years ago. Herr Becker also favoured us by the first performance in England of the Concertstück which Eugène d'Albert has dedicated to him. Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, with its extremely rollicking jig, filled the second part of the programme; and Mr. Plunket Greene, beside an admirable rendering of the "Meistersinger" monologue of Hans Sachs, gave some extremely dolorous melodies said to be Irish, but not likely to be accepted as happy specimens of the Volkslieder of the green isle. M. Siloti is always welcome here, and, on the 8th ult., drew a large audience to listen to the Liszt version of Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia and other pieces; the Symphony—Glazounow's No. 6—being new to us and very exciting through the brilliancy of its orchestration. For the concluding concert of the series (the 16th ult.) the band was so largely augmented that some of the choir were placed in the side galleries. Unfortunately the orchestra had to journey homeward from Belfast during the preceding night and the passage was somewhat trying. The consequent impossibility of obtaining a satisfactory rehearsal necessitated the withdrawal of Cowen's "Ode to the Passions"; but the splendid rendering of Weber's "Der Freischütz" Overture, of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and of Beethoven's No. 9 made amends for the delay in producing the Ode, which is said to be our late conductor's strongest choral effort.

M. Siloti was the solo pianist at the concluding chamber recital of the Brodsky series, and one of his pupils—Miss Mary Cracroft—called her friends together, on the 2nd ult., to prove her possession of a clear, delicate touch, perfect self-possession, and an admirably free wrist. Greater depth of expression we must patiently await.

The interest of the concerts of Dr. Watson's Vocal Society and of Mr. G. W. Lane's Philharmonic Society chiefly centres in the performances of the choirs, and the work of the season has materially enhanced their reputation.

MUSIC IN THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Aberdeen Philharmonic Society, on the 5th ult., gave its final concert for the season, when the orchestra, under Herr A. Reiter's baton, and led by Herr Ladislaus Pokorny, did capital work. The choir, however, still lacks the necessary tone to fill a large hall, although great care was shown in regard to shading and attack. The principal vocalist was Madame Marchesi, who ably sustained her reputation. Miss Janet Duff, who appeared as a débutante, created a favourable impression.

The Stirling Choral Society concluded the season's concerts, on the 2nd ult., with a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," the latter work having been given twice before by the Society. The conductor, Dr. Allum, had evidently taken great pains with Mr. Taylor's cantata, which the choir sang very sympathetically; they also sang the choruses in the "Hymn of Praise" with great spirit. The orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Cole, was thoroughly satisfactory. Miss Helen Jaxon (joined in the duet "I waited for the Lord" by Miss M. Graham) and Mr. T. H. Brearley were the solo vocalists, the latter singing the tenor solo in "Hiawatha" with much charm.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society closed its season, on the 13th ult., with an excellent performance of Haydn's "Creation," which was given in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland. In Miss Maggie Davies, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Charles Knowles the Society was fortunate in the selection of soloists for the particular work in hand. They one and all did full justice to Haydn's familiar melodies, which were none the less appreciated in that the "Creation" had not been heard in Sunderland in its entirety for many years. The choruses were exceedingly well sung and the orchestra acquitted itself admirably. Mr. Kilburn conducted with his customary skill and discretion.

On February 25 an immense audience gathered in the Tyne Theatre, Newcastle, to hear a vocal recital, entitled "European Songs of three Centuries," given by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel. The programme consisted of songs and duets by Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Schubert, and other masters, sung in the inimitable style characteristic of these gifted artists.

The Chester-le-Street Choral Society gave a very creditable performance of Mr. F. H. Cowen's cantata "The Rose Maiden," in the Church Institute, Chester-le-Street, on February 22. The soloists were Miss Janet Reed, Miss Armstrong, Mr. William Curry, and Mr. William Lyall. Mr. W. F. Lonsdale led a small orchestra, which was supplemented by Mrs. W. Richardson at the pianoforte and Mr. John Young at the organ. The Rev. Canon Firth, of Durham Cathedral, conducted.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Nottingham Orchestra gave its second and last concert on the 7th ult., when the programme was chiefly chosen from the works of Wagner. Despite the fact that no less than five of the works selected had been previously produced by this Society, they were warmly appreciated, and, doubtless, better calculated to show the improvement which the Society has made under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction. The "Siegfried Idyll" deserves special mention on account of the great artistic performance which it received. The introduction of Mozart's G minor Symphony was most welcome. Mr. Louis Fröhlich sang the Evocation from "Robert le Diable," and selections from Handel and Wagner.

On the 1st ult. Miss Cantelo's programme included an early Beethoven Trio, played with all tenderness and reverence by Mr. Willy Hess, Mr. Whitehouse, and Miss Cantelo. Mr. Whitehouse displayed his magnificent technique in Mendelssohn's Violoncello Sonata in B flat, and Mr. Hess's violin solos were splendidly rendered. Miss Cantelo's performance of Schumann's Fantasiestücke (Op. 12) was at once refined and artistic. Arensky's Trio in D minor, which concluded the programme, was played with admirable finish and breadth of tone.

"Judas Maccabæus" was given in the Parish Church, Wirksworth, by the Choral Society, on the 21st ult. The vocalists were Miss Ethel Bird, Miss Gandy, Mr. Kemp, and Mr. Cradock. The choir, numbering seventy voices, did justice to the choruses. The organ accompaniments were played by Mr. Neville Cox, of Derby, and Mr. Carl Ashover conducted.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Of music here this term "verily there has been no end." We can therefore only attempt to mention a few of the most important events. On January 5 the Cowley Vocal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Day, gave a very creditable rendering of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" in the Town Hall. On February 7 took place the most important concert of the term, when, under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Royal College of Music Orchestra, under the conductorship of Professor Stanford, gave an interesting concert in the Town Hall. The principal works performed were Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G (Mr. W. Scott commendably playing the solo part) and Dvorák's Symphony "From the New World." As this was the first performance of the Symphony in Oxford, it was looked forward to with the keenest interest. From first to last the performance was excellent and evidenced great care in its preparation, the audience being roused to a pitch of enthusiasm rarely met with here. On February 26 an important Chamber concert was given, under the auspices of the Musical Union, by the Schiever Quartet, the two principal works being Beethoven's magnificent Quartet in E flat, Op. 127 (now so rarely performed), and Dvorák's delightful work in F major, "Aus der neuen Welt." Both were exquisitely played, evoking great applause and affording genuine pleasure to a large and critical audience.

On the 6th ult. another good concert took place, when two trios for pianoforte and strings formed the chief features of the programme, the first being Beethoven's Op. 97, in B flat—the greatest of all trios—and the other Schumann's Op. 63, in D minor, one of the most characteristic of his compositions. When we say that Mr. Leonard Borwick, Herr Karl Halir, and Herr Hugo Becker were the executants, we have said sufficient to warrant the assumption that a musical treat was in store for the audience, and so it abundantly proved. Between the trios Mrs. Hutchinson sang very beautifully songs by Handel, Mozart, and Schubert.

The new Professor of Music in this University, Sir Hubert Parry, delivered his inaugural lecture in the Town Hall, as the Sheldonian Theatre is undergoing repairs, on the 7th ult., taking for his subject "Varieties of style in music." He began by paying a most graceful tribute to our much-beloved Sir John Stainer, the retiring Professor, whom the lecturer described as the most valuable Professor of music that Oxford had ever possessed, and who had done work of more sterling value than any of his predecessors. He could gladly run on for the whole of the allotted time for his lecture in singing Sir John's praises, but he thought that would be superfluous in Oxford. None, said the lecturer, but those whose inner vision was constitutionally oblique could fail to appreciate the large-hearted generosity, the frank sincerity, open-mindedness, wide range of interests, shrewdness of judgment, vivacity of mind and intelligence, the constancy in labouring to accomplish perfectly whatever came to him to do, his loyalty to friends as well as to ideals, all of which combined to make a unique professor, in whose footsteps he would endeavour to follow. Sir Hubert Parry then dealt with the subject proper of his discourse, "Varieties of style." There were a few illustrations, in which he was assisted by students of the Royal College of Music.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Chapeltown and District Sacred Harmonic Society performed Costa's "Naaman," on the 13th ult., under the direction of Mr. Thomas Bool. Considerable interest attached to the concert as a result of the enterprise recently displayed by the management of the Society and the success of the last concert. The performance was an entire success, the fine chorus-singing being one of its most striking features. An excellent orchestra was led by Mr. H. Parker. The principals were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Amy Skerritt, Mr. G. W. Riley, and Mr. J. Lycett, each of whom was heard to advantage. Mr. Frank Senior was the organist.

At the second Subscription concert of the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society, held on the 12th ult., two movements from Schubert's colossal C major Symphony were admirably played by Dr. Coward's numerous and enthusiastic forces. The programme also included Mackenzie's "Scottish" Rhapsody, the ballet music from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," the Overture to Glinka's "Life for the Czar," and Auber's Overture "Haydée."

Mention should also be made of an enjoyable concert given by the Brincliffe Musical Society, on the 2nd ult. The orchestra, directed by Mr. J. H. Parkes, played in excellent style Beethoven's "Prometheus" Overture, Symphony, No. 2, in D (Beethoven), Prout's Triumphal March, "Felsenmuhle" Overture (Reissiger), and other pieces.

Dr. Coward terminated, on the 9th ult., an admirable series of lectures on English music, which he has been delivering at Attercliffe in connection with the University College extension scheme. "English instrumental music, opera and oratorio," was the subject of Dr. Coward's last discourse, which was ably illustrated by Miss Coward, Miss Chisholm, Mr. Hudson, and Mr. Shimeld (vocalists), and Mr. George F. Cawthorne (pianoforte).

At the fourth of Miss Foxon's chamber concerts, given on the 15th ult., M. Johannes Wolff, Miss Fanny Davies, Mr. W. E. Whitehouse, and Miss Louise Phillips appeared. Mr. S. Liddle accompanied.

On the 26th ult. Spohr's "Last Judgment" was performed in St. Mary's Church, Sheffield, under Mr. J. A. Rodgers. The choir of the church was largely augmented for the occasion.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Wolverhampton Orchestral Society gave an excellent concert in the Agricultural Hall, on the 5th ult. The band of about fifty performers, under the conductorship of Mr. T. E. Clarke, played Mendelssohn's picturesque "Fingal's Cave" Overture and two movements from Beethoven's C minor Symphony. A special feature of the concert was the appearance of Mr. W. J. Read, solo violinist, who played Bach's "Chaconne" and Wieniawski's "Airs Russes." Miss E. Knott sang several songs (including the "Jewel Song" from "Faust"), all being given in good style. Miss Christie ably officiated as accompanist.

The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society has been responsible for some remarkable entertainments during the past twelve years, but probably no programme it has submitted for public approval has been so generally appreciated as that given in Victoria Hall, on the 8th ult., when its members gave a concert-platform arrangement of Gounod's "Faust." Evidences were abundant that the presentation of the opera in this form afforded general delight, and it is, therefore, almost useless to offer a protest against the growth of a practice which is in reality an act of vandalism. The principals included Madame Fanny Moody, Miss Lily Moody, Mr. John Child, and Mr. Charles Manners. The soloists, chorus, and band all deserve unstinted praise for a most excellent performance, and Mr. James Garner once more proved himself a skilful conductor.

The members of the Stafford Choral Union, assisted by the Male voices of Uttoxeter Choral Union, gave a good performance of Sullivan's "The Golden Legend," in the Borough Hall, on the 20th ult. The principals were Miss Lilian Coomber, Miss Minnie Dackett, Mr. Gwilym Richards, Mr. Arthur Barlow, Mr. F. Ward (solo violin and leader), Mr. A. J. Brak, Nottingham (solo Cor Anglais), and Mr. J. Jackson, organist. Mr. D. Drury conducted. The band and chorus numbered 160 performers.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Cardiff Musical Society gave its second concert of the season in the third week of February. The soloists were Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. Charles Tree, Mr. W. H. Squire contributing a number of excellent violoncello solos. Mr. Aylward has a fine body of singers under his control, and their rendering of Stainer's "Triumph of Victoria," Oliver King's "Soldier, rest," and other part-music left nothing to be desired. Mr. W. A. Richards presided at the pianoforte.

A festival of Welsh choirs was held at Llandaff Cathedral on St. David's Day—in honour of the patron saint of Wales. The music consisted of chants by Barnby, Rimbault, and Russell, hymn-tunes sung to Welsh words, Stainer's "Sevenfold Amen," and Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus."

A performance of Stephen's oratorio "The Storm of Tiberias," the first Welsh work of its class (published in 1855), was given by the Ebenezer Choir, Trecynon, Aberdare, under the conductorship of Mr. W. E. Thomas, assisted by a small but well-balanced orchestra led by Mr. Paul Draper, on the 8th ult., the orchestration of the work being by Mr. Emlyn Evans.

On the 9th ult. Mr. David Jenkins, Lecturer in Music at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth, inaugurated his lecturership by giving an address on Welsh national airs, their history and characteristics. The discourse proved instructive and interesting and was much appreciated.

On the 16th ult. a very interesting lecture was given by Dr. Roland Rogers, at the Penrhyn Hall, Bangor, on Schumann. Musical illustrations from the composer's works were also contributed by Dr. Taylor Jones (violin), Mrs. Reichel (songs), the lecturer (pianoforte), male-voice chorus, and an efficient choir.

LEEDS.

The first Leeds event I have to record is a good all-round performance of "Elijah," on February 21, by the Leeds Choral Union, which possesses a large and well-trained chorus, trained and conducted by Mr. Benton, the Parish Church organist. The principals were Miss Alice Esty, Miss Bertha Salter, Messrs. Gregory Hast and Watkin Mills, so that a satisfactory result was pretty nearly a foregone conclusion. Two days later one of the local orchestras that struggle for existence against general apathy and municipal contempt gave a concert. Mr. E. Elliott, a young violinist who is possessed of more than an average artistic enterprise, founded the "Leeds Orchestra" in 1898. Its programme on this occasion included a very able reading of Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto by Mr. Elliott himself, and an equally clever performance by Mr. A. Bolton of Popper's Violoncello Concerto in E minor, as effective a piece of its kind as one meets with. Native music was happily represented by Stanford's "Shamus O'Brien" and Mackenzie's "Little Minister" Overtures, both of which were played with capital spirit.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" will soon be known to every choral society in the Riding. It was given with success on February 26, by the St. Chad's Choral Society, under Mr. Percy Richardson's conductorship, and with Mr. Barnes to sing the tenor solo. A very enjoyable Chamber concert was given on the 1st ult. by Miss Gertrude Wortley, who, with Messrs. Elliott and Bolton, gave refined performances of Dvorák's F minor Trio (Op. 65) and Schütt's Suite for pianoforte and violin (Op. 44), a pleasant and effective work. Miss Cover was the vocalist. Messrs. Haddock's "Musical Evening," on the 6th ult., took the form of a vocal and pianoforte recital. The pianist was Mr. W. Richter, whose choice of solos and whose playing were of an equally high artistic order. The same can hardly be said of Miss Clara Butt, who sang charmingly, but whose songs were, for the most part, sadly lacking in distinction. No more enjoyable concerts are given in Leeds than those of Mr. Rawdon Briggs, the violinist, who, with his well-practised quartet, gave an excellent programme on the 9th ult. With Miss Olga Néruda as pianist, a most sympathetic and brilliant performance was given of Brahms's fine Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, which was the chief feature of a good programme. Chamber music was also the subject of the Philharmonic and Subscription concert, on the 14th ult., when the Kruse Quartet and Mr. L. Borwick played Dvorák's fine Pianoforte Quintet, and, with Messrs. Gomez, Borsdorf, James, and C. Hobday, gave an artistic performance of Schubert's Octet. Mr. Kennerley Rumford introduced to the town the "Four Serious Songs" of Brahms, and sang them with admirable dignity and feeling, the accompanist, Mr. S. Liddle, greatly enhancing their effect by his sympathetic playing. This brings to a close a record of a month's concerts which, in both quality and quantity, is above the Leeds average.

BRADFORD.

At Bradford the Old Choral Society gave, on February 27, a performance of Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron." "Acis and Galatea" formed the second part of the programme, and both works were very satisfactorily given under Mr. Robertshaw's direction. The principals were Miss Ethel Wood, Messrs. Trevor Evans, C. H. Mort, and Watkin Mills. On the 2nd ult. the last of the Subscription concerts took place. It was originally intended to be the last appearance of Mr. Edward Lloyd at these concerts, and, at his suggestion, the two works chosen were "The Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." It scarcely need be added that these proved exactly fitted to the public taste, and that, with Miss Palliser, Miss Crossley, and Mr. Watkin Mills as the other principals, the Hallé Orchestra and the Bradford Festival Society's chorus, and under Mr. Cowen, the performances gave satisfaction to an audience very ready to be pleased. Mr. Cowen's influence on the policy as well as the playing of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra was happily illustrated, on the 10th ult., when the strongest programme they have yet attempted was given. With the "New World" Symphony of Dvorák, very creditably played, we had two movements from Tschaïkowsky's Violin Concerto, the solo part being played by Mr. John Dunn with remarkable go and brilliance, though he shows a tendency to exaggerate portamento effects beyond what they will legitimately bear. Miss Lilian Wormald was the singer. At the last of the Harrison concerts, on the 15th ult., the Harrison Orchestra made its appearance, and gave some remarkably smart and finished performances of popular orchestral pieces under Mr. Jaeger's able conductorship. Mr. de Greef played Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto with sparkling effect, and Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. Watkin Mills helped to make the concert by far the most interesting of the whole series.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The Halifax Subscription concerts, which, without much pretension, are as enjoyable a series as any in the West Riding, came to a close on February 27, when Mr. Leonard Borwick and Mr. Plunket Greene gave one of their delightful recitals. On the following day the Choral Society gave a concert under most unfortunate conditions, having to undertake Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" in the absence of the Bride! At the last moment a lady amateur who was in the audience pluckily undertook to prevent an utter collapse by singing the soprano part with the exception of the two solos. Mrs. Drury got through her trying task most creditably, but could not, of course, make up for the unfortunate mishap. The other soloists were Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. T. Smith conducted. The "Walpurgis Night" was also included in the programme and was sung with fair success. The Northgate End Orchestral Society, a Halifax institution with a rather clumsy title, gave a concert on the 8th ult., of which Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony was the most important feature. The performance was creditable, but not remarkable for variety or refinement of tone. Madame Edith Mellor sang and Mr. Priestley conducted.

Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, which is a special favourite with amateur societies, was also given, on the 7th ult., by the Keighley Orchestral Society, and was played with precision and fair intelligence, though without a sufficient observance of the strong contrasts that are so characteristic a feature of the music. Miss Louise Dale sang very gracefully, and Mr. Henley played very cleverly a series of violin solos whose object was less to charm than to startle. Mr. Summerscales conducted with marked ability. On the 13th ult. the Keighley Musical Union resuscitated Benedict's "St. Peter," under Mr. Alfred Benton's conductorship. The principals, Miss Florence Lancaster, Miss Margaret Kay, Messrs. Brearley and Douglas Powell, were all efficient, and the performance seems to have been quite worthy of the Society's repute.

At Huddersfield the Subscription concerts have been running their accustomed course. An unusually high level was reached in the annual visit, on February 27, of the Hallé band, which, under Dr. Richter's consummate leadership, gave superb performances of Tschaïkowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, Brahms's Variations on a Haydn chorale, and some familiar overtures. Madame Duma was the vocalist. On the 13th ult. Mr. Plunket Greene sang in his usual interesting style. On the 16th ult. the Huddersfield Choral Society gave "Judas Maccabæus," with Madame Emily Squire, Miss Muriel Foster, Messrs. W. Green and David Hughes as principals. The chorus-singing, under Mr. Bowling's baton, was as remarkable for power and force as it generally is, especially in Handel's music, which shows to advantage the strong points of the Society, and does not unduly expose its weak ones. The Glee and Madrigal Society, on the 20th ult., gave some admirable examples of part-singing, powerful, yet refined, and without the exaggerations so often indulged in. Mr. Ibeson conducted.

The Dewsbury Choral Society, which is one of the highest in its aims and most efficient in its performances in the West Riding, fell somewhat short of its repute at its last concert, on the 6th ult. Owing, no doubt, to the illness of the conductor, Mr. Chadwick, the chorus was hardly up to its work, and both Goring Thomas's "Swan and the Skylark" and Stanford's "Revenge" showed signs of unfamiliarity. Mr. G. H. Hirst, the Society's former conductor, who has done so much to raise it to its present state of efficiency, conducted, and gave a fine reading of the "Oberon" Overture. The most striking feature of the concert was the fine singing of Miss Agnes Nicholls, whose performance of the florid soprano part in Thomas's work and of the familiar "Ah! fors' è lui" was full of verve and brilliance. The Morley Society, which Mr. Benton conducts, combined, on the 15th ult., the popular "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and did sufficient justice to both. Miss Jaques, Mrs. Baines, Messrs. Riley and Lycett were the principals. A creditable performance by the Pudsey Choral Union, on the 19th ult., of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," preceded by the "Hiawatha" Overture, which had not previously been heard in Yorkshire, deserves record. Mr. A. Jowitt was the conductor.

The York Symphony Orchestra, which forms a convenient outlet for the artistic enthusiasm of the Cathedral organist, Mr. T. T. Noble, gave its second concert on February 21. There was pleasant evidence in both programme and performances of improvement. Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, the first "Peer Gynt" suite, Mozart's "Magic Flute" Overture, a suite by Olsen, and some of Mr. Noble's incidental music to "The Wasps" furnished a sufficient test of the ability of the persevering amateurs in the orchestra and of the pains taken by their energetic conductor. Miss Knocker played a violin solo and the Minster Choir helped in giving variety to the concert.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A patriotic concert was given at the Princes' Building, Port of Spain, Trinidad, on February 9, and patronised by Their Excellencies Sir Hubert Jermingham, K.C.M.G., Lady Jermingham, Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick E. D. Bedford, K.C.B., and the officers of the North American and West Indian squadrom, Major-General Sir Francis C. Scott, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., and the officers of the local forces. The concert was in aid of the wives and children and the widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors fighting in South Africa. There was a strong chorus and orchestra, under the direction of the Rev. Canon Doorly, assisted by the Police band, under Mr. S. Grainger, and the Admiral's band from H.M.S. "Crescent." The songs included Boyce's "Heart of Oak," "Rule, Britannia" (arranged by Vincent Novello), "God save the Queen" (Costa's arrangement), Mackenzie's "Empire Flag," and the "Soldiers' Chorus" from Gounod's "Faust." In addition to the following "The Meteor Flag" (sung by Dr. Doyle) was composed to words written by Mr. L. M. Fraser, by His Excellency Sir Hubert Jermingham. Mr. A. W. Selton, honorary secretary of the concert committee, was responsible for the words and music of another novelty, "Britannia's Daughters," sung by Mrs. Doorly. Mr. S. Grainger produced two pieces, "The Volunteers' March" (played by the Police band) and "Canada's aid to the Empire," with its popular and rollicking chorus. This song was most effectively sung by Mr. J. K. Horsford. The building, which was decorated in an elaborate and appropriate manner, was packed with a most enthusiastic audience, and the pecuniary result amounted to the satisfactory sum of between £300 and £400. During the evening "the hat" was passed round, and yielded in addition £38 15s. 5d., and a watch!—the latter a very timely gift.

Mr. John S. Bumpus read the concluding portion (Part II.) of his paper on "Irish Church Composers" before the Musical Association, on the 13th ult. In the course of his survey the erudite lecturer referred to several Dublin musicians, including John Spray, the Robinsons, and Sir Robert Stewart. Amongst the amusing stories related of Dr. John Smith, one of the predecessors of Professor Prout in the Chair of Music at Dublin, Mr. Bumpus gave the following—but in order to show its point, it should be stated that Professor Smith was not a profound theorist. One day, Dr. Smith received a letter purporting to have come from Rossini, thanking Smith, in fulsome terms, for his "magnificent and standard work"—a treatise on harmony. He regretted that it had not been written when he (Rossini) was young, as it would have saved him all the trouble he had experienced in the study of music! Rossini concluded by invoking "heaven's blessing upon the name of Smith, which," said he, "will go down with a halo of glory to the latest posterity!"

Royal College of Music.—Free Open Scholarships have been awarded, after competition, as follows:—Pianoforte: Ethel M. Brigstock, London; James Friskin, Glasgow; and Clara E. Smith, London. Singing: Mildred F. Evans, Manchester; Julia E. B. Hall, Bristol; Seth Hughes, London; Norman E. Ridley, Gateshead; and Harold E. Wild, Manchester. Organ: George Dyson, Halifax; and Walter B. C. Wiltshire, Brighton. Violin: Vera L. D. W. Evans, London; and Valentino Gennari, London. Violoncello: Charles G. Blackford, London. Flute: George Ackroyd, Bradford. Trumpet: Frank R. Moore, London.

Royal Academy of Music.—The competition for the Llewelyn Thomas Prize took place on the 12th ult., when the prize was awarded to Ethel Wood (a native of Holmfirth). The competition for the Goldberg Prize took place on the 5th ult., when the prize was awarded to W. R. Maxwell (a native of New York, U.S.A.). Mr. Maxwell was also successful in obtaining the Evill Prize at the competition on the 12th ult. The Emile Sauret Prize has been awarded to E. Spencer Dyke (a native of Plymouth).

Miss Katie Smith proved herself a resourceful and competent artist at a recent Queen's Hall Sunday evening concert. Owing to the sudden hoarseness of the principal soprano during the concert, Miss Katie Smith, who had been singing in Parker's "Holy Child," promptly came to the rescue and sang the solos in the "Stabat Mater" with skill and success, although she had not previously appeared in Rossini's work.

A lecture was delivered at Islington Presbyterian Church Lecture Hall, by Mr. H. E. Mackinlay, organist and choirmaster of the church, on the 5th ult., the subject being "The Life and Work of Schubert," with musical illustrations.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Berlin.—Eugène d'Albert's new one-act music-drama, "Cain," was produced for the first time at the Royal Opera, on February 27, under Dr. Muck's direction, with great success.——Two new works were included in the programme of the Philharmonic concerts, under Herr Nikisch's direction, on the 4th ult.—viz., a Symphony in G minor, by F. Gernsheim, and Tschaïkowsky's Overture "Hamlet."——A concert, devoted exclusively to works by Antonin Dvorák, was given on the 2nd ult., under the direction of Herr Nedbal, at the Beethoven Saal, and included the Bohemian master's E minor Symphony, "From the New World," the symphonic poem "Die Waldtaube," the Violin Concerto (Op. 53), finely played by Herr Carl Hoffmann, and other pieces, many of them entirely unknown here hitherto.

Cologne.—A new choral work by Friedrich Koch, entitled "Sonnen Lied," was produced with considerable success at the eighth Gürzenich concert, under Dr. Wüllner's direction, last month. The words have been taken from the "Solar Song" in the "Edda," and the music, which includes solo numbers, is both characteristic and melodious.

Crefeld.—A new choral composition, with orchestra, by D. Müller-Reuter, was produced for the first time by the Concert Society, on the 2nd ult., and received with great favour, it being a highly effective and finely instrumented work of the romantic order. It is entitled "Hackelberend's Begräbniss," and deals with an episode in Julius Wolff's weird poem "The Wild Huntsman."

Dordrecht.—A performance was given on February 25, by the Maatschappy tot Bevordering der Toonkunst, of August Klughardt's remarkable new oratorio "Die Zerstörung Jerusalems," the audience being throughout most enthusiastic in their appreciation of the work.

Frankfort-on-Main.—An interesting feature of the eighth Museum concert of the season, last month, was the performance, by the pupils of Julius Stockhausen's Academy, of a number of compositions by Palestrina, Gabrieli, Schumann, Loewe, and Brahms, illustrative of vocal styles of different periods, which was greatly appreciated. The veteran professor, Germany's greatest vocal teacher, conducted with youthful energy, and received quite an ovation from the audience.

Genoa.—A new "Requiem," by the Maëstro Giuseppe Ceccherini, produced a very marked impression on its first performance, recently, at the Church of St. Annunziata, under the composer's direction.

Göttingen.—The Bach-Verein gave its twenty-fifth public performance last month, when the programme included the cantata "Herr Jesu Christ" and several numbers from the "Hohe Messe." During the fifteen years of its existence, this excellent society has produced over fifty of the great Leipzig Cantor's cantatas, not a few of them having never been previously performed in public.

Graz.—At the concert of the Musik-Verein, on the 7th ult., highly favourable notice was taken of a "Sonata quasi fantasia," for organ, by Ludwig Neuhoff, finely interpreted by Professor Degener, the leading organist in this city. In the opinion of many musicians present, the Berlin composer has raised himself with this composition into the front rank of contemporary German composers for the instrument.

Mayence.—Three performances were given recently, by the combined forces of the Liedertafel and Damen-Gesangverein, of Mendelssohn's oratorio "St. Paul," under Dr. Volbach's direction, and with Professor Messchaert, of Amsterdam, amongst the solo interpreters. Two of these performances were given at the "Volks Concert," an excellent institution, intended chiefly for the working classes, where the charge for admission (about 4½d.) includes a copy of the book of words!

Milan.—Don Lorenzo Perosi has completed the score of another oratorio, "Christ's Entry into Jerusalem," which, together with the preceding one, "The Slaughter of the Innocents," is to be first produced, next month, at the newly-decorated concert hall dedicated exclusively to the performance of the young Maëstro's works.

Munich.—A remarkable new operatic work—viz., the three-act "legend" entitled "Buddah," the poem by T. von Hornstein, the music by R. von Hornstein, was produced for the first time on the 5th ult., at the Royal Opera, with great success.

Paris.—Under the able and zealous direction of M. d'Harcourt, excellent performances were given recently by the Oratorio Society, at the Church of St. Eustache, of Berlioz's "Requiem" and of a portion of Gounod's oratorio "Mors et Vita." At the concert taking place on the 15th ult. a new oratorio, "La Terre Promise," written to words selected from Biblical texts, by M. Massenet, was performed for the first time, producing a very favourable impression.——An interesting feature of the historical concerts, now being organised in connection with the forthcoming "World's Fair," will be the performance of the most noteworthy patriotic hymns and choral compositions, emanating from the period of the Revolution and of the Consulate, and including works by Méhul, Cherubini, Lesueur, Gossec, Martini, and others.——"Euphrosine et Coradin," one of the earliest and most charming comic operas by Méhul, was revived at the Théâtre Lyrique last month, with great success.

Prague.—The first performance took place, on the 3rd ult., at the Czech National Theatre, of a characteristic and somewhat novel musical stage-work, entitled "Babicka," set to music by Adalbert Horák. The piece consists of a series of idyllic scenes from Bohemian peasant life, not too palpably idealised by the national poet, Bozéna Némec, to which the composer has wedded his characteristic and, in parts, highly effective music. The work is not an opera, in the conventional acceptation of the term, but a peculiarly national production, in which the rising Czech element asserts itself to good purpose. Needless to add that both poet and composer were recalled after every one of the three acts.

St. Petersburg.—Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" was given for the first time at the Marie Theatre, on February 28, in the Russian language, and received with considerable reserve by an audience accustomed to operatic music cast in a somewhat lighter vein. The translation of the book, by M. Tchechichin, is considered an excellent one.

The Hague.—Two "model performances" were given last month of "Fidelio," by the members of the very active Wagner Society, under M. Viotta's inspiriting direction. Queen Wilhelmina, herself an accomplished and enthusiastic musician, was present at the first of these performances, which attained a very high standard of excellence.

Vienna.—A new composition, for chorus, soli, and orchestra, entitled "Frühlings-Begräbniss," by A. von Zemlinsky, to a poem by Paul Heyse, was a principal and most successful number in the concert given last month by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, the composer conducting his own work. At the concert of the Tonkünstler Verein, on the 1st ult., an interesting Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, by the Viennese composer, Hans Fink, had the good fortune of meeting with the approval of both amateur and professional musicians present. A new Pianoforte Sonata, by Jacob Foerster, was introduced by Fräulein Kerndl, at her recital of the 7th ult., and proved a valuable addition to the literature of the instrument.——A new monument to the memory of Mozart, in the shape of an ornamental fountain, surmounted by a statue of the master, is to be erected in the centre of the Mozart Platz, in the vicinity of the Paulaner Kirche, the necessary funds for the purpose having already been voted by the City Council.

OBITUARY.

We regret to record the death of Dr. Horace Hill, of Norwich, which occurred with tragic suddenness—he died while he was driving home from the railway station—on the 16th ult., at the age of sixty-seven. Dr. Hill, who was a native of Norwich, is best known outside the city as the chorus master of the Norwich Festival, a position to which he was appointed for the Festival of 1881, and which he has since held. He conducted some societies in and around Norwich, including, for some years, the Lynn Philharmonic Society. He composed an oratorio, "Nehemiah," and a cantata, "A Song of Praise"; the latter and some smaller works had the distinction of being performed at various Norwich Festivals. The deceased musician, who graduated Doctor in Music at Cambridge in 1878, was much esteemed in Norwich, where his genial presence will be greatly missed.

The death is announced, on the 10th ult., at Copenhagen, in his ninety-fifth year, of Johann Peter Emil Hartmann, one of the most gifted, and certainly the most popular of national Danish composers. The scion of a family of musicians, originally German, he studied under Spohr at Cassel. He subsequently made his début as a composer in his native Denmark with the successful production of the operas "Ravnen" and "Liden Kirsten," the latter particularly enjoying great popularity, as did, later on, the national ballets "Valkyrien," "Folkesagen," and others of his numerous works, both for the stage and the concert-room. He was for many years director of the Copenhagen Conservatorium, and up to within a year or two of his death regularly performed the duties of organist at the Church of our Lady, he being a consummate master of the "king of instruments." Among his numerous pupils were the family of the reigning King of Denmark, including Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. Hartmann was the father-in-law of Niels W. Gade.

Eugène Vivier, the famous hornist, died on the 4th ult., at Nice, aged eighty-three. Some of the effects produced by him on his beautiful, but difficult instrument were altogether unique, and have never been satisfactorily explained, the artist himself carefully guarding the secret.

Charles Jean Batiste Duchemin, for many years prominent in the musical life of Birmingham, died at Edgbaston, on the 16th ult., aged seventy-two.

Leopold Grützmacher, the excellent violoncellist, well known to London amateurs, died on February 26, at Weimar. He was for a great number of years a leading member of the Grand Ducal Orchestra.

The death occurred on February 29, at Dresden, aged eighty, of Clara Wieck, the widow of Friedrich Wieck, the renowned pianoforte teacher, and stepmother of the late Clara Schumann.

The death is announced, on the 6th ult., at Berlin, of Commerzienrath Carl Bechstein, the founder and chief of the great pianoforte manufacturing house in Berlin. He had nearly completed his seventy-fourth year.

On the 21st ult., at 65, Comeragh Road, West Kensington, Josiah Clippingdale, aged sixty-six.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY AND COLONIAL NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Barnet.—Mr. W. R. Driffill's Choral Society gave a highly satisfactory performance, on the 8th ult., of Franco Leoni's "Gate of Life," preceded by Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise." The principal vocalists were Miss Stella Maris, Mr. Douglas St. Aubyn, and Mr. J. W. Hall. Miss L. Barnetto Bowden and Mr. Fred. Gostelow presided at the pianoforte and organ respectively. The singing of the choir gave evidence of careful and efficient training, which reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. Driffill.

Bath.—The Choral and Orchestral Society gave its last concert this season on February 26, in the Assembly Rooms, when the chief piece in the programme was Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride." Both chorus and orchestra gave a spirited performance of the cantata, and Mrs. Hutchinson, Mr. E. Branscombe, and Mr. W. Llewellyn were efficient exponents of the solo parts. The orchestra was also heard with effect in Tschaïkowsky's suite, "Casse-Noisette." Mr. Harry T. Sims, who conducted, deserves credit for the excellence of the performance.

Bournemouth.—Mr. Dan Godfrey, Jun., the popular conductor of the Municipal orchestra, gave a Benefit concert at the Winter Gardens, on February 24, when there was a crowded and enthusiastic audience. The programme included "Marche Heroïque," by Miss Craigie Ross, Tschaïkowsky's "1812" Overture, and the third movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony. The artists who assisted were Mrs. Helen Trust, Mr. Mandeno Jackson, Madame Newling, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint (vocalists), Miss Craigie Ross (pianist), Mr. Charles Fletcher (violinist), and Mrs. Charles Sugden (reciter). During the seven years that have elapsed since Mr. Godfrey was appointed, nearly 4,000 concerts have been given, including nearly 300 Symphony concerts—a splendid record.

Calne.—The Musical Society (which is in its fourteenth season) gave an excellent rendering of Sir A. Sullivan's "Golden Legend" on February 27, and the conductor, Mr. W. R. Pullein, who had been indefatigable in the preparation of the work, is to be congratulated on the success of the performance. The solo vocalists were Miss Maggie Jaques, Madame Marie Hooton, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. Dan Price, all of whom did justice to their parts. The singing of the chorus was admirable and the orchestra (ably led by Mr. J. W. Duys, of Bath) did excellently throughout.

Camberley.—On the 14th ult., in aid of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society, Haydn's "Creation" was successfully performed by the Yorktown and Camberley Choral Society, in the Drill Hall. The orchestral portions of the work were rendered by the string band of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst (by kind permission of the Governor, Lieutenant-General Sir E. Markham, K.C.B.), assisted by a few members of the Ladies' Amateur Orchestra. The soprano solos were sung by Madame Blanche Powell and the tenor and bass solos by Messrs. Harry and George Stubbs respectively. Mr. H. L. Steele was at the pianoforte and Mr. A. Lake conducted.

Chorlton-cum-Hardy (Manchester).—The Choral Society gave its second concert this season on the 10th ult., at the Public Hall. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and "Loreley" were the works performed, the principal vocalists being Miss Rosa Travis, Miss Ethel Coulter, and Mr. Harry Tudor. The choruses were sung with marked precision and adequate expression. The accompaniments were played by a quintet of strings, pianoforte (Miss Norquoy), and organ (Mr. G. F. Walter). Mr. T. M. Ferneley conducted with skill and alertness.

Colchester.—The Essex Musical Union, which has lately been formed, gave its first concert on the 22nd ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was the principal feature of the programme. A chorus of nearly 100 voices and an orchestra of about thirty performers gave an admirable performance of the work under Mr. E. Pennington Nunn's conductorship, showing ample proof of the thorough training during the year. The solo was sung by Mr. W. R. Maxwell, who made a most favourable impression in the exquisite tenor song. The band, which was strengthened by several London professionals, gave an excellent rendering of the accompaniments, and played some effective pieces in the second part, which included Cowen's English Dances, and Elgar's "Imperial March." This successful start of the Society should do much to encourage its members to further exertions and uphold the efforts made by Mr. Nunn in the cause of music in the locality.

Gateshead.—The Vocal Society gave a concert on the 14th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" was performed, together with a miscellaneous selection, which included the part-songs "Eldorado" (Pinsuti), "The river floweth strong" (Roland Rogers), and "It was a lover and his lass" (Joseph C. Bridge). The choir displayed much intelligence and excellent tone and indicated the care taken by their trainer, Mr. Newton Laycock, who conducted. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Forster, Mr. F. Fallas, and Mr. John Browning, and Mr. J. E. Hutchinson accompanied.

Ormskirk.—The Musical Association, under the conductorship of Mr. W. Ormesher, gave its second concert of the season at the Institute, on the 6th ult., the chief piece being Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," which was very well interpreted. The chorus rendered the different movements in a bright and intelligent manner, the piano chorus previous to the tenor solo being especially well sung. The beautiful solo was feelingly interpreted by Mr. Robert Hurst, and the orchestra throughout played the accompaniments in a most capable manner. The most important feature of the second part was the performance of Mendelssohn's first Pianoforte Concerto, Miss Garside playing the solo part very brilliantly, especially the last movement, which had to be repeated.

Reading.—A concert was given by the Erleigh Musical Society, on the 6th ult., in aid of the Mayor's War Fund. The programme included Elgar's "Banner of St. George," which was excellently performed by the chorus and orchestra. Miss Marian Lindars very ably presided at the pianoforte, and the conductor, Mr. G. Stanley Brewer, merited high praise for the success of the performance. The miscellaneous part of the programme included several vocal and instrumental pieces, which were well rendered, and the concert was concluded with Sullivan's "Song of Peace," by chorus and orchestra.

Ulverston.—The Choral Society gave a concert on February 23, in the Drill Hall, when the chief feature in the programme was Gade's cantata "The Crusaders." The music of this cantata is so fresh and original, and yet within the capabilities of all fairly good choral societies, that the work should claim more frequent recognition. The chorus sang throughout admirably, and in the scene of Rinaldo's enchantment, the female voices in "The wave sweeps my breast" and the sterner sex in "The Crusaders' Song" displayed to advantage the good qualities of each section of the choir. The small string orchestra rendered the delicate accompaniments in a thoroughly efficient manner, Miss T. Hubi-Newcombe, Mr. T. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Wardley rendered full justice to the solos, and the performance was conducted with ability by Mr. Edmund Telfer.

Wells.—The Musical Association gave its first concert under the conductorship of the Rev. T. H. Davis, the new Cathedral organist, on February 27, when the programme included Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," in which the tenor solo was well sung by Mr. Partridge, a vicar-choral of the Cathedral; Brahms's "Song of Destiny," and two part-songs by the same master. The chorus sang in a manner which proved that they had given much time and attention to their task. The orchestra gave admirable renderings of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite (No. 1). A novel feature of the programme was the performance of Schumann's "Märchenbilder" for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. Osborne and the Rev. T. H. Davis. At the final rehearsal the orchestra and chorus presented Mr. Davis, their conductor, with a silver-mounted baton, on the occasion of his recent marriage.

Worthing.—A very good performance of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" was given at the Theatre Royal, by the Worthing Choral Society, on February 21. The chorus acquitted themselves admirably, the balance and quality of tone being exceptionally good, and the clear enunciation of the words being excellent. The orchestra, which numbered nearly forty, was thoroughly efficient, and Dr. Sawyer lent valuable aid at the organ. The beautiful solo "Onaway! Awake, beloved!" received justice at the hands of Mr. Edgar Barnes. Mr. F. D. Carnell conducted with much care and ability.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Anxious.—(1) Tschaïkowsky's "Chant sans paroles" and "Romance in F minor" are arranged for the organ by Mr. E. H. Lemare, in Nos. 8 and 9 of his Recital Transcriptions for the Organ. (2) We do not know of a "Josiah Bates who lived about 100 years ago." Is the portrait to which you refer one of Joah Bates (1740-1 to 1799)? (3) Yes, Concone's Studies are excellent. See also "Forty Melodic Exercises" by Panseron, edited by Randegger (two books) and Henschel's "Progressive Studies for the Voice" (Parts 1 and 2). You should state the kind of voice in ordering either of these books. (4) Yes, you had better apply to the publishers for permission to use the poems, as the copyright in them may not have expired.

S. W. S.—(1) Yes; the six sonatas for the violoncello by J. S. Bach, published by Breitkopf and Härtel, are original compositions for the instrument. The three sonatas by Bach in the Peters edition were originally composed for the viol da gamba, or violoncello, and harpsichord. (2) Yes; Schumann's "Fünf Stücke im Volksten" (Op. 102) were written for violoncello and pianoforte. They have been frequently performed by Signor Piatti at the Popular Concerts, therefore they can be played. As a motto to the first, Schumann has put "Vanitas Vanitatum."

Organist.—(1) The "best" University at which to take the degree of "Mus. Bac." is a matter of opinion, and qualified by certain contingencies which are obvious. (2) For the study of musical history for such an examination your reading should be wide and not limited to one book. Consult Hawkins's "History of Music," James E. Matthews's "History of Music," Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," Rockstro's "History of Music," and, of the note-book type, Bonavia Hunt's "Concise History of Music."

H. C. F.—The characters in "Charles Auchester" are presumed to be as follows:—Seraphael = Mendelssohn; Charles Auchester = Joachim; Clara Benette = Jenny Lind; Anastase = Berlioz; Aronach = Zelter; Starwood Burney = Sterndale Bennett; St. Michel = Costa; and Maria Cerinthia = Fanny Hensel, Mendelssohn's sister. The authoress of the book was Miss Elizabeth Sara Sheppard, who died, aged thirty-two, on March 13, 1862. She wrote the novel at the age of sixteen.

Musica.—(1) You had better write to the Registrar of the Royal College of Music for the desired information. (2) Mr. Franklin Taylor's "Primer of Pianoforte Playing" gives some useful hints upon the fingering of arpeggios and other pianoforte matters.

H. R.—(1) All three of the Nottebohm books on Beethoven are procurable, and may be obtained through Messrs. Novello; but they are only available in the German language. (2) In order to acquire facility in playing from the different clefs you could not do better than make a start with "Examples in Strict Counterpoint," by Gordon Saunders (No. 41 of Novello's Primers). You could then go on to the scores you mention.

F. P.—We are unable to trace at present the original source of Bishop's glee, "Full of doubt and full of fear." It formed one of a collection of his glees published in 1839, and it was probably a portion of the salvage of one of his numerous operas. This may account for the ambiguity of the words when the glee is sung as a detached piece. If we succeed in finding anything more concerning its origin, we will let you know.

"Cork."—(1) The history of the baton and its introduction on the Continent is not very get-at-able. The few references to Mozart as a conductor by Otto Jahn, his great biographer, do not expressly state whether the composer used a baton or not. The history of the introduction of the baton into England is given in The Musical Times for 1896, p. 372.

A. J. C.—Lipinski's "Concerto Militaire in D (Op. 21)" may be played thus:—First movement, crotchet = 144; second movement, crotchet = 96; third movement, crotchet = 152. Grieg's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 13):—Lento, crotchet = 48; Allegro vivace, crotchet = 176; Allegro, crotchet = 132; and Allegro animato, crotchet = 168.

May.—Beethoven's "Andante in F" (Op. 35) is a freely constructed movement, chiefly in the variation form. Schumann's "Arabesque" (Op. 18) is written in a form somewhat analogous to that of the Rondo.

P. A. W.—The Secretary of the Folk-Song Society, Mrs. Kate Lee, 8, Victoria Road, Kensington. Mrs. Lee will gladly reply to any enquiries in regard to the Society.

F. M.—You are quite right. "Rule, Britannia," was composed by Dr. Arne (see its history in the present issue). Vincent Novello arranged the air for four voices.

J. T. G.—Pinsuti's part-song, "Tell me where is fancy bred," may be sung at about crotchet = 100, with perhaps a slightly lower speed at the dolce cantabile.

Organist.—There does not appear to be any historical work extant as to "music and its employment in connection with, or its application to Freemasonry."

R. D.—The songs by Henry Russell about which you enquire are published at prices from 3d. to 6d., and may be obtained from any musicseller.

Metronome.—You will find all that you require in the Cotta edition of Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 109), edited by Hans von Bülow.

Student.—You could not do better than take a course of study such as you suggest under Professor Karl Klindworth, at Potsdam.

E. S.—The words and the music of "Yankee Doodle" are published by J. Williams, 32, Great Portland Street, price one shilling.

L. R. A. M.—We regret that we cannot trace the publisher of "Short Exercises on Sight-reading," by A. E. Horrocks.

Vocalist.—We strongly advise you not to have anything to do with the institution to which you refer.

A. H. H.—The majority of Wagner's works are published by Messrs. Schott and Co.

A few questions are held over.

TOILERS OF THE DEEP

CANTATA

FOR FEMALE VOICES

Verse by JAMES STRANG

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The musical settings are twelve in number, the part-writing for first and second sopranos and contraltos. The utmost care and finish has been bestowed in wedding appropriate music to the verse, and Mr. Gaul has written nothing finer, nor more melodious and captivating in this branch of composition specially adapted for High Schools for Girls. The cantata begins with an instrumental introduction in the form of a barcarolle, in G minor, 9-8 time, moderato. At the close the tempo changes to 2-4, Allegro agitato, descriptive of an approaching storm. But this is of short duration and leads to the chorus, 'Toiling and toss'd on the restless sea,' which is dramatic and spirited in character, the theme being based upon a bright melody, and the part-writing remarkably effective. No. 2 is a Cradle Song, 'Come, my baby,' in G major, Andante moderato, 3-4 time, allotted to a contralto. The accompaniment to this delightful lullaby is constructed on a pedal note, the melody that accompanies it being at once expressive and thoroughly characteristic. The chorus which immediately follows the cradle song opens with a tempestuous instrumental introduction of chromatic scale passages and chords, the key now changing into C major, 12-8 time, Allegro con fuoco. At the fourteenth bar the chorus enters with 'Oh, ho! for the winds that blow"; the whole of this number being of an impassionate and restless character. Quite in contrast to the foregoing is the pretty ballad for soprano, 'A mermaid dwelt,' which closely follows the chorus. It is in Tempo di Barcarolle in F major, 6-8 time, quaint and most espressivo. A short unaccompanied trio, 'The twilight gray is falling,' brings us to what may be termed the gem of the work, a song for soprano, 'O, manly hearts.' The key is E flat major, 2-4 time, Andantino espressivo. Mr. Gaul is here in his happiest mood, the whole song being graceful and charming to a degree. The number that follows is the chorus 'Darker and darker grows the night,' which is preceded by a characteristic instrumental prelude in triplet passages, 2-2 time, C minor, Allegro con fuoco. The whole of this chorus will deeply impress the attentive listener. No. 8, 'A prayer for those at sea,' for chorus, with an organ accompaniment, is in the key of F, 3-4 time, alla capella, and is another example of purely melodious part-writing which characterises Mr. Gaul's compositions, and which is certainly conceived in his best and most expressive manner. The concluding numbers are a short Intermezzo, entitled 'Break of day,' a duet for soprano and contralto, 'Through golden mists of morn,' in the key of B flat, 12-8 time, Allegretto con moto, an exceedingly animated movement; then comes another cradle song, expressive of the father's safe return from sea, and, finally, the concluding joyous chorus, 'Now let songs of gladness rise.' Taking the cantata as a whole, it is a delightful work, replete with artistic workmanship, and, above all, melodious and expressive."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

THE ELFIN HILL

AN OPERETTA FOR SCHOOL USE

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"'The Elfin Hill' is founded on one of Hans Andersen's charming stories, and the libretto has been written in dainty and graceful language by Miss Baldwick. The operetta opens with a short overture describing moonlight on the Dovrefeld Mountains, and Mr. Gaul has been particularly happy in infusing the Norse spirit into that portion of his music which deals with goblin life in Norway. When the goblins become visitors in fairyland, the character of the music changes; lightness is its predominant feature, perhaps the choicest fragment being a fairy dance. This latter, together with a very characteristic dance of elves and a shadow dance, were beautifully executed."—Birmingham Gazette.

BALLADE

(Op. 17.)

ARRANGEMENT FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE BY

THEOPHIL WENDT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
String Parts, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Wind Parts and Full Score (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

Mr. Percy Pitt's "Ballade" for violin and orchestral accompaniment came at so late an hour that it made less effect than it deserved, but it is incontestably a work of sterling value, the solo part of which is written with due regard to the powers of such a virtuoso as M. Ysaye.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The really melodious and strikingly impassioned "Ballade" by Mr. Percy Pitt, a composer who is rapidly making his way to the front. Here, happily, no dull moments supervened, and the richly-coloured piece, extremely modern in style, and adorned with numerous piquant orchestral touches, created a highly favourable impression. Its flowing phrases were interpreted with a full measure of sentiment by Mr. Ysaye, who, though summoned again and again, very sensibly declined to concede an encore.

MORNING POST.

A composition teeming with imagination, rich in its instrumental colouring, new in its harmonic texture, and unconventional in its form. The music seems to throb with passion. Though placed almost at the end of a long concert, when the attention of the audience might well be fatigued, it achieved a great success. M. Ysaye, who played the solo part to perfection, was recalled again and again.

OBSERVER.

Mr. Pitt's Ballade will assuredly enhance his reputation. It is an earnest, deeply felt piece, the polyphonic texture of which shows a mastery of modern methods and an instinct for colour that promise great things. Mr. Pitt has long been recognised as a "coming man." We think it time to class him among those who have "arrived."

SUNDAY TIMES.

Mr. Pitt's piece strikes a deeper note of passion, and abounds with more or less striking climaxes, set forth amidst much glowing orchestral colour, whilst here again individuality of feeling is a welcome feature.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Pitt's "Ballade" is in direct contrast . . . in its sustained interest and remarkable structural coherence. Moreover, it vibrates throughout with passionate feeling, and, in the hands of a great player like M. Ysaye, it produces a really thrilling effect.

THE WORLD.

Mr. Percy Pitt's Ballade is a passionate and poetical utterance which makes one think still more highly of him. He is a past-master of harmony, and his skill in orchestration is quite out of the common; and both these qualities appear in this Ballade, together with a vein of poignant melody and a dramatic sense which had not hitherto been in evidence.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Mr. Pitt's Ballade is of an entirely different character. Its themes express deep emotion, agitation, passion, and that peculiar phase of romantic feeling that is so wonderfully depicted in Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," but which as yet lacks a name. They owe their effect, however, in large part to the polyphonic treatment that marks their harmonisation, and the rich though sombre hues of the orchestral colouring.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Percy Pitt's Ballade, on the other hand, strikes a full-blooded note from the first. It is subjective music and not descriptive, and it has the natural logical cohesion of form, although the violin part is also in the nature of a rhapsody. Its climaxes are well worked up to, and there are many exceedingly clever touches in the scoring and in the harmony. The violin part is effective and often quite poetic.

VARIATIONS

ON AN ORIGINAL THEME

FOR

ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 36.)

FULL SCORE (just published), 25s.

String Parts, 10s. Wind Parts, 22s.

Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the COMPOSER.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

It is exceedingly clever, often charming, and always original, and excellently worked out. The composer was warmly applauded at its close.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Well wrought and ingenious are all these variations, exhibiting in a very high degree Mr. Elgar's fertility of resource and the ample freedom of his method. As those who had previous experience of their author expected, the variations are quite modern in style and texture. . . . will certainly add to the composer's reputation.

DAILY NEWS.

The sections entitled "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" were much applauded, and also the last movement, which has now been revised, although the alterations do not appear to be very great.

MORNING POST.

The variations are all remarkably clever, and some of them are distinctly humorous. The orchestral treatment is throughout ingenious. Mr. Elgar was called on to the platform at the conclusion of his interesting work, and loudly applauded. . . . The matter since added at the conclusion of the last variation was heard to-night for the first time, and was a great improvement, imparting increased brilliancy and importance to the work.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Edward Elgar conducted his admirably written "Variations on an Original Theme," produced at a Richter concert in London in the summer. The work was then warmly approved, and its merits are increasingly conspicuous on a second hearing. The variations that were special favourites this evening were the ninth and tenth. Upon the brilliant Finale, with its bold march, Mr. Elgar was also highly complimented.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Mr. Elgar's new work scored a genuine success. It exhibits most happily his great inventive power and his striking ability in handling his orchestra. He has here produced a series of miniatures, drawn and coloured with the utmost cleverness and originality. Some are tender, some are graceful, and some are humorous, but all reveal the touch of a master. . . . The variations are brimful of character and humour. Since the first performance the composer has rewritten the coda, and given it greater importance, much to the advantage of the work as a whole. The performance was a fine one, and confirmed one in the belief that this is not only Mr. Elgar's masterpiece, but one of the most brilliant orchestral compositions that have been produced in the British school, or in any school for that matter, for many years past.

ECHO.

They are of commanding merit, of comprehensive charm, and well deserve to take a permanent position in our repertory of orchestral music.

GLOBE.

The variations are always interesting, well-contrasted, and scored with a real sense of tone-colour, and some of them are quite beautiful by themselves, apart from all considerations of form and structure.

GUARDIAN.

Mr. Elgar may therefore be very warmly congratulated on the unqualified success of his work, which was given the high compliment of receiving its first interpretation from Dr. Richter and his famous band. . . . The variations are extremely well contrasted, and the orchestration, though masterly and effective throughout, is always treated by the composer as a means to an end, and not as an end in itself. . . . The whole work will add greatly to Mr. Elgar's already high reputation, and it is to be hoped that an opportunity will soon be given of hearing it again. . . . All the favourable impressions produced at the first performance were amply confirmed on this occasion, and it would not, in our judgment, be an exaggeration to say that Mr. Elgar is the most eminent master of orchestral effect which our country has produced, with the possible exception of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

Tannhäuser's Pilgrimage

(PRELUDE TO ACT III.)

FROM

TANNHÄUSER

COMPOSED BY

RICHARD WAGNER.

ORIGINAL VERSION.

Pianoforte Arrangement, 2s.
Strings Parts, 2s. 3d.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

ATHENÆUM.

The original version was used, which contains sixty-three more bars than the one usually performed. Wagner is supposed to have made the cut for the Paris production of his opera in 1861. The bars excised ought to be restored whenever the opera is performed. As concert music this Introduction is certainly effective; it is a programme piece complete in itself, not torn away, like many excerpts, from context, which gives to them special point, and from stage action, which brings out the meaning of the music.

THE TIMES.

The original is sixty-three bars longer and is developed in a far more interesting manner; it would not suit the surroundings of the opera, as Wagner must have felt, but for concert use its superiority to the shortened form is apparent at once.

OBSERVER.

The restored version of Wagner's piece will, it is to be hoped, permanently take the place (in concert-rooms, at least) of the mutilated form of it usually played. The latter was prepared by its composer for a special purpose, and most certainly not because he thought it an improvement on the original. The restored portions contain some of the most beautiful passages in the work, and Mr. Wood is much to be congratulated on having been instrumental in bringing them again to light.

MORNING LEADER.

Wagner's artistic conscience gave him a deal of trouble. An instance in point was his abridgement of the Prelude to Act III. of "Tannhäuser," from which he ruthlessly cut some sixty-three bars of very beautiful and poetic music for the mere sake of satisfying an æsthetic qualm. . . . It is really a very poetic symphonic poem, noble and simple with the simplicity and nobility of genius.

STANDARD.

Unquestionably the first edition is more effective than the second as a concert piece.

ECHO.

Contains sixty-three bars of music always omitted at the operatic representations, but their introduction adds another very effective piece to the concert list of Wagner's music.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The additional bars, which Wagner subsequently omitted, unify and decorate the work in quite a remarkable way.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS OF THE CATHEDRALS, CHAPELS ROYAL, AND PRINCIPAL COLLEGIATE CHURCHES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM, FROM ABOUT THE PERIOD OF THE REFORMATION TO THE PRESENT DAY

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

In cloth cover, gilt lettered, price 3s. 6d.

THE TIMES.

A most valuable contribution to the musical history of our country. . . . The list has been most carefully prepared, and the biographical notes are just what was wanted in a book of the kind, while the quaint anecdotes, epitaphs, &c., that the author wisely included are a welcome relief from the register of appointments and dates.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

To biographical works on music Mr. West has made an acceptable addition. . . . For reference the book is likely to be exceedingly useful, as the arrangement of the contents is simple and there is an index of organists' names.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

A very useful little book of reference on Cathedral Organists, past and present. . . . Mr. John E. West has done his work with conscientious care and ability.

CHURCHWOMAN.

It is well arranged and succinctly written, and will be found a useful work of reference to those who are interested in the development of Church music.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

There is much that is instructive and amusing, information and anecdote being plentiful. So there is nought but thanks and congratulation to Mr. West for his effort.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

It contains biographical notes, extracts from the chapter books, anecdotes, &c.—in other words, it is not a dry record. It has been compiled with great care, and as a work of reference it will be found invaluable. . . . The book is so full of interesting information that we cannot venture to enter into detail.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is certainly a fund of valuable information, much of it hitherto so inaccessible that it is difficult to test its accuracy. This, however, seems trustworthy, partly from intrinsic evidence, partly from the fact that nearly all the Cathedral organists in the country have supplied the material for their respective churches. It is a thoroughly practical well-arranged book of reference, and contains a vast amount of material for the history of the branch of English music that has flourished more than any other.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

Mr. John E. West's "Cathedral Organists" (Novello) is not a bulky volume, but it none the less represents a vast amount of labour. . . . Mr. West deserves, and will receive, the thanks of a large musical brotherhood for his laborious and useful compilation.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

The book before us is the only one of its kind. Mr. West is a pioneer, and the pioneer's work is usually hard, sometimes thankless. . . . The subject is one with which we have some personal acquaintance; and applying to the book our local knowledge—which extends over four dioceses, and dates from forty years ago—we have not discovered any mistake whatever. The book is, therefore, invaluable of its kind, and will in all probability be re-edited, and re-issued as the years roll by, and successive generations of organists wax and wane. Which is to say, that henceforward it becomes a classic.

BIRMINGHAM POST.

A work dealing with a neglected chapter of English musical history; a work, moreover, involving considerable research and consequently of great value for reference. . . . We heartily commend this book to all interested in Church music and musicians.

WESTERN MAIL.

Apart from its intrinsic worth as a biographical and chronological history, Mr. John E. West's book, "Cathedral Organists," is extremely amusing reading. . . . Mr. West's book is clearly the result of great research, and will, doubtless, find extensive appreciation among music-lovers.

EDINBURGH EVENING NEWS.

A unique volume, its aim being to give a complete record of past and present Cathedral organists of the United Kingdom, from the period of the Reformation to the present day.

GLASGOW HERALD.

It is more than a mere list of names, for it contains biographical notes, extracts from the chapter books, anecdotes, and much matter of interest to musicians.

HORACE WADHAM NICHOLL.

12 SYMPHONIC PRELUDES & FUGUES for the ORGAN. Op. 30.

(6 Single Fugues and 6 Double Fugues, with various Counterpoints.)

No. 12 (Quadruple Counterpoint, dedicated to Mons. Saint-Saëns) has an Appendix, giving the Twenty-four Transpositions of the four melodious and distinct Themes, which, to all Organists and Musicians, as well as Students of Counterpoint, is remarkably interesting, as all sound equally well. No. 6, dedicated to Dr. Jadassohn, is a work of real five-part writing throughout, even the Prelude. Fugues 9, 10, and 11 are written respectively in the 10th, 12th, and triple Counterpoints.

On the cover of each Fugue may be read the various exceptionally commendatory letters which this English composer has received in Germany, and elsewhere, from the most distinguished Composers and Organists: Reinecke, Jadassohn, Gernsheim, Saint-Saëns, Guilmant, Seidl, Hamerik, Friedheim, Klengel, Germer, Neuendorff, Ochs, Schreck, Homeyer, Piutti, Pfannstiehl, Archer, &c., &c. According to these openly expressed and unbiased opinions, Nicholl's Organ and other works can be placed by the side of the Great Masters. These works will undoubtedly become Classics. Further corroboration is unnecessary in order to place them on the loftiest pedestal. An impartial examination is all that is needed for even non-experts to grasp their uncommon splendour and intrinsic value. They have already created a great interest in Germany. See our March Mittheilungen (in German), with portrait and further notice of this gifted and distinguished Composer; also our novelty list in English for next May, with the same information.

2. THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA.
3. HIAWATHA'S DEPARTURE.

SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Paper boards, Four Shillings. Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, Two Shillings.

THE TIMES.

. . . Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's claims to be heard are based on other merits than these—on his directness of emotional utterance and on his originality of melodic design, although he never suggests that he is seeking for originality. His melodies have the rare quality of distinction, and his handling of short phrases is as characteristic as it is fresh. Altogether a very great success was scored, and the composer was called again and again to the platform, both after the second section and at the end of all.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

These "Scenes from Hiawatha" are a creation of high importance, bound to exercise large influence upon English music. . . . The composer, who conducted, and his music had the heartiest possible reception. There could be no doubt as to this, for it is seldom that a musical audience becomes so wildly enthusiastic as was that of last night.

STANDARD.

Only those who were present last night at the Albert Hall, when he conducted "Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha," can realise how great and rare is the talent that has come amongst us. . . . Nothing more exquisitely pathetic can be imagined than the strains which accompany the death scene, and the husband's lament is instinct with manly grief, resigned dignity, and fortitude. It is music that goes to the heart, and lingers in the memory, and presses home the poet's saying, "our sweetest songs are those which tell of saddest pain." The opening of "Hiawatha's Departure" provides a most effective contrast to the foregoing. The composer has commenced with the penultimate canto of the poem, where "Spring had come with all its splendour," and the music sings of the glad awakening of the year with unmistakable joyfulness.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Hiawatha's Departure" is in every way worthy of association with the joyous "Wedding-Feast" and the deeply pathetic "Minnehaha," and this effective rounding-off of the trilogy undoubtedly gives the young composer a very firm position among the creative musicians of his day.

MORNING LEADER.

The whole work is so fresh, so spontaneous, so full of many poetic touches, and has such a touching and sincere pathos, that I find it impossible to write an adequate criticism without having first assimilated some of my impressions. . . . For the present I have merely to record a great triumph for the composer.

MORNING POST.

The success thus achieved by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will assuredly not be grudged by anyone, for the young West African composer is endowed with real talent and distinct individuality. . . . The last section, "Hiawatha's Departure," is on a par of interest with the rest of the work. It contains a bright solo for soprano, telling how Spring had come as fresh as the season it celebrates, also an expressive song for baritone, "Beautiful is the Sun.' The instrumentation of the entire work is excellent and replete with picturesque devices.

DAILY MAIL.

All that can be taught in the way of technique he has learnt well. And this knowledge, combined with the gifts, priceless because impossible of acquirement, of spontaneity, genuine feeling, rhythmical command, and the power to express original thoughts in his own way, make him a force. We do not think we exaggerate at all in using the phrase "epoch-making" in the English musical Renaissance in connection with "Hiawatha."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

There is no pretence, no shamming, no mere imitation of a supposed national style; but it has the fragrance, on the contrary, of a peculiar nationality, one, we will say, of confirmed rhythmical habit, of artless melodies, of poignant if simple emotionalism, while to all of these qualities Mr. Taylor has added a finely trained technical gift, a noble inspiration in harmony. We trust that the time may come when we shall be able to hail him, without rash exaggeration, as the Tschaïkowsky of his race.

THE GLOBE.

His flow of melody is unfailing, and the brilliancy of his orchestration and the fertility of his imagination are quite astonishing. Not less surprising is his originality; from first to last every page of the score is stamped with the composer's individuality. This is, perhaps, one of the most satisfactory features of his talent, but quite as striking is his power of producing big effects by comparatively simple means. The lament for Minnehaha in Part 2 is an admirable example of pathos obtained by the most straightforward devices, and equally fine is the movement "quasi una Marcia Funebre" later in the same section, in which the sustained power of the choral and orchestral writing is extraordinary. The enthusiastic applause at the end of "The Death of Minnehaha" showed that the audience recognised that this was undoubtedly the finest part of the work, and the young composer fully deserved the ovation which he received.

A COURSE OF HARMONY

BY

FREDERICK BRIDGE, Mus.D., Oxon.

(Gresham Professor of Music)

AND

FRANK J. SAWYER, Mus.D., Oxon.

(Professor of Sight Singing, Royal College of Music).

This book is the outcome of a request made to Sir Frederick Bridge by the Council of the Royal College of Music—he being the Professor responsible for the teaching of Harmony and Counterpoint in that Institution—that he should prepare a manual of harmony for use in the College. Sir Frederick subsequently enlisted the aid of his pupil and former assistant at Westminster Abbey, Dr. F. J. Sawyer, in the preparation of the work, and the result is a somewhat unusual occurrence in a treatise on harmony, a joint-authorship production.

The authors have so planned their manual as to furnish students with a course of practical instruction. Moreover, and happily for the pupil, their theoretic deductions are free from all philosophical or acoustical arguments.

The book has the further advantage of advancing no new theory, as it is based on existing systems. What could be better than building on the corner-stones of Goss and Macfarren?

Sir Frederick Bridge and his coadjutor, Dr. Sawyer, hold the commendably wise belief that "the teaching of harmony should not be a purely mechanical and mathematical process." Alas! that it should so often degenerate into a matter of mere "dry bones." Therefore, they have aimed at obtaining higher and more artistic results—viz., the "creation" of harmony by the student—in fact, thorough art, not merely thorough-bass.

One special feature towards the attainment of this end is that from the very outset of his study-course the pupil has to consider the formation of his bass. Who will deny the importance of this feature in the thorough equipment of the student of harmony?

Another advantage of this "Course of Harmony" is that it may be divided into five grades in accordance with the classes at the Royal College of Music—that is to say, the first grade (Chapters 1 to 8) extends to the dominant seventh chord; the second covers the study of the inversions of the dominant seventh, the dominant ninth, suspensions, harmonising unfigured basses, and so on.

Later on will be found some useful hints on "harmonising for string quartet"; chapters on three-part and five-part writing; and, as an appendix, "Hints on the training of the ear and the eye in Harmony"—a matter of supreme importance.

So much for the comprehensiveness (which admits of no disputation) of this handy little volume of some 200 pages. In conclusion, it is hardly necessary to say that the reputation of the joint-authors stands so high as to command respect and confidence in a branch of the teaching-art of music which they have made specially their own, and of which its full fruition is to be found in this thoughtful "Course of Harmony."

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY A. J. HIPKINS, F.S.A.

The book is illustrated by a series of admirable drawings of Indian Musical Instruments by WILLIAM GIBB. They form seventeen plates, printed in the highest style of chromo-lithography under the direct superintendence of the Artist, and will, the Publishers believe, in themselves fully justify the publication.

THE IMPRESSION IS LIMITED TO SEVEN HUNDRED COPIES, printed on finest Plate paper, handsomely bound .. .. .. net £3 13 6

The Publishers undertake not to print further copies or publish any smaller edition, and reserve the right to raise the price after a certain number have been sold.

"A book of immense scientific as well as artistic value."—Times.

"No more interesting and at the same time authentic account of an art which, in the forms treated of, is hoary with antiquity, exists within the repertory of English literature."—Daily Telegraph.

"There is no book of the kind existing comparable with this one to which an inquirer about Indian music can turn."—Athenæum.

"The book is a splendid example of intelligent and original research."—Daily News.

"We cannot but speak in the highest praise of Captain Day's work, and hope to see the book eventually issued in a form in which it will be more generally attainable. Mention must also be made of the learned introduction written by Mr. A. J. Hipkins, F.S.A., and a word of commendation must be given to the admirable manner in which the work has been produced by the publishers."—Morning Post.

"Nothing that has yet been written on Indian music, by either Hindoos or Europeans, can be compared in professional merit with the present work by Captain Day."—St. James's Gazette.

"Nothing has ever been published that can at all approach the present volume in interest. . . . One of the most sumptuous publications of recent years."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The most cursory perusal of his pages will amply bear out this modest description of the wide and exhaustive nature of Captain Day's investigations. . . . The result has been given to the world in a volume of unique importance to students of national musical literature and to scientific investigators into the origin of the scale, of melody, and of rhythm."—Daily Graphic.

"How admirably he has availed himself of his opportunities can only be fully appreciated by those who have made a personal perusal of the exhaustive and masterly treatise just issued by Messrs. Novello in sumptuous édition de luxe form, with a set of magnificent coloured plates representing nearly forty different instruments. . . . Apart from the very great value of the work to the scientific historian of the evolution of music, we make little doubt that it will meet with a cordial welcome in India."—Globe.

"As the work of an enthusiast, this elegant volume is a valuable addition to the histories of national music. . . . The illustrations in music type, the drawings, and the coloured plates are perfect examples of what instructive embellishment should be. In every respect the work has obtained a superb setting."—Daily Chronicle.

"Captain Day has set a good example by devoting much study and research to the investigation of native music while employed in foreign service with his regiment in India, and the result of his labours is now presented in a form which is rendered attractive both by excellent type and paper, and by a series of admirable coloured plates from drawings by Mr. William Gibb. . . . The illustrations are admirable, and worthy to be classed with those by the same artist in the magnificent volume on 'Rare and Valuable Musical Instruments' which Mr. A. J. Hipkins published some years ago. The book is rendered more useful by a copious bibliography of MS. and printed works on Indian music."—Saturday Review.

"Captain Day's elaborate volume will be welcomed by musical antiquarians and readers as the first English publication in any way worthy of the subject. . . . The accompanying plates, printed in the highest style of chromo-lithography from drawings of Indian musical instruments by Mr. William Gibb, are among the finest examples of colour printing we have seen, and on their account alone the book would be well deserving of preservation. . . . No future explorer of Eastern song, and no historian investigating the origin of Greek and Hebrew music, can afford to ignore Captain Day's researches, which throw considerable light on the problems suggested by the scales and modes employed among primitive peoples, and are a precious contribution to the paleology of instrumental music."—Manchester Guardian.

The Chants contained in the above collections have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. II., Chant No. 23, by Lord Mornington, which is included on account of its great popularity.

THE

TENTERDEN STREET, HANOVER SQUARE.

INSTITUTED, 1822. INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

PATRONS:

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES
AND OTHER MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY.

President—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA, DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

Principal—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout the United Kingdom and in the Colonies in both Theoretical and Practical Music. The Examinations are of two kinds, "Local Centre" and "School." The Local Centre Examinations are carried out by two Examiners chosen almost exclusively from the Staffs of the Royal Academy of Music and of the Royal College of Music. The School Examinations are conducted by one Examiner.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

ELEMENTS OF MUSIC.	PIANOFORTE.	DOUBLE BASS.
HARMONY AND GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	ORGAN.	HARP.
COUNTERPOINT.	VIOLIN.	WIND INSTRUMENTS.
	VIOLA.	SINGING.
	VIOLONCELLO.

The Local Centre Examinations are held Annually, in March and April. Full particulars will be found in Syllabus A, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

The School Examinations are held at three periods: (a) March—April, (b) June—July, (c) October—November. Candidates for these Examinations may be entered either by Heads of Schools or by individual Teachers. In the latter case, neither the Teacher nor the Candidate need necessarily be connected with a School. Full particulars of these Examinations, and also of the General School Examination and Class Singing Examination, will be found in Syllabus B, which will be sent on application to the Secretary.

Entries for the June—July period will be received not later than May 12.

The Board gives annually six Exhibitions tenable for two years. These Exhibitions are limited to candidates under 20 years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

A NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION

OF

OF

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO REVISED EDITION.

With this issue of the new edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music it is desired to direct attention to the additional papers which are printed for the first time in this form.

These are, the University of Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper required of all candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors.

These papers will be found most valuable and useful, and for the kind permission to make use of them the author desires to express his most sincere obligations to Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A.; Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc.; Edward J. Chadfield, Esq.; and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A.

Season 1899-1900.—Mr. Browning has sung solos in the following: "Messiah" (13), "Creation" (8), "Judas" (3), "Walpurgis Night" (4), "Elijah" (2), "Last Judgment" (2), "Stabat Mater," Rossini (3), "St. Paul" (2), Brahms's "Requiem," "Caractacus," Gounod's "Faust" (Mephisto), "Acis," "Building of the Ship" (Barnett), "Bride of Dunkerron," "Erl-King's Daughter," "Connla," "Rose Maiden," "Seasons," "Redemption," "Joan of Arc," &c., for the leading English and Scotch Choral Societies; also at numerous classical and ballad concerts.

Gounod's "Faust."—"Mr. John Browning's Mephistopheles was marked by all the robust brilliance and graceful melodiousness which distinguish all this singer's work."—Arbroath Herald, March 22, 1900.

"Mr. John Browning made a most dramatic Mephisto. His part suffered, perhaps, more than any other from the enforced want of action and stage effects, and this made his success all the more gratifying. He was at his best in 'The calf of gold' song, which was given with all the necessary sardonic humour."—Dundee Courier, March 22, 1900.
Address, Marlboro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. WILLIAM DYOTT

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERT.—"The singer of the afternoon was Mr. Charles Knowles, a baritone of fine timbre and excellent as to intonation."—Ladies' Field, March 10, 1900.

"THE SEASONS" (HAYDN).—NEWCASTLE AND GATESHEAD CHORAL UNION.—"In the bass solos Mr. Charles Knowles was uniformly excellent, the recit. and air descriptive of the Sportsman in Autumn being given by him with great power, and he was recalled three times for it."—Newcastle Daily Journal, March 28, 1900.

"Mr. Charles Knowles sang the solos in splendid style, and was particularly successful in 'With joy the impatient husbandman' and 'Behold, along the dewy grass,' which latter was one of the finest items of the evening."—Musical Standard, April 7, 1900.

"CREATION."—SUNDERLAND PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—"Mr. Charles Knowles was found to be in good voice. His return to Sunderland was welcome, as it was two years ago since he had been here previously, and attracted admiration at a police concert. He has a rich and powerful voice, and last night sang with delightful force and expression, being particularly successful in the duets with Miss Maggie Davis; and the airs, 'Rolling in foaming billows,' 'Now heaven in fullest glory shone,' his rendering of the last-named being rapturously applauded."—Sunderland Herald, March 15, 1900.

"GOLDEN LEGEND."—CHELTENHAM FESTIVAL SOCIETY.—"Mr. Charles Knowles was very fine as Lucifer, his vigorous style telling in all his work, while at times he rose to the magnificent."—The Citizen, February 21, 1900.

"ELIJAH," DUMFRIES.—"Mr. Charles Knowles, to whom, as Elijah, the bulk of the singing fell, was conspicuous in the succeeding passages in which the Prophet taunts the priests of Baal, a feature of his singing being the distinct and dramatic enunciation. 'Lord God of Abraham' was rendered in a touching manner and was another example of Mr. Knowles's dramatic powers, and he was even more successful in 'Is not his word.' One of Mr. Knowles' conspicuous successes was the aria 'It is enough,' into which he infused the deep grief of the Prophet, while the recit. which follows, 'O Lord, I have laboured in vain,' was similarly treated and with equal success."—Dumfries Standard, February 24, 1900.

For terms, &c., 24, Acacia Road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

MR. EDGAR ARCHER

Private Lessons are given in the following subjects:—Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration and Composition; Pianoforte, Organ, Singing, Violin, Viola, Violoncello, Double Bass, Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, Horn, Trumpet and Cornet, Trombone, Harp, Mandoline and Guitar, Zither, Choir Training, Elocution and Stage Deportment, Modern Languages, &c.

The following are some of the Classes:—
HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, COMPOSITION, ORCHESTRATION, and MUSICAL DICTATION (Dr. Yorke Trotter).
QUARTET and ENSEMBLE PLAYING (Mr. Edward O'Brien and Mr. J. Edward Hambleton).
ELOCUTION and DRAMATIC ART (Mr. Charles Fry and Mr. Arthur Fayne).
CHORAL (Mr. Henry Beauchamp).
LADIES' CHORAL (Mr. J. Mewburn Levien).

The Full Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Yorke Trotter, and the String Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Edward O'Brien, meet weekly. There are three 3-manual Practice Organs.

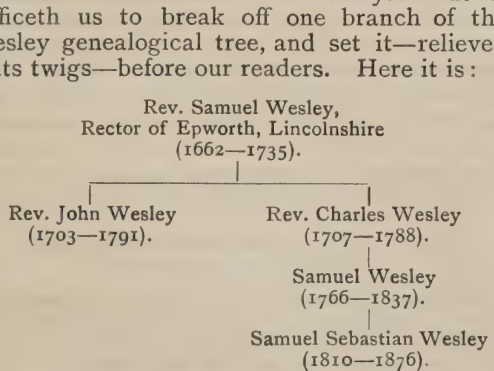
SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

The name of Wesley is honoured wherever the English language is spoken. In the realm of English Church Music it shines with a peculiar brightness undimmed by the ravages of time, and, in the words of Carlyle, "not as a kindled lamp only, but rather as a natural luminary shining by the gift of heaven." The man who could conceive a masterpiece such as "The Wilderness," and was able to enrich the Church song of the common people with a hymn-tune like "Aurelia," is no ordinary mortal. Thus it has come to pass that not only in the stately cathedrals of this fair land of ours, but in innumerable churches and chapels of Great Britain, Greater Britain, and the United States of America, the strains of Samuel Sebastian Wesley have touched the hearts and uplifted the souls of countless worshippers of all sections of the Christian Church.

FORBEARS.

Biographers of the musician-Wesleys have hitherto dwelt upon the illustrious members of collateral branches of the family. But it sufficeth us to break off one branch of the Wesley genealogical tree, and set it—relieved of its twigs—before our readers. Here it is:



The first of the above Wesleys was the father of two very eminent sons: (1) John Wesley, the founder of "The Society of the People called Methodists"—better known as "Wesleyans"—whose religious zeal has spread even unto the uttermost parts of the earth, and (2) Charles Wesley, the hymn writer—he is said to have written 6,500 hymns—whose name will long be preserved from the shades of oblivion by such well-beloved lyrics as "Jesus, Lover of my soul," and "Hark! the herald angels sing." The second son of Charles, named Samuel after his grandfather, was not only a really great musician, but, as the Scotch folk would say, "a man o' pairts." Moreover, was he not the great propagandist of the music of John Sebastian Bach in this country? Those who have any doubt upon that subject may be invited to peruse a series of articles on "Bach's music in England," which appeared in this journal from September to December, 1896. The son of "Old Sam" Wesley, as he came to be called, forms the subject of this biographical sketch. Truly a goodly company of forbears, and any believer in the saying that "genius skips a generation," may derive what satisfaction he can from the above pedigreeic fact.

Samuel Sebastian Wesley, son of Samuel Wesley, was born in London, August 14, 1810. He was named Sebastian after his father's revered idol, John Sebastian Bach. Letters from "Old Sam" containing such expressions as "little boy blue," "Sammy sixpence," furnish proof that the boy was a great favourite with his father.

A CHAPEL ROYAL CHORISTER.

Young Sam was reared in an atmosphere of music. He received his earliest instruction from his father, though he was undoubtedly more or less self-taught. "I had been brought up by my father with great views," he wrote in his sixtieth year, "and little doings disgust me. I mean by little doings, little musical compositions." The statement that he was educated at Christ's Hospital (the Blue-coat School) is not confirmed by the records of that charity. Moreover, an "old Blue," in the person of the late Mr. Frederick Cox, C.C. (born in 1809), had no recollection of a schoolfellow named Wesley, and his (Mr. Cox's) father was a personal friend of the Rev. Charles Wesley. Master Sam is stated to have become one of the Children of the Chapel Royal in 1819. There are records of the admittance of the Gentlemen of the Chapel at that time, but not of the Children, therefore this date cannot be verified. Wesley, as one of the Children, would come under the tender mercies of Mr. William Hawes, the Almoner, with whom, at his residence, 7, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, he probably lived. Like Dr. Hopkins in later years, young Wesley was undoubtedly made to do extra duty at St. Paul's Cathedral, Mr. Hawes being also Almoner of the St. Paul's choristers.

BRIGHTON AND ROSSINI.

Wesley being a good solo boy, was one of the chosen few who went to Brighton week by week to sing in the private chapel of the Pavilion on Sundays during the sojourn of His Majesty King George IV. at his marine abode. One of the earliest appearances of Wesley's name in print is to be found in the Morning Post of March 11 and 17, 1823, under the Court News from Brighton. Wesley was then twelve years of age.

Master Wesley, from His Majesty's Choir at the Royal Chapel, St. James's, took the soprano and leading parts in the anthem, &c., with sweet and divine effect.

Master Wesley was included in the new choir.

But a still more interesting reference is contained in the same journal of December 30, 1823:—

The soprano of Master Wesley was remarkably clear; his shake was open, his every intonation distinct and correct. The King's Band, with Mr. Attwood at the organ, were on duty.

The anthem was "O Lord, our Governor," but the name of its composer is not stated. On that occasion Rossini was on a visit to the First Gentleman in Europe, and at a concert on the following (Monday) evening, young Wesley was a fellow performer with the composer of "Il Barbiere." The King was so pleased with the boy's singing at the chapel services that he presented him with a gold watch. In a typically boyish letter to his mother Master Sam thus refers to his habiliments:—

Dear Mother,

I write to let you know that I am going to Brighton next Saturday week, so I hope you will let me have a new coat, as this is to (!) small. Let me know if you will let me have it by Michelmore. Don't forget to send my box and those wooden things. . . . I hope you will send me word about the coat, as I should not like to go in the same one as I did last year. Mind you send those bits of wood out of the Catherine wheels.

I remain, your affectionate son,

S. S. Wesley.

Mrs. Wesley, Euston Street, Euston Square (near the plumbers and glaziers), New Road.

In a letter to his father, in addressing which he imitates the characteristic flourish of "Old Sam's" signature, he says: "I have not seen the Bandit yet. I should be very glad if I should never see him again." There is no clue as to the identity of this "Bandit.'

First Organ Appointment at the Age of Fifteen.

In 1826 (not 1827, as is always stated) Wesley, aged fifteen, obtained his first organ appointment. A little note, bearing the post-mark date "March 25, 1826," written to Mr. Emett, a friend of the family, thus records the fact:—

Dear Sir,

I write to let you know I have been appointed organist of St. James's Chapel, Hampstead Road. My father goes to Cambridge on Monday. I hope Mrs. Emett and your daughters are well. Pray come and see us soon.

S. Wesley.

On January 12, 1829, Wesley was elected, by open vestry, organist of the Parish Church of St. Giles's, Camberwell. There were twelve candidates, and although so very young—eighteen years of age—he was "decidedly superior to the others." He had a distinguished brother-organist close by in the person of Thomas Adams (the W. T. Best of his day), who was organist of the neighbouring church of St. George's, Camberwell. In the same year, probably upon the death of Benjamin Jacob, Wesley became organist of St. John's Church, Waterloo Road. Unfortunately there are no records in existence which would throw light upon Wesley's appointment to, or connection with this church. The same tale has to be told in regard to Hampton Church, to the organistship of which Wesley is said to have been appointed in "1830." But as the church was then being rebuilt, and was not re-opened till September 1, 1831, the latter date is probably more correct. The tradition is that Wesley was attracted to Hampton (where he was probably Sunday evening organist only) because of the fishing prospects which the quiet Thames-side village afforded. Writing to Mr. W. H. Blanch, author of "Ye Parish of Camerwell" (1875), on November 25, 1874, Wesley gives the following piece of autobiographical information:—

> "I made a mistake when I said I held the organ posts at Camberwell, St. John's, Waterloo Road, and Hampton simultaneously. Hampstead Road Chapel was my first post after leaving the Chapel Royal choir as a boy; but I held Camberwell and Hampton together for some time, having resigned St. John's, Waterloo Road, and the Hampstead Road Chapel, there being a fuss about my holding three posts together."

Theatrical Experiences.

Thus we have traced Wesley's organ appointments up to his Hereford period. One or two incidents of his last years in London—1829-1832—must now be recorded. First, the curious and generally unknown fact that at one time Samuel Sebastian Wesley conducted a theatre band! One of several playbills (kindly placed at our disposal by Mr. Burnham Horner) furnishes the necessary information:—

Theatre Royal, English Opera House, Strand

[now the Lyceum Theatre].

This Evening, Monday, June 29, 1829, will be presented a Comick Opera, the music from the masterly compositions of Mozart, called Tit for Tat, or the tables turned! altered and adapted from the Cosi Fan Tutte.

The whole of the musick arranged and produced under the superintendence of Mr. Hawes. The choruses conducted by Mr. S. Wesley, Jun.

Wesley not only conducted the choruses, but his name appears in a list of the band, thus: "Pianoforte, Mr. S. Wesley, Jun.," therefore he practically conducted the "comick opera." Three years later—on July 30, 1832, and three weeks after Wesley was elected organist of Hereford Cathedral—this "English Opera Company," then at the Royal Olympic Theatre, Newcastle Street, Strand, produced "a new Melo-drama, called the Dilosk Gatherer, or Eagle's Nest [written by Fitzball]. The vocal music selected by Mr. Hawes. The Melo-dramatick music by Mr. S. S. Wesley!" The Theatrical Observer, in a notice of the play, said: "Messrs. Hawes and S. S. Wesley claim the honour of composing the music; but, to our thinking, it is scarcely to the reputation of either of those gentlemen." Notwithstanding this adverse criticism, it would be extremely interesting to see a specimen of Wesley's "Melo-dramatick music." In later years he told a favourite pupil that it was the great ambition of his life to write a comic opera!

For three successive seasons, 1830-1832, Wesley was organist at the Lenten oratorios (so-called) given at Drury Lane Theatre under Sir Henry Bishop's conductorship. On one of these occasions—March 30, 1832—a "new quartette, Benedictus," composed by S. S. Wesley, was performed.

"God save the Queen" variations.

In regard to other incidents of his ante-Cathedral career, we find that Samuel Sebastian accompanied his father to Bristol in October, 1829, for the re-opening of the organ in St. Mary Redcliffe church, after its rebuilding by Mr. Vowles. The elder Wesley was announced as "The celebrated extempore Fuguist and Editor of the works of the Immortal Sebastian Bach." Young Sam not only played a duet on the organ with his father, but wrote his masterly variations on "God save the Queen" for that organ re-opening. The Bristol Gazette of October 8, 1829, thus eulogistically records the event:—

> The great praise of Mr. W. and his able and interesting Son, who occasionally accompanied him in a Duet, and gave also God save the King, with variations of his own composition, is, that to that powerful instrument, the Organ, they have far beyond their compeers,
> "Enlarged the former narrow bounds
> And added length to solemn sounds."

In September, 1830, the Harmonicon, the only musical journal of the day, contained a short waltz, of which the following is the opening strain:—

WALTZ

Composed and presented to the Harmonicon

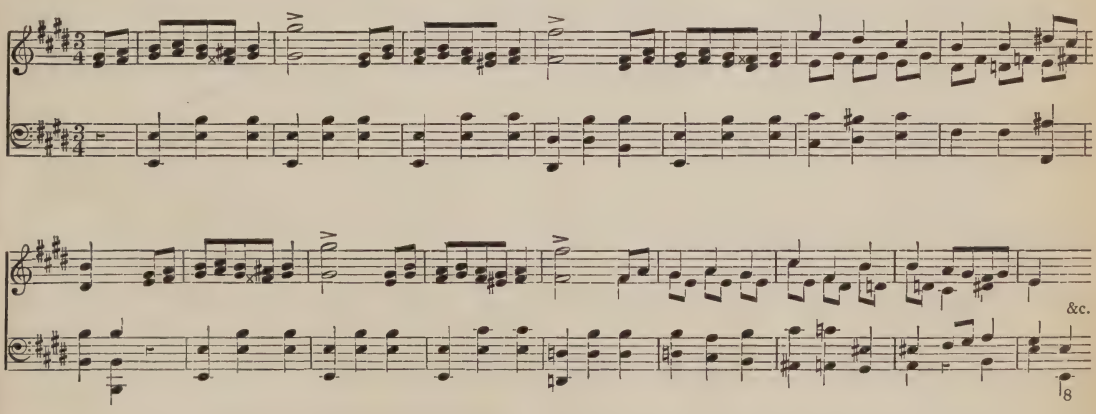
By S. Sebn. Wesley.



Fishing in the Commercial Docks.

A fishing ticket, admitting "Mr. S. S. Wesley" to the piscatorial privileges of the Commercial Docks, from June 9 to December 31, 1830, is extant, which shows that Wesley pursued his rod-and-line hobby even in London. But the fishes have doubtless long ago taken their departure from the Commercial Docks! At this time he composed a somewhat remarkable "Air with variations, in E," for the pianoforte. The theme is the quintessence of melody, and the variations, by no means easy to play, are exceedingly ingenious and highly interesting. The piece is dedicated to J. B. Cramer, of whom Wesley, who was an excellent pianoforte player, may have been a pianoforte pupil. An anthem, "O God, whose nature and property," "sung at St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster," and reviewed in the Harmonicon of September, 1831, was the presage of those alpine-like compositions with which the name of Wesley is so worthily associated.

Organist of Hereford Cathedral.

Thus far we have endeavoured to gather up the threads of Wesley's early career—the first twenty-two years of his life—which was spent in his native London. With the year 1832 he entered upon that Cathedral life which came to be a period of storm and stress to him for nearly forty years. He had almost attained the age of twenty-two when he became organist of Hereford Cathedral. The Chapter books thus record his appointment:—

1832. July 10. Mr. Wesley, the organist of Hampton Church, near London, was elected to succeed Dr. Whitfeld as organist of this cathedral at a salary of fifty-two pounds (and eight pounds paid by the custos and vicars) and the addition of forty pounds to take place after the decease of Dr. Whitfeld.

At the time of his appointment the Cathedral organ was undergoing important alterations at the hands of Messrs. Bishop and Son. Through the kindness of that Firm we are enabled to give from their books particulars of these alterations, &c.:—

1832. September 11 and October 12. Key pedals from CC, two octaves. New Swell from 4-ft. C to F, with Open, Stopd., Principal, Trumpet, and Hautboy. Choir action altered to form a bass. Steadying wind. Coupler Sw. to G. O. 12th, Tierce, rank six. GG added to Bass, and D E F to Treble in Choir and Great. Re-voicing. New pedal action. Clarabella, Cremona, from F. New keys, three sets. 14 pedal pipes from CCC to meet GG and F at top.

Wesley seems to have arrived at Hereford in October, 1832. From a letter to his mother in London we get some glimpses of his solitary life in the Cathedral city:—

I have taken comfortable lodgings near the Cathedral for the present. I think it probable that soon I shall be allowed rooms in the College here. I should then have to get furniture. I find that much teaching may be had within fifteen miles of Hereford. I should of course have been better pleased to have lived quietly, without this tiresome and degrading occupation. The salary at the Cathedral is, however, insufficient. . . . I must hire or keep a horse when I commence, as the pupils live many miles away and apart. I shall not do any duty at the Cathedral until the sixth of November. The organ is being enlarged considerably. My payment will however be the same; I am therefore glad of the liberty. If I can afford it I think of going a short distance into Wales. . . .

Hawes, Atkins, etc., have been down here giving a concert at which I played a pianoforte and violin duet with Loder of Bath. We got on tolerably well, but I hate playing the mountebank on these occasions. Nothing is to me so pleasant as to join in the performance of good music; but when a certain quantity of twaddle is to be played that some imposter may beg money, I'd rather be far off than mix in the mess. The "concert" was for a resident singer of Hereford. I got nothing for my share. . . .

I have not been able to go and buy poultry yet; tell me when you want it most. Fine geese cost about three and sixpence, fowls two and threepence a couple, ducks in proportion. . . .

"I WISH I WAS A DEAN!"

Subsequent home letters state that he was "getting very melancholy" at Hereford, which he found to be "very dull." They contain references to the crippled state of his finances, to domestic affairs at home, and advice on business matters, &c., such as would come from an experienced man of the world. "Our Dean is made a Canon of Windsor," he says, "which adds about 14 hundred a year to his income!! I wish I was a Dean!"

In due time—on November 6, 1832, and the date is important—the organ in the Cathedral was re-opened. The Hereford Journal, in recording the event, said:—

Yesterday, being the first day of the Audit, the organ in our Cathedral, which has been for the last six months repairing and tuning by Mr. Bishop, of London, was opened under the conduct of Mr. S. Sebastian Wesley, the organist. The Audit was never more fully attended on any former occasion, and never were the full powers of the beautiful instrument more successfully and skilfully developed, very much to the admiration and gratification of all present.

"THE WILDERNESS": ITS HISTORY.

We now come to an unusually interesting episode in the life of Samuel Sebastian Wesley—the history of his famous anthem "The Wilderness." Although most of the available evidence is of a circumstantial nature, we venture to think it is conclusive. The present folio edition of the anthem states that it was "composed for the re-opening of a cathedral organ, 1831." But this must be a misprint for "1832," the reference undoubtedly being to Hereford. Moreover, it should be borne in mind that this information does not appear on the earlier editions of 1840 and 1853, for a reason which will presently be given.

In the year anterior to Wesley's appointment to Hereford, Miss Maria Hackett, "the choristers' friend," had instituted an annual prize of a gold medal, value five guineas, "for the best original composition in sacred vocal music." This reward she named "The Gresham Prize Medal," after the Gresham Professor of Music. For the competition of 1832, about a month after the re-opening of the organ at Hereford, Wesley sent in his "Wilderness." Writing to his mother in London, on December 15, 1832, he says:—

Call on Monday morning at the coach office for a parcel It is an anthem I have written for a prize in London, and must be delivered Monday, or it is too late. . . . Pray don't fail to meet the coach and open the parcel when you get it, and then do as I will tell you in the letter. You must keep father at home, as he will have to write something in a letter, it is only just to write a motto in Latin. You had better mention it at once. Tell him I wish it to be "Let justice be done," or "Weigh and consider," or anything he chooses—only in Latin it must be. . . .

Yours, S. S. Wesley.

If this music is not sent on Monday I am too late.

The young competitor's letter is duly endorsed, in his father's inimitable "pothooks and hangers," with the words, "Fiat justitia."

A fortnight later he wrote as follows:—

. . . At present I don't give a lesson. I am writing some voluntaries that I must sell. . . . If you like, you may treat me with a copy of this month's Harmonicon, it will be published the day you receive this. I suppose an account of the Gresham Prize will be in that. If any body else gets it, you must go and fetch my manuscript back.

That the anthem arrived too late for that year's competition (1832) is proved by the following letter (now in the possession of Mr. John S. Bumpus) written by Mr. Alfred Novello, with whom the compositions had to be deposited, to Miss Hackett, the donor of the prize:—

London, 67, Frith Street, Soho,
Nov. 12, 1833.

Madam,

One of the compositions sent in last year, "The Wilderness and the solitary place," was too late to be received; but the author understands that it is still in the umpires' hands, and he is anxious to let it be a candidate this year. If you would be so kind as to make the necessary enquiries it would add to the many already conferred on, Madam,

Your obliged and obedient servt.,
J. Alfred Novello.

"'THE WILDERNESS'—NOT CATHEDRAL MUSIC!"

Another letter, dated "November 30, 1833," to Miss Hackett, from R. J. S. Stevens, one of the adjudicators, thus records his opinion of the composition: "One copy is written so close, that I have had much trouble in understanding it. It is a clever thing, but not cathedral music ('The Wilderness')." You were right, Mr. Stevens. 'Tis a "clever thing"; but posterity has decided that it is "cathedral music." Wesley failed, however, to get the prize, which, assuming that it competed for the 1833 medal, was awarded to John Goss for his anthem "Have mercy upon me, O God." There is a tradition that Dr. Crotch, Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, one of the judges, drew on the margin of Wesley's manuscript a caricature of a boy trying to sing the high A in "and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

It may be convenient if we complete the history of "The Wilderness" before proceeding further with biographical matters. Shortly after his defeat Wesley seems to have sent his anthem to an unnamed music publisher, as there is extant a draft of a letter in his handwriting couched in the following terms:—

Hereford, March 9, 1833.

Dear Sir,

I send you the anthem I spoke of. Will you print it?

The Dean offers to have it performed at Windsor before the Queen, and to take me to accompany it, if I choose to go, which would be expensive. I should dedicate it to the Dean—he offered to permit me to present it to Her Majesty, but I prefer his name—if you think it worth printing. I will send you the title-page. Let me have a letter if you print. If you do not, oblige me by sending the thing to No. 8, King's Row, Pentonville, directed to me.

Believe me, truly yours,
S. S. Wesley.

GAUNTLETT AND WESLEY ON "THE WILDERNESS."

"The thing," otherwise "The Wilderness," remained unpublished for seven years. It, however, received honourable mention in an article contributed to the Musical World of August 5, 1836, by Dr. Gauntlett, on "Ecclesiastical composers of the present age." Gauntlett said:—

We beg to refer our readers to example A [the last seventeen bars of the chorus "And the ransomed of the Lord," from Wesley's "Wilderness"—not quite correctly quoted, by the way]. It is taken from a five-part chorus in an anthem which forms one of six composed to some of the most poetical portions of Isaiah, by the younger Wesley. The chorus is in E, with 4 sharps, and is formed on a fugue, the subject of which affords a fine opportunity for the florid sequence. There is a glorious pedal point upon the dominant of the key, in which the five parts are interwoven with consummate skill; and immediately afterwards the passage we have quoted follows, with which the point concludes, and a slow movement succeeds in the tonic. It speaks for itself, and needs no commendation of ours.

"But," continued Gauntlett, "we would have given a dozen Gresham medals to have written the point on the E, in the 8th bar" [i.e., the 10th bar from the end of the movement]. In a foot-note Gauntlett rather satirically says: "As a hint to the competitors of the Gresham Prize, we beg to quote the words of this composition, 'The Wilderness,' &c."

Wesley's own opinion of the adjudicators for the Gresham Prize is thus expressed in the trenchant preface to his Service in E, published in 1845. He says:—

> "But Musical Art, notwithstanding its various claims on the gratitude of society, especially as regards its connection with the worship of the Church, this Art, with reference to the higher branches of composition, has not a single instance of liberal encouragement to point to, NOT ONE of any kind whatever! A consideration of this circumstance should, perhaps, deter the veriest Tyro from again entering into competition for the 'Gresham Prize.' The few who have already done so, especially those who have gained the 'Prize,' are sufficiently punished by the fact of one of the two umpires employed to select the best Candidate having declared that the awards hitherto made have ever been in opposition to his judgment; for that his colleague would always have his own way, and so, he would have nothing more to do with the matter."

Poor Wesley! He was very sore, and justly so, at his defeat with "The Wilderness."

THE VARIOUS EDITIONS OF "THE WILDERNESS."

In the year 1840 Wesley, then at Exeter, evidently intended to publish, by subscription, "Six anthems." An advertisement (Musical World, October 15, 1840) stated that "The Work is prefaced by some remarks on the present state of Musical Art as connected with Divine Worship, and the sentiments of the Musical Profession and the Public on the subject." Only two anthems and a part of a third seem to have been issued, but not the preface. One of these anthems was "The Wilderness," the Leeds copy of which, containing additions in Wesley's own hand, we have examined. Its title-page is—

The Wilderness, and the solitary place. | The 35th chapter of Isaiah | adapted to music | by | Samuel S. Wesley. | Price (blank).

No publisher's name is given, and the music, with a few trifling exceptions, is the same as that in the current version. Two differences, however, are worthy of notice. That exquisitely poetical passage, "But the redeemed shall walk there," is, in the earliest edition, written in notes of half their present value, and without a ritard :—

In the accompaniment to the last seventeen bars of the chorus, "But the ransomed of the Lord," the chords are much fuller, and the pedal part, written on a separate stave, is in octaves.

What may be considered as the second edition of "The Wilderness" appeared in the volume of twelve anthems published by subscription in 1853 and dedicated to Dean Garnier, of Winchester. This was probably an amplification of the "Six anthems" abortively issued in 1840. A proof copy of the third edition (1871), in the possession of the present writer, contains some characteristic marginal comments in Wesley's handwriting. In reply to the proof reader's remark, "1st and 2nd in unison?" (twenty-six bars from the end), Wesley writes: "I don't know what this refers to, S. W. Oh, it means treble and alto. All right."

A MYSTERY SOLVED.

The question may be asked: "Why did Wesley add that foot-note "composed for the re-opening of a cathedral organ, 1831," to the third and not to the previous editions of his "Wilderness"? The answer is that he probably wished to remove from the public mind the reproach of its having failed to obtain the Gresham Prize. That "1831" is a lapsus calami for "1832" is largely confirmed by a letter in the Musical World of October 9, 1852, from the late Dr. William Spark, Wesley's pupil, who said that "The Wilderness" was "composed . . . for the re-opening of Hereford Cathedral organ, which had been rebuilt by Bishop."

Thus it has practically been proved that Wesley, at the age of twenty-two, and while waiting for the re-building of the Hereford Cathedral organ, composed his "Wilderness," and that it was first performed there on November 6, 1832. Moreover, may we not surmise that he actually made that journey into Wales, and that while sojourning amongst the "solitary places" of that picturesque country, where "waters break out" in mountain torrents, his genius was stimulated to conceive one of the most wonderful and beautiful anthems ever written—whether regarded from the point of view of its technical construction, its originality, its melodic beauty, its masterly organ accompaniment, its depth of expression, and, above all, its ideal poetic imagination—all of which combine to stamp "The Wilderness" as a masterpiece of the highest rank!

THE CHOIR SCHOOL OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

An incident of the choristership days of Sir John Goss, organist of St. Paul's, 1838-1872, may be retold as an introduction to this article, and to furnish a contrast between the old and the new treatment of cathedral choristers. Goss (born in 1800) was one of the Children of the Chapel Royal. Small of stature as a man, he was doubtless "a tiny mite" of a boy. Out of his non-superabundant pocket-money he had purchased a copy of Handel's organ concertos. One day, while walking across the schoolroom with his precious possession under his arm, his master accosted him with the enquiry, "What is that you have there?" "Please, sir," replied little Goss in trembling tones, "it's only Handel's concertos, and I thought I should like to play them." "Oh! only Handel's concertos," replied the master; "and pray, sir, did you come here to learn to play, or to sing?" "To sing, sir," answered little Johnnie Goss, utterly discomfitted. The master (if so honoured a term can be applied in such a case) then seized the book, which Goss never beheld again, and literally crowned his argument by hitting the little fellow on the head with the pocket-money purchased volume. "Brutal," is the natural exclamation of all human-hearted men and women. Aye, gentle reader, and this is not an isolated case. But how very different the present-day methods of treating the choristers in our cathedral choir schools. Are they not cared for and nurtured with an affection closely akin to parental love? Some such reflections were vividly impressed upon us during a visit we had the privilege and pleasure of paying last month to the Choir School of St. Paul's Cathedral. This substantial building, erected during the beneficent reign of Sir John Stainer, is located in Carter Lane, and thus reposes under the shadow of Sir Christopher Wren's noble masterpiece.

First, a few words in regard to the history, by no means unbroken, of this Choir School. It is the most ancient choral grammar school in the country, as it dates from the time of Edward the Confessor, and it is mentioned by Ingulphus. "Founded anew in 1108 by Belmeis, Bishop of London, its revenues were considerably augmented by Richard I., Henry III., and Edward II. The school property seems to have escaped unscathed through all the troubles of the early Anglican Church, and was spared at the time of the Reformation."* As is the case with many similar foundations of an ecclesiastical nature, the school funds were misappropriated, with the result that the school, per se, ceased to exist. The choristers were boarded at different houses, one of them being "The Golden Cup," situated in St. Paul's Churchyard, with "Jerry" Clark (circa 1700). It was not until Miss Maria Hackett,

* "The Organists and Composers of St. Paul's Cathedral." By John S. Bumpus. 1891.

"the choristers' friend," began, in 1811, to wage war with the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's that attention was called to the shamefully neglected condition of the eight Cathedral choristers and the misappropriation of the school funds. With unwearying patience and dauntless energy Miss Hackett not only unceasingly "pegged away" at all Cathedral authorities, but made known her views with commendable pertinacity in several publications. Although more than sixty years elapsed before the seed she had sown began to bear fruit, yet this good soul had the supreme satisfaction, in her ninetieth year, of going over the present school building when it was nearing completion. How her warm, child-loving heart, so soon to be stilled in death, must have leapt for joy at the prospect of seeing the dream of her long life fulfilled at St. Paul's.

(From a photograph taken in 1857, belonging to Mr. John S. Bumpus, who also possesses all Miss Hackett's letters and papers relating to the St. Paul's Choir School.)

And now to describe—or attempt to describe—a practice of the St. Paul's choristers. This important feature in their "daily round" takes place in the afternoon, from 2.15 to about 3.30, of every week-day, except Thursday, which is a well-earned half-holiday.

The boys are trained by Mr. Charles Macpherson, the sub-organist of the Cathedral and an old chorister of St. Paul's. Sir George Martin, as on the occasion of our visit, now and then looks in, and, of course, he conducts the full rehearsal of boys and men at the Cathedral. The boys—their full complement is forty—are seated at their desks in the lofty and airy schoolroom. The practice begins with scales, sung in various keys, to the open vowel "ah." These scales receive much variety of treatment. Each degree is sung to the duration of four slow beats, then to three beats, and so on. A scale covering a compass of two octaves (A to A) is sung in one breath without the least semblance of a break in the voice. An upward scale is begun ff and finishes pp on the high B flat, and vice versâ. One cannot help being struck with these tone contrasts, which become, in fact, part of the boys' very natures. The same remark is applicable to the strong feeling for rhythm which permeates their very life blood, so to speak. Like beings rhythmically possessed, they not only beat time with their hands, but almost with their bodies to everything they sing. How wonderfully do these boys demonstrate the remark made to the present writer by Dr. Hans Richter, that "Melody is the flesh, but rhythm is the bones of music." Go on, good boys, in your rhythmic pathway, now and in all your future music-makings. The world of music needs you.

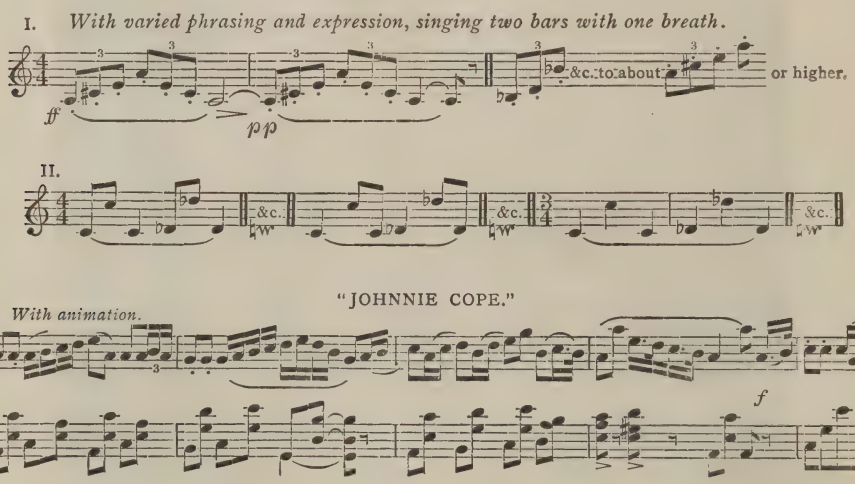
The magnificent tone produced by the boys is a marked characteristic of their excellent training. The vast area of the Cathedral demands that the tone should be "full"; but in attaining this indispensability, it would be quite possible to force the voices. Not so at St. Paul's. It is, indeed, a striking feature of the boys' singing that their tone is even throughout the compass of two octaves, and, moreover, that it is so completely under control. And then above and beyond mere technicalities, how thoroughly they enjoy their work. To them it is no dreaded wearisome task, but a real pleasure — even their practice hour becomes a feast of soul and song. When they are singing a specially "nice" exercise, the room and its furniture seem almost to shake with the vibratory enthusiasm of these energetic and music-loving little men. The "bread and butter" of the exercises used are those contained in Sir George Martin's "Choir boy training" primer. These exercises are interspersed from time to time with many varieties as occasion may require, or to correct any faults which may begin to show themselves. Specimens of these "extra" studies we are enabled to give through the kindness of Mr. Macpherson:—



The music for the service is then rehearsed, Mr. Macpherson leaving the old Broadwood grand upon which he has accompanied the exercises, and taking his place at the desk in the middle of the room. Gibbons in F is sung without accompaniment, while Mr. Macpherson sings the bass part, or takes up an alto or tenor lead, the boys beating time with their hands while they sing. Mr. Macpherson, in pointing out the imitative features of the old service, says it is like a puzzle—"one of Cruickshank's puzzles"—whereupon there is much laughter, and all eyes are turned towards that young gentleman (who, by the way, is a son of Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank), while he modestly smiles at this mark of puzzle attention. Sir George Martin has in the meantime come in. He passes from desk to desk, bending over the boys as they sing. The difficult eight-part motet, "O Thou most merciful Jesu," by Dr. F. H. Champneys, to be sung at the approaching Evensong, is next sung. This is followed by the solo and chorus, "O look not down," from Spohr's "Calvary." The solo is taken by Cyril Winn, a grandson of the late Mr. William Winn, the well-known former vicar-choral of St. Paul's. "Curiously enough," observes Sir George Martin, "young Winn has exactly the same kind of voice and production as his grandfather had." Then follows the chorus "Hosanna to the Son," from Sullivan's "Light of the World." "What is that like?" asks Sir George Martin, referring to the counter-subject of the fugue. "Gibbons's 'Hosanna,' sir," promptly replies a boy. "That's right. Sir Arthur Sullivan was a chorister at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, and consequently was very familiar with Gibbons's 'Hosanna.' It was therefore nice of him in later years to take the Gibbons subject that he knew so well and so cleverly entwine it with his own 'Hosanna.'" The rehearsal is concluded by a very beautiful rendering of the alto solo, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord," from Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, which is sung by all the boys in unison. This proves to be a veritable triumph of time and tune over abnormal difficulties. But there is not the slightest indication of any indecision or false intonation. Every entry is unfalteringly attacked, and every interval is sung absolutely in tune without the slightest hesitation. Sir George Martin beats time with his hand, but there is really no necessity for him so to do, as every boy is most carefully beating his "twelve in a bar" as if to the manner born. It is no wonder to learn that these boys love the Passion Music of old Bach.

After the rehearsal we make an inspection of the school premises with Sir George Martin as a cicerone. He says that the total cost of the building was about £20,000. It is interesting to learn that it is erected almost on the site of the original school of Anglo-Saxon foundation. It was opened January 26, 1874, and has accommodation for forty boys. On the ground floor is the spacious dining hall, which adjoins the equally well-proportioned schoolroom wherein the practices are held. The music-room contains a duplicate set of the music used at the services. Thus the necessity is avoided of having to carry the copies to and from the Cathedral. The head boy is the librarian, and the music is most carefully arranged. In this room are three cells, technically known as "studies," where individual boys can practise. On the second and third floors, in addition to the under-masters' rooms, are two large dormitories such as are seldom seen in schools. They are unusually wide, and, besides having plenty of cubic space, they present a very bright and comfortable appearance. Sir George Martin was one of the earliest inhabitants of the building, even before the boys came into residence. A class-room has for him some pleasant associations, as in that apartment—the sitting-room of his bachelor days—he wrote most of the Church music which is so favourably associated with his name.

Not the least interesting feature of this substantial and admirably appointed building is the playground upon its roof, as shown in our illustration (taken by the Photochrom Co., Ltd.), where the boys, like "sparrows upon the house-tops," play their games with all the zest of public-school boys. This unique playground is caged in with wire-work to prevent a cricket or football from making the acquaintance of a pedestrian's head in the street below. This wire-work cagination was due, in the first instance, to Sir George Martin, who, on looking down upon the school roof from the top of the Cathedral one day, saw a boy walking along the parapet. He knew that a fall from such a height must almost certainly prove fatal; thereupon the present safe arrangement for boy, ball, and pedestrian was adopted. "Many a game of cricket have I played with the boys up here," observes Sir George as we stand on chimney-pot common.

The school is under the able head mastership of the Rev. N. M. Morgan-Brown, who is assisted by three under-masters for general subjects. Each boy costs the Dean and Chapter about £70 per annum. Their education is free of all charges, parents having only to provide clothes, travelling and pocket-money, and we are quite sure that the latter may be expended in Handel's organ concertos without their being forfeited or used for the administration of a knock on the head! The curriculum includes Religious Knowledge, Classics, Elementary Mathematics, and the ordinary English subjects. Besides the regular instruction given to all the boys in singing and the theory of music, an arrangement is made by which (upon payment of a small fee) a limited number of boys can have private lessons on the pianoforte or violin. Four of the City Companies provide scholarships to enable deserving choristers to continue their education elsewhere after leaving St. Paul's, and in addition to these splendid advantages the Dean and Chapter have a Fund in hand which will be available for assisting former choristers, later on, to the Universities.

Examinations for admission into the school are held twice or thrice a year, according to the number of vacancies. The boys not only receive an excellent education, but they are well cared for both physically and morally. They have a private field in the suburbs for their out-door games on the weekly half-holiday. Another recreative feature is a "Choristers' Magazine," issued quarterly, and bearing the appropriate title of "Excelsior." Its pages record the usual sports so dear to all boys, including reports of "tugs-of-war" between Decani and Cantoris, and cricket matches with the Westminster Abbey boys, &c. No wonder that the St. Paul's boys seem to be supremely happy in their chorister life. It may be truly said that "the lines have fallen unto them in pleasant places," notwithstanding the fact that their lot is cast in the heart of the City of London.

In conclusion, we may, in congratulating the Headmaster, Sir George Martin, and Mr. Charles Macpherson upon so admirably equipped a choristers' school as St. Paul's, recall, by way of contrast, the Goss incident related at the beginning of this article. In this connection we venture to propound a profound riddle—intended only for the benefit (?) of the choristers themselves.

Q. "What is the difference between the organist of St. Paul's and the head-hitting master of Sir John Goss?"

A. "One is a Martin, the other was a martinet."

HINTS ON CONDUCTING.

By Frederic H. Cowen.

There is no branch of music which exacts from its disciples so great a combination of qualities as the art of conducting an orchestra. I cannot help fancying that, up to comparatively recent times, the performance of orchestral works must have been of a more or less perfunctory nature, the conductor being satisfied if the notes were correctly played and the pianos and fortes properly observed; any favourable impression the audience may have formed must have been due more to the intrinsic merit of the works than to any real artistic interpretation of them.

Probably Beethoven himself never heard any of his immortal symphonies performed with anything like the perfection of detail or realisation of their grandeur which is revealed to us now-a-days through the medium of our greatest conductors. All, indeed, is changed now, and the conductor, to excel in his art, must not only possess the necessary technical requirements, but also the artistic gifts of the virtuoso, combined with those innate personal qualities which go to make leaders of men.

In a paper which I recently read at a Conference of musicians, and which was reprinted in this journal, I stated that, although real excellence could not be hoped for without the possession of all those qualities I have just mentioned, yet I thought a great deal might be taught and learnt. To this end I gave out a few hints as to the way in which the would-be conductor might acquire the rudiments—the grammar, so to speak, of his art—and thus avoid the many pitfalls that lie in the path of the inexperienced.

I propose in this article to further enlarge upon these hints—in as far as the space allotted to me will allow—and to state what I consider to be the first principles of conducting and the equipment necessary or desirable for those who may wish to follow the art. Naturally the first essential is

THE BEAT.

This should invariably be clear, so that the divisions of each bar can be easily understood and followed. It should be short and decisive in the forte passages, from the elbow downwards, not with the whole arm. (Much greater verve and accent are obtainable in this way.) In the pianos it should be quiet and rather more swaying, allowing the wrist free play. The baton is incontestably the chief medium through which the conductor conveys his interpretation of the work to the performers; light and shade, phrasing, poetry of conception can and ought all to be indicated by it. I would, therefore, advise the student to devote himself in the first place to what, for want of a better name, I will call the "study of the stick." Let him obtain complete control over its varying movements, so that eventually, just as a pianist thinks no longer of what his fingers are doing, he may be able to forget, as it were, that he is beating time, and give naturally the right indication at the right moment, thus imparting, almost unconsciously, his ideas to the forces under him.

TEMPO.

Although most of the more modern scores are marked with the metronome, it is often a mistake to slavishly follow these indications. The metronome marks are but a guide to the general feeling and character of the piece and may prevent any serious errors, but the conductor should learn, with experience, the best tempo to adopt. A shade too slow may result in tameness; a shade too quick, in confusion; and he should be able, with a little judgment, to choose just that tempo which is likely to produce the best effect. Of course this is supposing that he has not the advantage of the composer's own ideas on the subject, or does not in any way outrage old and long-established traditions.

In the case of unfamiliar music, where there are no metronome marks, he should look carefully through the score and be guided by the signs contained therein, and such other indications as the prevalence or absence of semiquavers or demi-semiquavers, &c., which will show him whether the composer wants a fast or slow Andante, or a moderate or fiery Allegro. It is essential for a conductor to know exactly the right number of beats to give in a bar. Sometimes it may be desirable, during a bar or so, for him to give four beats instead of two, or eight instead of four; but generally speaking, throughout a movement, he should never beat four in a bar when two would suffice, or three when one would suffice.

LIGHT AND SHADE, AND PHRASING.

As I have mentioned above, the baton is undoubtedly the chief factor in the rendering of a work. Every point, every nuance should have its corresponding sign in the movement of the stick, or I should rather say that every movement of the latter should have its corresponding effect in the orchestra. Light and shade should be indicated by a decisive or quiet beat, as the case may be; accents, by strong beats on whatever part of the bar they occur; a broad phrase by a more or less broad sweep of the baton, and so on. Even the tip of the baton may sometimes be effective in suggesting a quaver or semiquaver which requires indicating, but for which a regular beat might be of too much importance. The baton should never for a moment be meaningless, but every beat throughout a piece should have its proper significance, intended by the conductor, and understood by the orchestra. The left hand may often be used with effect to subdue certain passages or parts, but at other times it should remain inactive.

KNOWLEDGE OF INSTRUMENTS.

A conductor should have a thorough knowledge of the compass and capabilities of every instrument in the orchestra, even though he be unable to play any of them. He should also know all the various effects they are capable of producing, so that he may be able at any time, if necessary, to suggest to the performer the particular way in which he wishes a note or phrase played. This applies with special force to the different methods of bowing and phrasing in the stringed instruments.

STUDY OF SCORES.

Every score should be studied thoroughly at home. To come to a rehearsal or performance with an imperfect knowledge of the music not only places the conductor at a disadvantage, but is an insult to the performers. I would not advocate conducting without book (although I cannot help thinking that the performance often gains considerably thereby) unless one possesses a first rate memory and a cool head; but at least the conductor should know his score beforehand so perfectly that he can devote all his attention to his orchestra and the effects he wishes to get out of it, instead of having to follow the music with his eye, note after note, and bar after bar, as if he were waiting to hear each sound as it occurs on paper. It is not the barometer which influences the weather, but vice versâ: an orchestra is a huge musical barometer, susceptible (or it should be) to all degrees of heat and cold, storm and sunshine, at the will of the conductor.

A good plan in studying scores, and one which I myself often adopt, is to conduct them through in imagination, see where and what effects are desirable, and the best way to obtain them, so that one may be prepared at the outset with a thorough grasp of every detail, and especially of the various necessary methods of beating in order to obtain the best results.

REHEARSING.

The whole secret of a performance lies in the rehearsals. Sometimes a good rehearsal may, from unaccountable causes, result in an indifferent performance, but there never was a good performance after an indifferent rehearsal.

A great deal is in the manner of rehearsing. A conductor should never allow a faulty point or passage to pass with the proverbial saying "it will be all right at night"; he should go over it again and again until he is satisfied with it, but having once obtained what he wants he should leave it alone. Nothing gives an orchestra more confidence and self respect than the knowledge that they are perfecting what they feel to have been imperfect, but nothing fidgets them so much as unnecessary rehearsing. For the same reason it is wearying to them to have to constantly repeat a passage in which the fault is due only to one instrument or group of instruments: these should be taken by themselves until perfect, and then, and only then, the passage repeated by the whole orchestra. A conductor should endeavour to earn the respect of his forces by showing them that he knows more than they do, and their goodwill by the way in which he imparts this knowledge to them. He should be a strict disciplinarian, never permitting unpunctuality or insubordination of any sort; but he should be just to all alike, genial and polite in manner, and should remember that his players are human beings with feelings like himself. In other words, he should show them that he is master, but a kind, if firm one. The members of an orchestra are like a number of school boys—apt to play tricks with their chief if they once recognise that they can do so with impunity.

CONDUCTING OF CHORAL WORKS.

This is distinct in some respects from orchestral conducting. There are many good chefs-d'orchestre (so far as the orchestra alone is concerned) who do not seem at their ease when directing a choir, just as there are excellent choral conductors who are out of their element so soon as they have the control of an orchestra. The addition of a mass of voices to the orchestra naturally gives the conductor a double responsibility, and the two forces have to be thought of and controlled both separately and in combination. He has to exercise greater command of resource and grasp of effect; to paint his colours, as it were, with a larger brush. He should be able to judge when to devote his attention to his chorus and when to his orchestra, but, generally speaking, it is the former which should claim the larger share. He should rehearse each force separately until it has reached the desired perfection, and then, bringing the two together, leave the details more or less to take care of themselves and seek to obtain a big general effect.

Of course what I have said with regard to orchestral conducting alone is equally applicable to the rehearsing and conducting of choral works. The same knowledge of how to use the baton; of tempi; the same study of scores; the same discipline—all are requisite. I may say that some of these qualifications, especially the use of the baton and the study of scores, are even more necessary, if possible, in choral conducting than in purely orchestral. A choir is usually a less practised body, in respect of musicianship, than an orchestra; therefore choristers require every point to be clearly put before them, their cues and attacks to be indicated, and they should be controlled as much by the eye as by the stick. Moreover, the choral conductor should possess some knowledge of the art of singing, so as to be able to give his choir useful and often desirable hints on breathing, phrasing, clear pronunciation of words, &c.

ACCOMPANYING.

My article would be incomplete without some allusion to this branch of the conductor's art. Unfortunately I have not the space to enlarge upon it as much as I should wish, though it is, without doubt, a highly important part of my subject. I must content myself with a few remarks. To excel in the accompanying of concertos and vocal music, the conductor must have not only all the technical knowledge and other qualities already mentioned, but also a certain undefinable sympathy which leads him, almost by instinct, to divine beforehand what the soloist is going to do. He must also know when to subdue his orchestra and when to give it prominence, when to lead and when to follow. In all cases (except those of vocal concerted pieces and other music requiring an ensemble of soloists) he should allow full scope for the exercise of the artist's own individuality—so long as the latter does not err through unconscious ignorance—remembering that his part in the performance is for the time being only a subordinate one.

There now remains but one attribute of the conductor to mention. All those already referred to can, in my opinion, be acquired to a greater or lesser extent, but this is an innate quality, not to be learnt or gained by experience, and without which a conductor can never attain to the very front rank. I allude to that power, that psychic force which makes all other wills subservient to the conductor's own; a certain magnetism which inspires the orchestra and compels them, almost involuntarily, to put heart and soul into their work at his bidding; a personality which makes itself felt by them at all times and, through them, by the audience, and which, like an electric spark, sends a wave of enthusiasm through performers and listeners alike. Much of this power no doubt lies in the fact that its possessor feels the music he is imparting to others; that his whole being is diffused with it (a cold, phlegmatic temperament can never make others feel what it itself does not); but even this intense love and appreciation does not entirely account for the indescribable influence over all concerned which some conductors possess.

The orchestra recognises it distinctly when it is there; the public, vaguely. The art of conducting is a very subtle thing. Many people (I speak, of course, of the masses) imagine that the mere "wagging of a stick" one way or another cannot make any very appreciable difference to the performers, so long as it marks the time for them correctly. The only way to fully convince the public of the power the baton possesses would be to have the same piece played by the same orchestra several times in immediate succession, and conducted each time by a different conductor; they would then recognise—though they might still fail to understand the reason—the influence for good or bad which he exercises over his forces.

All the remarks I have made go to prove, what I stated at the outset, that conducting is the greatest as well as the most difficult of all the executive branches of music; but to attain to even a small degree of efficiency in it is, I think, to find more immediate pleasure and artistic satisfaction than can be afforded the musician by any other branch of his art.

To those of my younger colleagues who may be allured into adopting the conductor's career, as well as to those who, with only occasional opportunities of directing an orchestra, may sometimes find themselves handicapped in their work, I offer these few hints in all modesty and good part.

Although the very front rank cannot be reached without natural gifts (how many of us ever do reach it?), yet much may be done, and a certain level of excellence attained, by study and earnestness of purpose, and my sole desire in writing this article is that the experience I have gained in later years may be of some use to those who, less fortunate in this respect than myself, may care to profit by it.

In conclusion, I append a few general maxims:—

Never conduct with gloves: it is apt to cramp the hand.

Never fasten your baton to the wrist with a cord and tassel, for the same reason.

Never stamp your feet nor beat the desk with your baton: if you cannot obtain what you want without this, you had better not be a conductor.

Never point the fingers of your left hand at the orchestra.

Never beat the second division of a 3-4 bar to the left, it looks awkward.

Know what you want always and see that you get it, even if, musically, it be not always the right thing. It is better to err from conviction than from ignorance.

Never lose your temper: "Suaviter in modo, fortiter in re" is the motto par excellence for a conductor.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

An important prize in the form of the "Liszt Scholarship" will shortly be open to competition. It entitles the successful candidate to three years' free instruction at the Royal Academy of Music, and, after that, to a yearly sum (at present about £125) to assist him or her in the extension of his or her musical experience during two years on the Continent of Europe. The forthcoming scholarship will, however, be of exceptional value, as, through a certain circumstance, the new scholar will have the benefit of seven years' accumulated income instead of the usual five; thus in all it will be worth about £350. The next competition is announced to take place on September 21, and full particulars, with a form of entry, can be obtained from the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

The Symphony in D, by Haydn, performed at the third Philharmonic concert, on the 5th ult., is one which has a somewhat interesting history. According to the late C. F. Pohl, the work was composed in 1781. It very soon obtained a hearing in London, as it appeared in the programme of a concert given for the benefit of the "Fund established for the support of Decayed Musicians and their Families" (now the Royal Society of Musicians), at the King's Theatre, on February 28, 1783. The programme of this concert included "a concerto on the grand pianoforte by Master Cramer," afterwards the famous J. B. Cramer, then in his twelfth year. There was also an overture for two orchestras by "Mr. Bach," that is, John Christian Bach, known as "the English Bach." The advertisement of the concert, in the Morning Chronicle and London Advertiser of February 26, 1783, shows how the concert customs of those days differed from those of ours. It runs thus:—

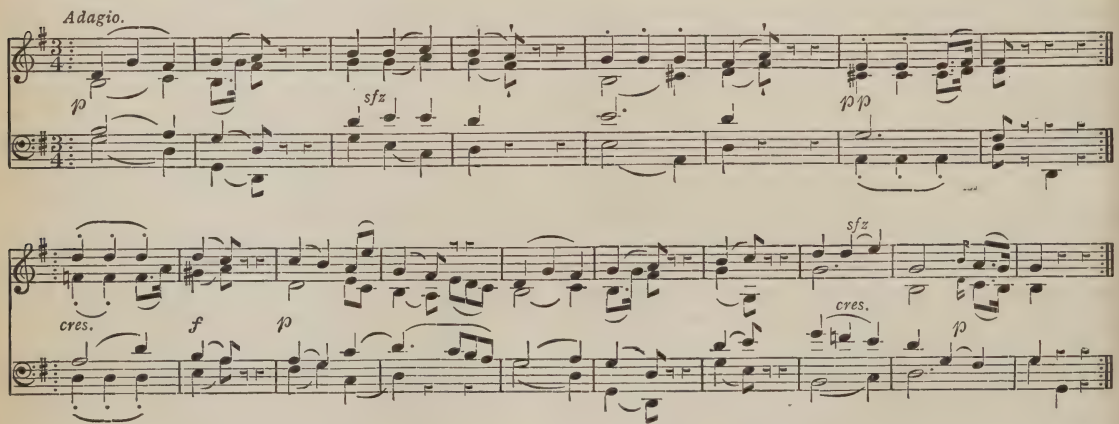
The Vocal Performers having often taken cold by sitting too long on the stage, it is humbly requested that the audience will indulge them with coming on to sing, and retiring when the song is finished.

The following curious extract from the same journal, of March 3, no doubt refers to this particular Haydn symphony:—

Music.—Some of the new music of Haydn, just now imported into this country, is, by the cognoscenti, preferred to all his former compositions, the stile, however, is entirely the same;—every coxcomb may know it;—out of all common places;—full of thought—abrupt.

At that concert the symphony was performed without the trumpet and drum parts, which were probably added by the composer when he conducted the work in London in 1792. This, as stated in the programme book of the Philharmonic Society's concert of May 9, 1870 (when the work was performed under the direction of the late Sir W. G. Cusins), was at a concert given at the Hanover Square Rooms on March 31, 1792, by Miss Corri, the harpist. In the Morning Chronicle of March 28 the programme is given—the first part opening with a "Grand Overture (MS.), by Gyrowetz," the second with "a Grand Overture (MS.), by Haydn." Symphonies in those days were often described as overtures, and vice versâ.

By this symphony there hangs a tale, and Haydn is the teller thereof. In his diary he relates that a clergyman, who was present, sank into a fit of deep melancholy, because he had dreamt the night before of the Andante, and imagined that it foretold his death. "To-day, the 25th of April," adds the composer, "I received from Mr. Barthelemon the news that this evangelical clergyman is dead." Haydn speaks of the Andante; but in the old score, published by Cianchettini and Speratti, the slow movement is marked Adagio. It consists of a charmingly melodious theme and a set of variations. The former, as given out by the strings, is subjoined:—



The centenary of the death of William Cowper was celebrated on the 25th ult. The poet showed his versatility by writing the humorous ballad "John Gilpin," and hymns of a deeply penitential nature. Amongst the latter which have become widely known by reason of their being constantly sung in churches, may be mentioned "Oh! for a closer walk with God," "God moves in a mysterious way," "Hark, my soul! it is the Lord," and "Jesus, where'er Thy people meet." The following interesting references to Cowper appeared in the "Musical Gossip" of the Athenæum, in its issue of the 21st ult.:—

William Cowper, ... had not much to say about music, and yet from certain remarks in his letters and lines in his poems we learn his fondness for it. In 1786, writing to his cousin, he refers to his late malady. He says:—

"I find writing, and especially poetry, my best remedy. Perhaps, had I understood music, I had never written verse, but had lived on fiddle strings instead. It is better, however, as it is."

In "The Task" there is further and stronger evidence of his love for the art. The poem was published a year after the great Handel commemoration at Westminster Abbey in 1784. Cowper was undoubtedly sincere in his religious opinions, though some of them certainly appear narrow-minded, as, for instance, his denunciation of oratorios. In "The Task" he speaks of the ten thousand who sit—

> "Patiently present at a sacred song,
> Commemoration-mad; content to hear
> (O wonderful effect of music's power!)
> Messiah's eulogy for Handel's sake."

But though the glorification of Handel by such means met with his strong disapproval, he thus speaks of the great composer:—

> "Remember Handel? Who that was not born
> Deaf as the dead to harmony, forgets,
> Or can, the more than Homer of his age?"

The comparison of Handel with Homer, the blind musician with the blind poet, has in it an appropriate touch of pathos.

The Committee of the Birmingham Musical Festival have decided to perform the revised version of the English text of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion at their forthcoming Festival. As some misconception appears to be rife concerning this new and improved version, we may state that it was prepared by the late Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, who bestowed reverent care upon a task that was not only most congenial to him, but one that he was fully competent to undertake. His guiding principle was to bring the work as closely as was at all practicable to the accepted standard text—that is to say, the edition of the German Bach Society. In an interesting preface to the new edition, dated "February, 1894," Dr. Troutbeck says: "The chorales, choruses, and solos have been newly and independently translated from the original German words, and the adaptation of the narrative of the Evangelist, a task rendered perhaps somewhat less difficult and hazardous by the aid of the Revised Version of the New Testament, has been carefully reconsidered, and re-arranged so as to preserve unaltered, as far as may be, the musical text of the original." In order to show how faithfully Dr. Troutbeck discharged his difficult task, we cannot do better than give the following recitative as a specimen—the version prepared for the old Bach Society nearly fifty years ago and that furnished by the late Precentor of Westminster. Our readers will enjoy making their own comparison; we will only add that the new version follows the German Bach Society's edition note for note. Whether the earlier English version is more faithful to Bach's intentions than the later will easily be discovered.

Mr. Bosville, the indefatigable conductor, financier, moving spirit, and general factotum of the Bridlington Musical Festival—announced to be held on the 26th ult., and therefore too late for notice in our present issue—is also his own programme annotator. As on previous occasions, there are some very enjoyable plums to be picked from Mr. Bosville's unconventional annotational trees. Here are a few. In regard to the opening work performed, Tschaïkowsky's "Marche Solennelle," Mr. Bosville says that it has been selected "as a suitable 'opening voluntary' to the Festival, simply to warm up the wind instruments and to delicately veil the preliminary writhings of a good-natured audience, which patiently endures hard chairs and scanty knee-room in the cause of local Art." This is rather hard upon the chairs and has a sort of inference that the audience is more or less needy. Someone has referred to Dr. Watts's hymns as "Dr. Watts's whims." Mr. Bosville has something of the same feeling towards certain hymn-tunes and anthems. He whimsically says: "One may safely say at once that sacred words sung to a succession of sounds do not of necessity form sacred music." True, and then he adds, mirabile dictu, "if it did we should have to consider certain Hymn-tunes and Anthems sacred music, though they appear to the careful observer to be neither sacred nor musical." Here is a little satirical gibe at the too imaginative imaginations of some programme annotators. The reference is to the "Incidental music to the 'Wasps' of Aristophanes," composed by Mr. T. Tertius Noble. Upon this work our genial annotator observes, without any sting in his remarks, that "The Overture represents the buzzing of wasps. With the spirit of a true artist the composer, at some personal risk, studied wasps' nests and arrived at the conclusion that wasps usually buzz on B natural and middle C." We must not cross swords with our Nestor, but B natural should naturally be the prerogative of "the little buzzy bee," not of the buzzing wasp.

"It is one of the first principles of comedy that the funny man should appear very sad and indigestible before any great attempt at sparkling humour," observes Mr. Bosville. After all then, dyspepsia is not without its drawbacks towards contributing to the humour of life, that is on the assumption that the "funny man" is humorous. We are told that "the music to the 'Wasps' is scored for flute, oboe, two clarinets, bassoon, two horns, trumpet, bass trombone, timpani, harp, and strings," which information is followed by the consoling remark that "Learned musicians who are in a mood for modes will doubtless detect them." Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8) furnishes Mr. Bosville with excellent food for reflection, and thus his remarks are plums of a very luscious kind. In reference to the last movement of Beethoven's frisky symphony, he says: "At the beginning of the Coda, the composer uses a passage identical with the working-out; then suddenly a gruff chuckle from the double basses snuffs out such a very commonplace proceeding! Once more the timid theme tries to get a hearing, but is again despatched with an explosive sniff of disgust from the basses." Again: "One more little jest is heard when the ponderous double basses sing the fragile second subject; the effect produced makes one think of a ballet of hippopotami!" Our last picking is from some biographical remarks on Berlioz. Here it is: "After repeated failures Berlioz, by playing down to the examiners, finally won the 'Prix de Rome' at the Paris Conservatoire." "Playing down to the examiners!" Is not this more in the nature of a candied date than a plum? But we must let it (Mr. Bosville's observation) pass, with the hope that he may continue to give many more annual Festivals, and, at the same time, to "play up" with those breezy programme annotations which he writes so well.

Another interesting Schubert autograph has turned up unexpectedly in Vienna—viz., the original of the composition entitled "Loda's Gespenst," forming part of the "Songs of Ossian" and which had hitherto been considered lost. In including the composition in the complete edition of Schubert's works, published by Breitkopf and Härtel, the editor was only able to obtain a manuscript copy made by the Abbé Stadler, the friend of Schubert. The autograph, which consists of sixteen closely-written pages, is being offered for sale by the firm of Gilhofen and Ranschburg, in Vienna. It is dated January 17, 1816, whereas it had hitherto been classed with the compositions of the master emanating from the early part of the year 1815.

An International Music Exhibition is announced to be held at the Crystal Palace, from June to September, to illustrate the progress and advance of musical art during the nineteenth century. It is proposed to divide the Exhibition into four groups—

1. Musical Instruments and Appliances constructed or in use during the last hundred years.
2. Music Engraving and Type Printing.
3. Loan Collections of Historic Musical Instruments and Appliances, and Pictures, Drawings, and Engravings of Musical Subjects.
4. Modern Oil and Water-Colour Paintings, Engravings, Drawings, and Photographs of Musical Subjects.

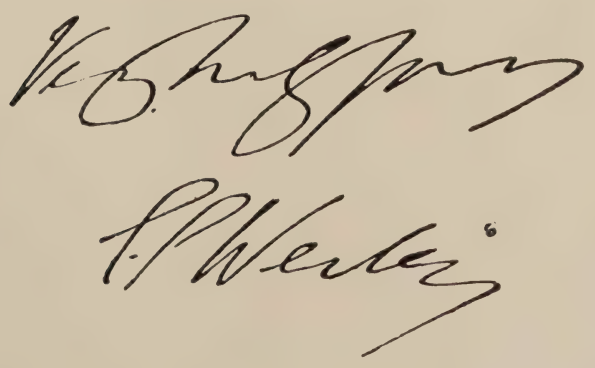
Choral competitions and historical concerts will be held, and demonstrations with ancient and modern instruments given during the Exhibition. It is also proposed to hold a Brass Band Festival and contest on Saturday, July 21. Sir Arthur Sullivan is the chairman of the Committee of Advice.

Not the least gratifying feature of the recent performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's trilogy, "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast," is the notice of the event which appeared in the Leipziger Tageblatt from the London correspondent of that journal. We give the criticism translated into our vernacular by a young English student now studying at the Conservatorium of Leipzig:—

London, March 24th.—Yesterday's concert of the Royal Choral Society brought English music-lovers the pleasant discovery that a new and very promising star had risen among them, in the young composer Coleridge-Taylor, who is only 25 years old. From Longfellow's Indian legend, Coleridge-Taylor has chosen three scenes—viz., "The Wedding-Feast," "The Death of Minnehaha," and the "Departure of Hiawatha," and has clothed them in the musical form of a cantata, under the title "Song of Hiawatha," which, rich in melody, and overflowing with life, is unusually captivating. The composer, who himself conducted, received a great ovation. Nor was the "Imperial" element—now always welcome—wanting to the occasion. The British audience applauded the more warmly, as they were honouring an Anglo-African composer, whose richly-coloured music conjured up the glories of the prairies of the Wild West of America.

A Congress for the discussion of matters musical is to be held in connection with the Paris Exhibition from June 14 to 18. The most important subjects which have been set down for discussion are (1) "The general employment of the Diapason normal," (2) "The unification of terms employed by composers," (3) "The regularisation of the metronomic indications," (4) "The utility of schools of conductors and the study of instrumentation," and (5) "The utility of the development of Musical Societies." All communications relating to the Congress are to be addressed to M. Baudouin La Londre, Secrétaire général de la Commission d'organisation, Rue Gounod, 11, Paris.

The Cologne Conservatory of Music will celebrate its first jubilee on the 10th inst. and four following days. The ceremonial opens with a "Festakt" on the forenoon of the 10th, followed in the evening by a concert organised by the present Professors of the Conservatory. The present students are to furnish a concert on the following day, and past students are to be represented by two concerts on the 12th and 13th. The Festival will be brought to a close by a convivial meeting in the Gürzenich. All old students are cordially invited to attend this interesting celebration.



Mr. William Pountney has certainly earned the distinction of being a veteran Festival chorus singer. He has sung as a bass in that capacity at every Birmingham Musical Festival (with the exception of 1849) since the year 1846; thus he has rendered more than half-a-century's service, good and true, to the cause of choral music in Birmingham. Moreover, he has just succeeded in getting "a first-class engagement for the approaching Festival"—not by favour, or by virtue of his long service, but after having been duly tested by Dr. Swinnerton Heap, the chorus-master. Congratulations to Mr. Pountney, who sang in the first performance of "Elijah," under the composer's conductorship. The veteran singer retains vivid recollections of Mendelssohn and the extraordinary enthusiasm which attended the production of his great oratorio, fifty-four years ago.

We much regret that, owing to a slip of the pen on the part of our Liverpool correspondent, an unfortunate error appeared on p. 263 in our last issue. Master Harold Batten, who is aged fifteen, and not twelve, as was stated in the Liverpool papers, played the solo part in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto at the Wirral Amateur Society's concert on March 22. There is no need to correct the statement in regard to the manner in which Master Batten discharged his difficult task. This may certainly be confirmed, with the addition that the young violinist reflected the greatest credit upon his teacher, Mr. Ernest Schiever, the conductor of the Society. We understand that the late Sir Charles Hallé, at his own house in Manchester, played the boy's accompaniments on two or three occasions, and that he (Sir Charles) anticipated a successful career for the youthful violinist. May that prognostication be abundantly realised.

Sir John Stainer sends us the following appreciation of the late Mr. Horace Buttery:—

> "Let me say a few words expressing my affectionate regard for the late Mr. Horace Buttery, and my personal gratitude to him for the valuable help he formerly rendered me for many years at St. Paul's. He was a loyal and enthusiastic member of the special choir from its first enrolment, twenty-seven years ago; and some of his well-trained chorister boys took part in all the great musical services in the Cathedral. His kindliness and amiability were as noticeable features in his character, as his love for church music and his untiring efforts to promote it."

"Stomoxys calcitrans" and "Heliophilus trivittatus" are not musical terms, but they are to be found in two hobby articles which Mr. Walter Wesché, an ardent disciple of the microscope, has contributed to the February issue of Knowledge and the March issue of Science Gossip. The titles of Mr. Wesché's erudite articles are "The Fly, syritta pipiens," and "The Ptilinum of Diptera." They are both illustrated, and show "the extraordinary and the apparently ingenious in Nature," of which, as Mr. Wesché truly adds, "there is no end."

Mr. Robert Newman announces that in order to add interest to the scheme of his London Musical Festival, the English and French orchestras will be heard separately, as well as together, and therefore the French novelties will be performed by the French orchestra and the English novelties by the English orchestra. The combined bands will, however, interpret the great works of the classic and romantic schools already announced in Mr. Newman's prospectus.

Señor Felipe Pedrell, the distinguished Spanish musical savant, is actively engaged upon the preparation of a complete edition of the works of the sixteenth century Spanish composer, T. L. da Vittoria. It will include, in eight volumes, Motets, Masses, a Magnificat, and other compositions for the church, the final volume comprising hitherto unpublished works. The edition will be issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig.

Sir Frederick Bridge is announced to give a course of three lectures, with musical illustrations, at the Royal Institution, on the 26th inst. and the 2nd and 9th prox., at 3 p.m. The subject of the Professor's discourses is "On the growth of chamber music, from Allegri's Symphonia (1586-1652) to Haydn's first quartet."

Mr. Sims Reeves has been granted a Civil List pension of £100 per annum in recognition of his eminence as a singer.

Dr. Henry Coward, chorus-master of the Sheffield Musical Festival, will contribute to our next issue an article on "The Training of a Chorus."

A performance of Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast" and "Death of Minnehaha" is announced to take place on the 6th inst., at Queen's Hall, under the auspices of the National Sunday League and conducted by Mr. Allen Gill. The programme will also include Edward German's Overture to "Richard the Third," Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha" Overture, the chorus "Challenge of Thor," from Elgar's "King Olaf," and other compositions by English composers.
